GOLDWYN Pictures will be released for our company's second year, beginning in September, under the Star Series plan. This announcement will no doubt occasion surprise among the country's exhibitors, for Goldwyn in its first year abided by the principle of collective selling—selling a year's production under a single contract—and made the biggest kind of success of this principle. But exhibitors, I feel sure, will welcome the policy of selling Star Series because of its greater flexibility and because this system is in perfect accord both with their needs and desires.

Previously we have told exhibitors of our doubled output of productions in our second year—of our expansion from twenty-six productions to an excess of fifty productions in twelve months; and we have been tremendously gratified by the favorable responses this announcement caused. For the coming season Goldwyn will offer: Geraldine Farrar, six productions; Rex Beach, six productions; Pauline Frederick, six productions; Mabel Normand, eight productions; Mae Marsh, eight productions; Madge Kennedy, eight productions; Tom Moore, eight productions.

Samuel Goldfish.

I am now able to tell exhibitors more than the mere number of the productions they will receive from Goldwyn; the titles are also made known here for the first time.

Miss Farrar's first three Goldwyn productions are "The Turn of the Wheel," by Tex Charwate; "The Hell Cat," by Willard Mack, and "The Pirate Woman," from the novel, "Three Palms Cay," by Captain F. A. Dingle, first published in Munsey's. In all of these stories she is again the modern emotional actress that her public desires her to be. We are not wasting her talents or beauty in costume stories of a past period.

Rex Beach's six stories are "Laughing Bill Hyde," "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Iron Trail," "The Net," "Going Some" and "The Silver Horde." In the first of these stories Willard Mack is co-operating with Mr. Beach in the preparation of the scenario and Reginald Barker is the director. To my mind, plus the great cast that will be chosen, this as closely approximates an all-star production as anything possibly could. All of his productions for the year are from his most popular stories.

"Poverty of Money" Is Pauline Frederick's First.

Pauline Frederick's first Goldwyn production will be "The Poverty of Money," an emotional drama from one of Willard Mack's well known plays.

Mabel Normand will be seen first in the coming season in a rollicking broad comedy, "Peck's Bad Girl," by Tex Charwate, which should bring joy to everyone.

Mae Marsh is completing her first production for the new year, a romantic emotional drama, "Hidden Fires," by J. Clarkson Miller. As I first said on the day we announced her as a Goldwyn star, she is the ablest young emotional actress on the screen.

Madge Kennedy, having won out immediately and gained tremendous popularity in her first year in pictures, will begin her new season in "The Kingdom of Youth," by Charles A. Logue, who wrote her other success, "The Service Star."

Tom Moore is launched as a star in "Just for To-night," also by Mr. Logue, a surprising and delightful picture directed by Charles Giblyn.

Each of the stars I have mentioned, with the exception of Miss Frederick, has completed his or her initial picture of the series for the coming season. Rex Beach's first production will be begun in a few days.

Geraldine Farrar to Open Goldwyn Season.

Our first release for the coming season will be Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," on September 1. This story was directed by Reginald Barker. Goldwyn surrounded this successful star with an all-star cast, including Herbert Rawlinson as her leading man; Violet Heming in an important role and Hassard Short and Percy Marmont in other important roles. It is a fitting picture with which to inaugurate a new season and will start all Goldwyn customers off right for a new year.

Not because I am expected to say this, but because I believe and mean every word of it, I feel that Goldwyn for the coming season has the most perfectly balanced group of stars and productions in the motion picture industry. We have grown to our present position from two causes other than our stars and production. These causes are remarkable organization of loyal, hard-working, enthusiastic men and women and the splendid support of the exhibitors of the country.

We owe a great deal to the exhibitors who have made us welcome. We felt that another quality organization was needed in this industry, and exhibitor patronage has proved that we correctly sensed an actual requirement. My hope and belief is that we will do more for exhibitors than ever before; that we will maintain with them the same pleasant and amicable relations that were established in our first year. I am proud of the announcements that we are enabled to make elsewhere in this publication. We have planned on sound and safe lines. We have a clean organization with a fine record behind it and a better record ahead of it. We are going to grow bigger still. Goldwyn has been erected and made during the most trying period in the world's history. Having accomplished what we have under adverse conditions, it is fair to predict for Goldwyn a still bigger and more important role in this industry in the period of fair weather that lies ahead. SAMUEL GOLDFISH.

Warren Describes Goldwyn Selling Policy

Company Vice President Says Organization Is a Pioneer of the New Day of Motion Picture Distribution.

By F. B. Warren,

Vice-President Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is more than a selling mechanism; it is the pioneer of the new day in the distribution of motion pictures. It marks the day of the merchant entering upon the new duties of picture selling.

It is a remarkable organization in any business that can say truthfully at the end of its first year's existence that it has accomplished the things it set out to do.

Our distribution a year ago intended—

To girdle the globe and be actively releasing our Goldwyn Pictures everywhere before the end of twelve months. We accomplisehd this in six months.

To win the respect and good will of the country's exhibitors. We did this.

To "play fair" with our actual and prospective patronage. We did this.

To rent our goods without haggling and bargaining; to handle pictures as automobile manufacturers handle cars, as steel men handle their product; to be just in our price schedules but to win respect by abiding by our prices. We have done all of these things in Goldwyn.

It is hardly necessary to restate our initial intentions, for exhibitors everywhere know that we have established ourselves by building on these solid foundations.

Goldwyn for a year has operated nineteen offices in as many cities of the United States and to-day we are opening our twentieth office in New Orleans. Our other offices are in Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle and Washington, D. C.

In Canada Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., has six offices, and we are actively operating in England, Australia, New Zealand, Scandinavia, South Africa, Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, Porto Rico, San Domingo, Venezuela, Mexico, Central America, Italy, Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements, Egypt, India, Burmah, Ceylon, Japan, China and the Philippines. We are now opening, in addition, France, Portugal and Spain through our export department.

Out in the field we have sought to find a new kind of men for the motion picture business—men chosen from other big industries instead of just film-sellers who have grown up with the picture industry knowing only its methods and little or nothing about the successful methods of other businesses. We have kept our organization at the top small and compact. We reward our successful men out in the field. We do not "police" them to make them unhappy. We try to work under the Charles A. Dana policy of "Use Your Own Judgment." We would rather have our managers and salesmen develop their own initiative than to have to supply it from New York.

Organization Believes in Itself.

We are an enthusiastic organization believing in our product and ourselves. At the start of our selling career we made it a rule not to lie or to deceive each other. We hold our men who make occasional mistakes, but we drop those who make mistakes and try to cover them up. We make office managers out of our most successful salesmen, and there are plenty of other bigger openings for men who show real selling ability. We do not destroy the incentive of our men by bringing in highly-paid outsiders to get the bigger positions above them. We have man power because our men and ourselves have made it.

When the outsider wonders how Goldwyn has created such a powerful selling mechanism he is not in possession of this information, but we are glad to have our exhibitors know these things about us.

We operate under the mercantile slogans of "The exhibitor be pleased" and "The customer is nearly always right." This latter isn't always true, but you would be surprised to know how we benefit in good will by usually proceeding on this basis. One of the popular misconceptions of the industry is that the selling end is "a terrible business." Goldwyn does not feel that way—quite the contrary. It is a fine business and we have found thousands of exhibitors with money to spend just hungry for an organization to come along and play square with them; to sell them straight across the counter instead of trying to sell by chicannery and cunning.

The operation of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is in the hands of its officers: President, Samuel Goldfish; vice presidents, Alfred Weiss, F. B. Warren and Harold Bolster. Each Goldwyn executive keeps in as close personal contact with the nation's exhibitors as active pairs of feet and ample railroad mileage will permit.

We have found that it pays to sell people by looking them in the eye.

What Goldwyn is Giving In Service

In Its Preparation of Exhibitor Advertising Material It Takes Large Account of Varying Individual Requirements.

THE motion picture industry is a business of queer infatuation and self-delusions. One of the infatuations and self-deceptions of the moment is to be found in so-called service departments for the preparation of promotion aids for the exhibitors of the country. A year ago, when Goldwyn was formed, the determination was reached to create an organization within an organization that would do a great deal without saying anything about it.

Today the service department of Goldwyn is in possession of thousands of cards containing written notations from exhibitors over their sigatures saying: "Many thanks for this. * * * You helped me make a bigger success of my last picture than I could have made alone." "This material is great. * * * I never get anything like it elsewhere." "When you sent your representative to my town he went out and did with my local people the things I ought to have done for myself, but which I hadn't the time to do. I cleaned up with the picture." "Have you ever lived in my town? You even gave me the names and addresses of the women and the organizations that jumped in and helped me make a sensational success with 'Joan of Plattsburg.'"

Use of the Word Publicity Is Shunned.

What in most other companies is loosely called the publicity department does not exist at all in Goldwyn. Use of the word publicity is shunned. There is an editorial office for the preparation of magazine and newspaper matter; press sheets and the written aids that are a part of showmanship; there is a sub-division of service equipped to give individual exhibitors personal service which does not mean the mere mailing to them of previously syndicated publicity matter. These two departments are a part of the sales organization. No man in these departments of Goldwyn has ever worked in the publicity department of any other motion picture organization. They have not been enslaved by the routine and methods which prevail in the industry. They have a fresh viewpoint—the exhibitors' viewpoint instead of the viewpoint of the company itself.

Nothing in the form of written matter that does not ultimately result in the sale of a ticket at the box-office of a theater is considered as possessing value by these men. Conclusive proof of the success of such an organization is found in the hearty indorsements of this branch of the Goldwyn organization.

Every Goldwyn manager and salesman in all of the offices of the company has so thoroughly absorbed the service methods of Goldwyn that its efficiency is multiplied by twenty, this representing the branch locations of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

During the coming season this work will be under the direction of Hunt Stromberg and Dwight S. Perrin, the latter the head of the Goldwyn editorial offices and in the brief period of a year the personal friend of hundreds of exhibitors from all sections of the country. Mr. Stromberg has been one of the owners of the Stromberg Company, advertising agents of St. Louis, and is brought into the organization coincident with this announcement because of the doubled output of productions to be made by Goldwyn in the coming season and to double the efficiency of the department. There are in this branch of the organization sub-divisions that deal separately with the daily newspapers, the magazines, the motion picture trade press and foreign publications in all lands. Goldwyn handles its own promotion matter in foreign countries where its pictures are distributed as an additional service for its foreign alliances.

Will Keep Months Ahead in Its Accessories.

Discounting well in advance a busy winter season, Goldwyn hereafter will keep months ahead in its accessories, laying them down on the shelves of all branches from one to three months in advance of each release. This will give its offices the opportunity to ship to customers ahead of playing time and reduce disappointments through broken schedules that come during the winter months.

Goldwyn day after day and month after month lays emphasis upon its preparation of newspaper advertising material for the exhibitor. It not only will prepare but actually does prepare the advertising matter for its exhibitors in Missoula or Vancouver, in Fresno or Atlanta, the volume of this individualized service being greater than any outsider can imagine. This gets away from syndicated advertising—the kind that takes no account of different tastes in widely separated sections, or of the difference in the prevailing methods of typographical display as between the newspapers of one section of the country and another.

Going further than this, Goldwyn often introduces the exhibitor in Butte to an expert on one of his local Butte newspapers—a man who will bring a powerful selling conception to the aid of the exhibitor. Laying down on the exhibitor's desk a volume of available material does not end the Goldwyn interest. It is intensified at that point. Seeing that he uses it well; seeing that the local newspaper with which he spends his money helps him get the best values for his money—those are the more extended developments of Goldwyn service.

No exhibitor objects to spending money if he reaps a profit on his expenditure. Goldwyn's idea of service is to help him make a "good buy." Intrinsically when he purchases space in his local paper or papers he is making a good purchase, but virtually every newspaper of any consequence in the country at this time has likewise capitulated to "service." They can give more than the space that paid advertising occupies. Amusements if properly written provide news that the editor's readers desire. The publisher's business office, being in contact with every other business in the town or city, can also link up his amusement advertisers with his other mercantile advertisers. He can get them window displays, book displays, pictorial displays that the exhibitor in most cases would have no chance of obtaining. It is in these directions that Goldwyn has proved of such great benefit to its customers. In other words, Goldwyn has made its service an actuality instead of a theory.

Goldwyn Exchanges Open to Good Pictures

Company Early Decided to Place Its Distribution Facilities at Disposal of Independents, with Satisfactory Results.

SHORTLY after the release of the first Goldwyn picture last September the Goldwyn organization decided to place its distribution facilities at the disposal of any independent producer of worthy pictures in America. Goldwyn felt then, as it feels now, that many persons would be glad to make good pictures if they felt that there was a good marketing organization in existence through which they could be released.

At that moment of its oranization the so-called "state rights" market was shot to pieces, and men had reached the point where they hesitated about production investments because, even with good productions, they were unable to anticipate the revenues to be obtained.

The first independent producers to avail themselves of the Goldwyn distribution were Ira M. Lowry and associates of Philadelphia, makers of "For the Freedom of the World," a patriotic picture of great appeal and drawing power. This production, after a skilled but quick campaign of exploitation, was released last October and has played in more than 4,000 theaters in the United States, with an additional large percentage of repeat playing dates. Taking its chances with weather and circumstances, "For the Freedom of the World" has established the unsual record of scoring a huge success for every exhibitor who has ever booked it. It deservedly takes rank as one of the big special release successes of the past few years.

Next Goldwyn arranged with the late Henry J. Brock for the distribution through its offices of Hall Caine's great story, "The Manx Man," which has just completed a successful New York run at the Criterion theater. This production has been most successful for exhibitors and has done a splendid business for its owners by making use of the Goldwyn facilities.

Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," released in the late spring of the present year, has rapidly duplicated the huge volume of business with and for exhibitors that previous Rex Beach productions have done; and at this moment, on the edge of summer, is doing week by week an increasing volume of business in all twenty of the Goldwyn distributing offices in the United States. So successful has been the Goldwyn distribution of this popular author's productions that he has in the coming season arranged to make six productions within the period of a year. These will be sold under the new Goldwyn star series policy.

Capitol Comedies Are Getting Along.

No star has ever been more fortunate in selecting the date of his entry into motion pictures than "Smiling Bill" Parsons, whose Capitol Comedies are released exclusively through Goldwyn. Mr. Parsons' friends literally drove him into being a comedian. He was a successful business man and producer of pictures who had never given a thought to becoming an actor-funmaker. But suddenly he made two trial pictures which forecast for him instant success on the screen. The result of the experiment is twenty-six Capitol Comedies a year, one every second Monday. Capitol Comedies are playing in all of the big first-run houses in the principal cities of America and have gained a tremendous volume of business in the smaller theaters. To add to Mr. Parsons' good luck, other screen comedies were discontinued about the time he made his first release and exhibitors everywhere welcomed him as the successor of their previous fun-makers.

Three special Selexart productions were taken on by the Goldwyn organization for distribution a few months ago, and they are rapidly gaining headway in sales over the summer, and unquestionably will duplicate the sales successes of other productions handled under the Goldwyn auspices.

For the coming season Goldwyn has enlarged the man-power of its sales organization and opened, besides, a twentieth branch office, New Orleans being the city selected for this development. All the facilities of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation are available to the owners and makers of any well-produced picture. Behind this actual sales service these independent producers can avail themselves of the usual publicity and sales exploitation resources of Goldwyn.

While no announcement is made now, Goldwyn will offer the exhibitors of the country additional special productions of great value and importance during the coming season.

Teamwork is the Aim of Goldwyn Personnel

At the Fort Lee Studios Workers Major and Minor Are Made to Feel Their Responsibility for the Success of Completed Product.

IN co-ordination of effort lies the secret of success in the management of any enterprise enlisting the services of many people. This is especially true of the Goldwyn studios, where efficiency and harmony are allied with genuine artistic achievement. It is accomplished by means of a system very nearly perfect, and which bids fair to bring about ever better results with the beginning of Goldwyn's second year as a producing organization.

Manned and operated by men of ideals and achievements, the studio organization stands as an example of what may be done when all the forces concerned in the creation of motion pictures unite in upholding a definite standard.

At its Fort Lee plant, where all the productions are now made, the producing and technical departments are distinctively Goldwyn in personnel; men selected because their ideals and accomplisments represent the things Goldwyn desires for permanent association with its name.

Every worker is conscious of his intimate relation to the finished product, and when a production is completed everyone in the studio is made to feel that his endeavors have made possible whatever success attends the picture's reception by the public. The forces entering into a production are, of course, varied and the departments controlling them are managed by executives recognized as specialists.

The management of the Goldwyn studios is in the hands —and head—of Abraham Lehr, whose able generalship embraces every department, and whose presence at every conference is a necessary help to his colleagues, no less than his handling of the hundred and one questions which arise daily in the big studio.

His keen sense of human values forms a happy combination with his training in business efficiency, thereby enabling Mr. Lehr to achieve practical results with no sacrifice of the amenities. His work is closely related to that of Willard Mack, officially editorial director of Goldwyn, but in reality much more than the title implies.

To Mr. Mack falls the responsibility of selecting the stories intended for Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Tom Moore and Mabel Normand, after which the various department heads confer jointly with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, for final decision. Mr. Mack is concerned with every stage of production, and his work does not cease until a Goldwyn picture is released.

His auxiliary is the scenario department, of which H. R. Durant is editor. His functions include the supervision of all the work connected with receiving books, plays and stories submitted to Goldwyn as well as arranging for those purchased, together with the preparation of continuities, of which three are made by as many writers for each scenario.

Ballin's Work a Large Factor.

It has been said often that the striking note in Goldwyn pictures has been contributed by Hugo Ballin, the distinguished art director. His work begins with the first conference with the other department heads when a story is under discussion. For every scene he makes a separate sketch, employing a color scale of photographic values originated by himself. Directly under him are two buyers, or studio shoppers, who purchase everything required for the settings, while Edward Wortham, stage manager, superintends the work of his corps of assistants in building the scenes.

In direct contact with this department is Charles De Soria, electrical expert, and his fifteen aids. Every problem of lighting, as well as the devising of special effects as they are demanded from time to time, is handled by this very necessary department of Goldwyn production.

As director of photography, Percy Hilburn advises the cinematographers in regard to any difficulty which may come up during the course of a production and inspects the film as it comes from the laboratory. The still photograph department from which emanate the volume of scenes from the various productions, as well as special publicity photographs, is in charge of C. H. Detrick.

The inspection of the finished negative is continued by Emmett Flynn and Robert Kern, film editors, who have in mind not only the photographic quality to be maintained, but the continuity of the story. The work of Paul Bern, cutter of the negative, then follows, with every emphasis laid on the narrative, on preserving the dramatic unities and bringing out the most appealing moments of the star. The titling comes next, in which Willard Mack's acute sense of dramatic values and individual sense of humor play a large part.

Other departments are the wardrobe room, the restaurant and, what is of paramount importance to the players who come and go, the treasury. Henry Eckman is the cashier and the details of transportation are looked after by Joseph Cohen.

E. K. Lincoln in New War Picture

DEVOTEES of the screen who have watched the work of E. K. Lincoln in Goldwyn's "For the Freedom of the World," and saw his great impersonation of the artist in "The Beloved Traitor," a Mae Marsh Goldwyn production, will soon have the opportunity of seeing him in an especially timely picture when "Lafayette, We Come!" an elaborate patriotic production now being made by the Leonce Perret Productions is released. In this picture, Mr. Lincoln plays the part of a young American army officer in France, and enacts many a thrill.

E. K. Lincoln.

The role is one which carries with it unusual requirements and, realizing this, the producers carefully scanned the field with a desire to obtain the one star who was best fitted to portray the heroic young American. E. K. Lincoln was finally selected as the personification of all the producers desired. He was then in California. The telegraphic wires were kept hot for a few days until the arrangements were concluded whereby he was to return to New York at once to take part in this film, in which he will be ably assisted by talented Dolores Cassinelli, who is co-starred with him.

Mr. Lincoln confesses that he has never felt a keener interest in his work than he has in the making of this picture. There was something of a patriotic nature in the work that appealed to him, and made him feel that in his work he was doing his country a real service. With every picture Mr. Lincoln has added materially to his already large number of followers. There are several reasons why he has achieved and permaenntly retained such popularity. Of course, he has made friends on the merit of his acting ability alone, but his democratic spirit is well known, and perhaps more than one might think this has to do with the love the photoplay world bears for him. Lincoln is typically American, but there is nothing affected about him. He loves the big outdoors and all its invigorating sports. That is why he is so rugged and every inch a man.

KANE RUNS DOWN TO WASHINGTON.

General manager Arthur S. Kane of the Select Pictures Corporation started on July 3 for a short motor trip. His first objective was Philadelphia, where the Select executive was in conference with Max Milder, manager of Select's exchange in that city. After a couple of days spent in smoothing out the problems of the Philadelphia territory Mr. Kane pointed his motor southward and drove to Washington, where a brief visit was paid to Manager V. P. Whitaker.

EDWARD L. WHITE ANSWERS CALL.

Another star was added to the service flag at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood when Edward L. White, assistant cameraman, responded to the call to the colors in the draft of June 24. It is expected White will be sent to Camp Kearney, at Linda Vista, near San Diego. He left with the best wishes of everybody at the studios, together with a wrist watch and a substantial sum of money, the gift of studio employees. White is the fifth to go from the mechanical force at the Hollywood studios.

Frank Mills, Metro Leading Man

FRANK MILLS, whom Metro has engaged as Edith Storey's leading man, has had a most successful career. He was born in Kalamazoo, Mich., and educated at the University of Michigan. He began his stage career with the Lyceum Theater Stock Company, and from that beginning later held many successful engagements in the productions of Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Daniel Frohman, Klaw & Erlanger, Lee Shubert, William A. Brady, and Henry B. Harris.

Frank Mills.

In London, where he remained for five years, he was equally successful. He played successively with Sir Herbert Tree, Cyril Maude, Patrick Campbell, Lewis Waller, Lena Ashwell, and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson. His Athos to Sir Herbert Tree's D'Artagnan in "The Three Musketeers," which ran in London for a year, was a triumph. On this side of the water he was notable in his support, as leading man, with Olga Nethersole, Elsie Ferguson, Mary Mannering, and Mrs. Fiske.

Mr. Mills was a member of the company of "A Girl of To-day," the last production made under the personal management of Charles Frohman. The New York Motion Picture Company provided Mr. Mills with his screen debut in "The Golden Claw," in which he was starred. This was followed by "The Edge of the Abyss" and "The Moral Fabric." For the Vitagraph he played in "The Dollar and the Law"; for the World "Who is Sylvia?" and "A House of Cards" for the United States Amusement Corporation; he played a prominent role with Mary Pickford in a Famous Players film, and also in "The House of Mirrors" and "The Flower of Faith."

With Metro, where he is one of its best known and most popular actors, his record of screen achievements includes prominent roles in "The Wheel of the Law" "The Eternal Mother," "A Sleeping Memory," "Red Horse Hill," "Capital Punishment," with Emily Stevens and directed by George D. Baker, and now as leading man with Edith Storey in her latest Metro feature, as yet unnamed.

EDWARD LAWRENCE ASSISTANT METRO DIRECTOR.

Metro has appointed Edward Lawrence as assistant to Herbert Blaché in directing Edith Storey's picture, as yet unnamed. Mr. Lawrence, who is a New Yorker, began his professional career as a vaudeville singer. Later he sought the legitimate stage. In the "Three Twins" Mr. Lawrence was stage director as well as actor; in fact, he bears the distinctive record of fifteen years as a stage director.

His screen debut was as an actor, however, with Edison, remaining there ten years, during the latter part of which he was studio manager. With Griffith he was at the Biograph as a principal in many of the former's well-known successes and also his assistant. He was the Hercules of "Intolerance."

STRAND COMEDY RAISES MONEY FOR "SMOKES."

Excellent results have been achieved through the recent tie-up between "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" and the one-reel Strand comedy, "My Lady Nicotine," released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. This production, which deals with the sending of "smokes" to the American soldiers now fighting in France, has been working industriously for the fund.

The organization has been responsible for the shipment of 850,000 kits of smokes to our soldiers in the trenches and now has in the treasury $236,000, the result of contributions received from the loyal in all parts of the country.

Screen Telegram Comes to New York

Mutual's News Reel Will be Published from 1600 Broadway Under Editorship of Terry Ramsaye.

JAMES M. SHELDON, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces that Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice a week news reel, will be published hereafter from New York under the managing editorship of Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity. Mr. Ramsaye has opened editorial offices adjoining the Mutual exchange at 1600 Broadway and has surrounded himself with an able staff. The first release from New York was Screen Telegram No. 36.

Associated with Mr. Ramsaye in the publication of the Mutual news reel will be Donn McIlvaine, who has been on the editorial staff of Screen Telegram since its inception. He will be assistant editor. W. E. Harrison is New York cameraman, Tracey Mathewson wll cover outside assignments from New York, and Harold P. Brown will be Chicago cameraman.

Mr. Harrison is known as a New York newspaper photographer, having worked with the camera for most of the New York daily newspapers and having been associated with motion picture photography for several years as a study and news photographer. Mr. Mathewson has a name as a capable and daring cameraman. He served with General Pershing in Mexico and one of his first assignments was a trip to national army training camps. Ray L. Hall, who has been called to an important post with the division of films of the Committee on Public Information, has been assisting in the organization of the New York headquarters of Screen Telegram.

"New York has become, under war conditions the world's most important news center," commented Mr. Sheldon in announcing the change of Screen Telegram editorial offices to New York. "By maintaining a staff for special service to Western territories in Chicago, we feel that we can serve all of the theaters of the country more efficiently from New York. Mutual's efficient distribution methods make it possible to edit our reel in New York and reach the theaters of the West as quickly as though the reel were edited in Chicago.

"By virtue of its arrangement with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, Screen Telegram will continue to present United States official war pictures showing on military and political activities abroad.

"Mr. Ramsaye has been selected to supervise the news weekly because of his particular training and talent in that direction. He is a newspaperman of long experience and his work as director of publicity of the Mutual has given him an added insight into the commercial necessities of motion picture exhibition. He has some very clearly defined ideas on the subject of news pictures which he will put into Screen Telegram."

Mutual Brings Advertising Department to New York.

The publicity and advertising departments of the Mutual Film Corporation have moved into quarters adjoining the New York exchange at 1600 Broadway. The rest of the executive offices remain at 220 South State street, Chicago, where Mutual moved two years ago. The change was upon orders of James M. Sheldon, the new president of Mutual, who decided that Mutual should have an executive office in New York.

Mr. Ramsaye has been in New York for several weeks in connection with his new duties and he was joined last week by Colvin W. Brown, advertising manager of the Mutual, and Arthur James Pegler, special publicity writer. Mr. Brown is a western newspaper man who has been associated with Mr. Ramsaye in the publicity department of Mutual for nearly two years. He was appointed advertising manager some months ago. Mr. Pegler is a writer of national reputation who has for years been a star reporter on New York, Chicago and Minneapolis newspapers. He has been on Mr. Ramsaye's staff since the removal of the Mutual executive offices to Chicago. Joseph O'Sullivan, director of music service for Mutual, remains in Chicago where he will cue Mutual productions as in the past.

Parsons Makes Speech to Strand Audience

Tells Easterners Among Other Things How He Pushed Thrift Stamps on Western Porters.

MUCH to their amusement, audibly expressed, "Smiling Bill" Parsons, star in the New Capitol Comedies, told several thousand persons at the Strand Theater, New York, Sunday, June 30, how he happened to give up writing life insurance to become a funny man of the screen.

Parsons, who is here from California with his leading woman, Billie Rhodes, to make a couple of comedies with the Manhattan atmosphere that even a West Coast studio cannot simulate, was the guest of Managing Director Harold Edel of the Strand. He occupied a box and evidently had not been expecting to speak, for when a spotlight was thrown on him and an urbane announcer came out on the stage to say that Bill would say a few words to the audience the comedian appeared taken by surprise.

"Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking"—he began.

That was enough for one laugh, and it was a full minute before the comedian could resume.

"Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking," he reiterated, "I didn't study elocution at school for nothing. I've wanted for years to catch an audience where I could make a speech to them with the knowledge that they couldn't get up and walk out without missing something better to come later. I need not remind you here that the next number on the program is 'Dad's Knockout,' starring me."

"Smiling Bill's" bald head bobbed and gleamed in the spotlight as thousands in the darkened house roared their approval of this deft bit of humorous advertising. Then the comedian turned for a moment from funny business to say a word for the Thrift Stamp campaign. He recalled that he had originated on the Pacific Coast the scheme for giving tips in the little green war coupons, and observed that porters and other recipients of the public bounty in his section of the country already had become reconciled to having to save what they used to spend.

It is probable Parsons and his company will work in the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee while they are here.

King Baggot to Play for Metro

Popular Actor Will Be Seen Opposite Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm."

KING BAGGOT has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm," which is to be directed by Harry L. Franklin. Mr. Baggot was the director's first selection in making up Miss Stevens' support. Actual work on the production will be started immediately. Finis Fox and Peter T. Volkman will be Mr. Franklin's assistants.

This will be Mr. Baggot's initial picture for Metro, and the character of Kildare will afford this screen favorite one of the best opportunities in his career. King Baggot is a native of St. Louis. He began his stage career in stock in his home city and later in Chicago, after which he played road engagements in "Salomy Jane," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "The Bishop's Carriage." His screen career began with the Imp, from which he joined the Universal. Among his best known pictures are "Absinthe," "The Man from Nowhere," "The Silent Stranger," "The Captain of the Typhoon" and the "Boontown Affair." Mr. Baggot was the founder of the Screen Club, and is also a prominent member of the Lambs.

Mr. Baggot's most recent appearance before the camera was in "The Eagle's Eye," an expose of the intrigue and machinations of the German spy system in this country prior to and during the present world war, and in which he played no less a role than that of the great detective himself—Chief W. J. Flynn, former head of the United States Secret Service.

The new affiliation should be a pleasant and a profitable one for both parties.

SAILORS SEND THANKS TO ADOLPH ZUKOR.

In the large mass of correspondence which daily reaches his desk Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, received a letter the other day which he prizes highly and with good reason. When the suggestion was made some time ago that the men on Uncle Sam's fighting ships and transports would appreciate the loans of motion picture films for their entertainment Mr. Zukor was among the first to respond, with the result that hundreds of thousands of soldiers and sailors have been provided with Paramount and Artcraft features and shorter films, chiefly comedies, while on their way either to or from the shores of France. The letter in question was received from Commander Robert Henderson, U. S. N., in charge of one of the big American transports.

"With the returning of the reels you so kindly loaned us I wish to thank you for your most patriotic and truly helpful act," wrote the commander.

Edward Earl

President Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

IT is a fortunate man," he said, "who knows where he fits. Myself, I couldn't make a speech on a public platform to save my life; and." Here the interviewer interrupted with: "Yes, but you are possessed of a very broad and extensive business experience and your very remarkable executive ability enables you to direct affairs." To which may be added that, after all, nothing speaks so potently as character. And there you are.

Edward Earl.

A "close up" of Mr. Earl readily explains why he has been able within a few short years to write his name so indelibly on the history of the machine manufacturing branch of the motion picture industry. He believes in organization. He is not an autocrat and does not claim to know it all. Thus he has at the heads of his various departments trusted, capable men to whom he outlines a policy, furnishing them with all necessary tools and ammunition and delegating to them the proper authority necessary for the discharge of their duties.

In a business where there is so much of bluff and bluster and the "side" of the nouveau riche, it is refreshing to meet a man who at all times typifies democracy.

When you enter the busy plant at 90 Gold street and ask for the "chief," you are not held up by an argus-eyed office boy and made to tell the story of your life. If you have a card it is sent in; if not, your name; and usually Mr. Earl comes out to extend a personal greeting. Once in his private office, you are made to realize that you are talking to a man who believes you to be his equal, no matter what your station, so that you be honest. Edward Earl is an apostle of the square deal.

He enjoys a good story and likes to tell one. Ask him how he started in life and he will tell you that he had no opportunities at all but began as a bare-footed boy.

As a matter of fact he began life with about the usual opportunities of the average American boy. His ancestry is American on both sides for many generations and the patriotic pulse beats strong with him.

He was born in Elizabeth, New Jersey, less than fifty years ago, and was educated in the public schools there. When about seventeen years of age he struck out for himself and entered the employ of one of the prominent banks of New York. Twenty-one years later he became its president.

Mr. Earl's rise has been meteoric and he has carried many a man with him. He became associated with the Nicholas Power Company as treasurer in 1908, and was elected president in 1917.

He has many business irons in the fire, but he applies himself very closely to the affairs of the Nicholas Power Company.

This in brief is a sketch of a man who believes in service and in serving. He is a splendid leader because he inspires his men with confidence—and something more. And the moral fibre is pronounced in him. A case in point:

Once his cashier came to him greatly worried because his cash was one hundred dollars short. "Good," said Mr. Earl. "I'm glad to know it." "But," said the cashier, "you don't understand, Mr. Earl, my cash is short one hundred dollars; how can you be glad?" "I'm glad," replied Mr. Earl, "because you had the moral courage to come and tell me; go on home and forget it; you'll find it all right;" and he did.

If one were to seek a reason for the success of Edward Earl one need go no farther than to quote the man.

"Have confidence in yourself, but be sure to give the other fellow plenty of reason for sharing your confidence. In getting along in life, push is much better than pull."

It is this characteristic that has put Edward Earl where he is today, and has made it possible for him to command men with credit. By all with whom he comes in contact he is respected and trusted; and by those whom he knows well he is liked because he is a likable man.

"Dick" Edmondson Due Here This Week

European Representative of Goldwyn Coming to New York To Confer on Company Business.

R. S. EDMONDSON, European representative of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and one of the best known motion picture men in Great Britain, is due to arrive in New York this week for his annual conference with Samuel Goldfish and the Goldwyn executives.

Goldwyn, being organized and its distribution being perfected in the United Kingdom, will, in its second season, have twice as many productions for distribution abroad as it had in its first twelve months. It was therefore deemed expedient, in spite of the difficulties of war-time travel, to have its principal foreign representative come over for a home office conference.

The Stoll Film Company, bearing the name of Oswald Stoll, a big amusement magnate, and under the managing direction of Jeffrey Bernerd, is the British distributor of Goldwyn Pictures through an arrangement made by Mr. Edmondson. Trade showings of Goldwyn Pictures have been held in England and much enthusiasm was created for the Goldwyn product. The first release in England, through the decision of Messrs. Stoll and Bernerd, is Mary Garden in "Thais," to be followed by Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg" and Made Kennedy in "The Service Star."

"No productions brought into Great Britain in years have received such a gratifying welcome as the Goldwyn Pictures," writes Mr. Edmondson on the eve of his departure. "Their first showing followed a campaign of introduction conducted from the home offices of Goldwyn in the principal trade journals of the empire. This has been pronounced to be the most distinctive campaign ever made to challenge the attention of British film-renters. It departed from the customary methods of cinema exploitation and was pitched to win English liking from the day of the first announcement. The campaign was invested with a dignity and tone that the productions themselves lacked upon their arrival here."

Submarines Have Sunk No Fox Films

All Foreign Exchanges Report They Have Received Their Consignments in Good Time.

THE first anniversary of the landing of American troops in France reminded the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation that despite all the perils of ocean traffic across the Atlantic not a single Fox film has yet fallen prey to the German marauders of the deep. Exchanges in England, Spain and South America all have reported that their shipments have arrived on time and in good condition.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced by the Fox foreign department in getting its films shipped promptly, but the department is taking every precaution to keep Fox branches all over the world far enough in advance in their shipments to take care of any emergency.

The foreign department of the Fox corporation, by the way, recently was obliged to enlarge its office space at 130 West Forty-sixth street. The department now has practically an entire floor, the executive offices leading off from a beautifully furnished reception room.

This enlargement has been made compulsory by the great increase in the corporation's trade abroad. In addition to the flourishing trade already established in Africa, Australia and various countries of Europe, special drives are now under way in South America and the Far East.

LOUNGE LIZARDS GET CHANCE TO WORK.

The Fort Lee Ferry, which runs from New York to Fort Lee, certainly paid dividends on the crowds it carried last Monday morning when the work or fight law went into effect. Having heard that motion pictures were considered by the authorities essential industries a large portion of the lounge lizards and other idlers of New York City did a "hot step" for the World studio seeking jobs. It happened that a mob scene was needed for "The Road to France," so it turned out that it was an ill wind that blows no good.

Goldwyn Holds Conference on Wire

Home Office Hooks Up with Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle—Long Trip Avoided.

GOLDWYN'S series of zone conventions with its branch managers and salesmen, held last week in New York, Chicago and Cleveland, was brought to a novel close July 1 by a cross-continent telephone conference between the home office and four branch managers in the far west and on the Pacific Coast. A Goldwyn executive in New York spoke the company's selling message for the year beginning in September into a telephone connected with the offices in Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle and the branch managers in those cities listened simultaneously by means of a "looped" wire.

After the selling policy for the year had been outlined over the wire, each of the managers asked questions and for nearly an hour a joint discussion was carried on. Sometimes the home office executive talked, sometimes one manager talked to another, while the others and home office man listened. In the brief time consumed the viewpoint of each was expressed as thoroughly as though the participants in the unique conference had been seated about a table in a central office in the territory—San Francisco, say.

It was Goldwyn's intention to have a San Francisco conference, to be attended by the West Coast managers, but pressure of work made it impossible for the New York executive to leave his desk long enough to make the journey across country. The plan for the telephone convention was outlined by letter and wire to the managers involved, and their enthusiastically expressed approval was immediately followed by putting the scheme into effect.

Despite the multiple connections, practically no trouble was experienced. C. F. Hill, the Seattle manager, said he heard as plainly as could be, and Ben Fish, in Los Angeles; G. C. Parsons, in San Francisco, and W. S. Rand, in Denver, each echoed his approval.

The expense incurred was, of course, considerable, but negligible compared to the expenditure that would have been necessary had the home office executive had to go to the coast and had the other managers to travel from their offices to San Francisco.

Changes in First National of Oklahoma

Tom Boland Buys Substantial Interest and Will Devote Much Time to Circuit's Affairs.

A COMMUNICATION from E. H. Hulsey, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Texas, announces that important changes have taken place in the executive staff of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Oklahoma.

Tom H. Boland, one of the proprietors and manager of the Empress, the largest theater in Oklahoma City, has purchased a substantial interest in the circuit and has been elected president of the Oklahoma corporation. Mr. Boland will in future devote the major portion of his time to First National affairs, and those familiar with his capabilities declare that under his direction the Oklahoma exchange should show a prompt and unmistakable increase in efficiency.

Jack Brainerd, formerly branch manager for Mutual, has been appointed local manager of the Oklahoma circuit under Mr. Boland's regime.

T. E. Larson, who formerly represented the Hulsey interest in Oklahoma, is no longer connected with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Colonel Brady to Write for Metro

Soldier and Author Will Fill an Important Position in Scenario Department of Producing Company.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has secured Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady to fill an important position in its scenario department. Colonel Brady brings to his office the fruits of a career rich in experience as a United States military officer, a member of the secret service staff, a newspaper man and extensive traveler, and an active worker in the motion picture field.

Colonel Brady is averse to giving his age because it will take he says, a sworn birth certificate to make one believe he is beyond the age the Government will allow officers to serve in the army during the present war.

Colonel Brady was for years connected with the Vitagraph as manager of the scenario department, and for a year prior to joining the Metro forces was editor of the Universal in California. He has but lately returned from the coast, and is a natural born rooter for California. He is an author of note, as well as a playwright. "Tales of the Telegraph," "On Secret Service" and "The Case of Mary Sherman" are three published books from his pen, and "Honor, Faith and a Good Intent" is a new novel for publication this fall.

Success Still Attends Petrova Tour

Actress in Journey Through South Continues to Roll Up Pledges for Savings Stamps.

MME. OLGA PETROVA'S personal appearance tour on behalf of the Government's thrift stamp campaign, during which she has appeared in theaters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is meeting with striking success. During the last week of June Mme. Petrova appeared in Atlanta, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth.

At Atlanta, where she made her first appearance before southern audiences, she was greeted by the largest crowd that the Forsyth theater of that city has held during the year. At the matinee and evening performances on June 22 she obtained pledges from purchasers of thrift stamps totaling $24,499.

During her visit to New Orleans Mme. Petrova secured pledges for the purchase of $42,000 worth of thrift stamps. She appeared there at the Strand theater, which is controlled by E. V. Richards, Jr., one of the prominent members of the circuit.

After a brief stop at Houston, where she disposed of $5,500 worth of stamps, Mme. Petrova arrived in Dallas June 27. She appeared at the Old Mill theater in that city during the afternoon and evening and persuaded several hundred of her admirers to pledge themselves to the purchase of over $18,000 worth of stamps.

Her visit to Fort Worth on the following day was marked by two of the most successful meetings of her entire tour. During her two appearances at the Hippodrome theater the adding machines utilized by Manager A. E. Levy to record the amount of pledges subscribed totaled over $20,000 worth of stamps. In proportion to the size of the community this amount overtops any figure on record in localities visited by Mme. Petrova.

The Polish actress is using both argument and song to open the purses of the patriots in her various audiences.

Mme. Petrova will continue her tour to the Pacific Coast, visiting all of the large theaters in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the course of the next six or seven weeks.

World Pictures Seeking New Talent

Company Plans, When Away from Home, to Give Opportunity at Studio to Promising Aspirants.

WILMINGTON, N. C., is all excited these days. A moving picture company is in town. The World Film has sent there Oscar Apfel to direct Mantagu Love with a cast of a dozen or more, including Dorothy Green. The picture to be made is "Pirate's Gold," by Forest Halsey. The scenes of this photoplay are laid in the famous cyprus swamps, which are adjacent to Wilmington. In making the picture it will be necessary to use a large cast, and the World corporation is going to utilize local talent. Mr. Apfel, on arriving in Wilmington, interviewed nearly a hundred young women of the town, and from this aggregation he will make his selection. This will be the beginning of the plan the World has decided upon to discover and develop talent. If Mr. Apfel finds in his work that any of these candidates are especially gifted he has the assurance of World Pictures that the best of them will be brought to New York and given steady employment. In the future whenever World Pictures are to be made outside of New York only the absolutely necessary players are to be taken along and local talent will be depended upon for the small parts. In this way World Pictures hopes to secure material that they can develop into possible future "greats."

UNIVERSAL MAKES CHANGES IN SEATTLE.

Changes in the managerial and booking berths at the Seattle exchange, have been made by Joe Brandt, treasurer of Universal. W. F. Mead, well known in the film circles of the coast and formerly manager for Fox, has been appointed manager of the Seattle branch of Universal. Mr. Rubin of Portland, former booker with Paramount, has accepted the position of booker in the same office.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Maine Exhibitors Choose Delegates

Also Hold Annual Election of Officers, at Which A. S. Black Again is Made President.

THE annual meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Maine was held at the Elmwood Hotel, Waterville, July 2, with twenty members present. The meeting was held for the purpose of choosing delegates to the national convention which is to be held in Boston and also to discuss matters for the future good of the organization. This was the sixth meeting since the organization in June, 1917. The officers elected were:

President, A. S. Black, Rockland; secretary, J. M. Goodwin, Hallowell; treasurer, S. Hanson of Camden. The delegates elected to attend the national convention were W. B. Williamson, Augusta; A. S. Black, Rockland; J. M. Goodwin, Hallowell; S. Hanson, Camden; S. W. Wing, Fairfield; J. F. Eugley, Waterville. The alternates were H. Stitham, Pittsfield; W. B. Gray, Lewiston; W. E. Reeves, Portland; P. P. Peakes, Milo, and G. P. Churchill, Fort Fairfield.

St. Louis After Next Year's Convention

League and Chamber of Commerce Will Send Boosters to Boston Session.

ST. LOUIS will send a delegation of more than thirty exhibitors to Boston to the National Convention to plead for the holding of the 1919 convention in St. Louis. The film men will be led by Joseph Mogler, president of the Missouri Exhibitors' League and the St. Louis organization, and by Manager Louis Stephens of the Juniata Theater, secretary of the League. The delegation will represent at least twenty towns in the State and will hold proxies for at least forty others.

The Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis has also agreed to send at least two delegates with the motion picture men to make a plea for St. Louis in the convention city bidding and the St. Louis Convention Bureau will also send a delegate to the work of seeking the convention.

The St. Louis delegation has selected the Copley-Plaza Hotel as headquarters in Boston and will make a strenuous fight for the next meeting.

Would Prohibit Theater Opening Before 6.30

Report That Governor of Idaho Threatens Such a Measure Stirs Exhibitors.

HERMAN J. BROWN, theatrical man controlling houses in Boise, and also president of the Idaho State Exhibitors' League, calling at the Universal Salt Lake office recently, said that there is a big fight now on to head off a measure which threatens to put a serious handicap on the exhibitors of Idaho.

Governor Alexander threatens a measure to prohibit the opening of any theaters in the state before 6.30 p.m. during the war. All members of the exhibitors league, recently meeting at Pocatello, went on record as strongly opposed to such a measure, which they deem as emphatically unjust.

Before leaving for home Mr. Brown was assured by Gus Hager, manager of the Universal exchange, that his organization would be glad to give the Idaho Exhibitors' League all the co-operation possible in their effort to head off its passage.

A. B. Hager, manager of the Rex Theater, Idaho Falls, Idaho, was elected secretary of the league at the Pocatello meeting.

NEW JERSEY LEAGUE ELECTS DELEGATES.

At a meeting of the New Jersey branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held in Newark on June 28, the following delegates to represent that branch at the Boston convention were elected: Dr. Charles Hespe, John G. Crawford, Walter H. Meier, John Collins, Louis H. Blumenthal, H. H. Wallenbrench. The president was authorized to select two others to complete the delegation. The members present adopted resolutions opposing increased admissions and the footage tax. The meeting also declared in favor of the National League taking charge of all Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives so that the Government and the public may see what the industry is doing.

Rolfe Re-enters Manufacturing Field

Will Make Eight Special Features a Year, But First Will Produce Serial With Houdini.

IT has been known for some time that B. A. Rolfe, long a producer of motion pictures, had disposed of his various cinema connections and intended re-entering the field of screen drama at the head of a new company. Further speculiation is set at rest by Mr. Rolfe's first authentic intimation to the public and the trade of his future plans.

"I have formed what will be known as Rolfe Productions, Inc., to produce only high-class pictures, and these only with established stars who are among the best in the firmament of screendom," said Mr. Rolfe. "We propose making eight of these super-specials a year, and will offer several new policies in their manufacture and distribution that I believe will have a most positive appeal.

"But preceding the making of these special features we will engage in the making of a serial exploiting Houdini, an announcement that should prove of special interest to the industry and the public. I intend devoting all of my personal attention to the production of this important serial, which, I believe, will be an epoch-making one.

"The authors of the Houdini serial are leaders in the world of scenario writers. They are Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue, both of whom have to their credit such serial successes as 'The House of Fear,' 'The Clutching Hand,' 'Exploits of Elaine,' etc. There will be ten episodes, and work will begin about July 15. I cannot announce the complete cast yet, but it will be a notable one.

"For the first special feature Miss Florence Reed has been signed. We intend completing the serial and the first special in the East. After that the company will move to California, where the winter will be devoted to other features."

St. Louis Distributors Get Together

Form Body for "Protection and Advancement"—Interesting Situation Among the Larger Theaters.

AN organization of distributors is a reality in St. Louis at last. After years of fruitless attempt at combination "for protection and advancement" the St. Louis film managers have formed a St. Louis Film Board of Trade and are now preparing for concerted action on a wide scale. Just what the move will mean to the exhibitors is now being earnestly watched by the Exhibitors' League, but film distributors promise that the ultimate result will be "good for both sides."

The Film Board of Trade was formed during the week at a meeting of nearly all the managers in the district. It followed a visit here of Jack Woody, district representative of Select, who, while he did nothing to put the organization in actual motion, told the distributors a whole lot about the organizatiion in Seattle.

The president of the Film Board of Trade is Eddie Dustin, who represents Pathe in St. Louis. Dustin has had wide distribution experience, having been formerly with Select and previous to that with a number of other concerns, each step in his career having been an advancement. Dustin promises that the purposes of the new organization will be those in accordance with justice and self-development, and will bear none of the earmarks of combination in a trade way. Dustin is considered an able head for such an organization.

William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, and St. Louis and Missouri representative and agent for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is vice-president of the board. Sievers, too, enjoys the confidence of factional parties here. He combines the dual role of exhibitor and distributor, which, while a novel combination, seems to work out satisfactorily. In selecting Sievers for vice-president the film managers are credited with having cemented the possibility of getting co-operation from the better class of exhibitors. Manager Boswell of the Vitagraph office is secretary and treasurer. Boswell, like the two others, has had wide experience in the selling end and has also been free from alliances during the periods of certain bitter competition.

The board selected Ray Weinbrenner as general counsel. Weinbrenner is a young lawyer, who has held the post of assistant prosecuting attorney for several years in St. Louis, and is a Republican of considerable power in city politics. He is drawing up the incorporation papers.

A film man in close touch with the organization said the matter of "collection" was about as important a consideration in the impetus back of the organization as any. He explained that for years there has been necessity in this district of some action in the case of delinquents, especially in the "C. O. D." business. The peculiar nature of the district is responsible for this to a great extent, the fluctuation of business at out-state houses being one of the disturbing factors.

Competition on First Runs Is Stiffening.

A very unusual situation exists here and one that bids fair to become more unusual when the fall and winter season opens. There are at present virtually only three first-run houses in St. Louis. The New Grand Central is on the Goldwyn program. The West End Lyric and the Downtown Lyric are also first runs, the Paramount-Artcraft program being at the west end house.

But Fox has no first-run house. Manager Thomas has completed arrangements for the opening of the Victoria theater on Delmar Boulevard, just west of Grand avenue. This house is within a block of the New Grand Central, the largest house in the city, and the competition is expected to be keen when the Fox house opens. It is persistently stated that Paramount also will open a St. Louis house, although nothing definite can be obtained from the local management. Should Paramount and Fox open this fall in the neighborhood of Grand avenue the situation would be most interesting. Especially is this true in view of the fact that the First National Circuit, which Sievers represents at the New Grand Central, is promising an extensive program for about October or November. Goldwyn, of course, would also do its best to aid the New Grand Central in the film battle. Sievers until recently used the Paramount-Artcraft program, but was unable to get a divisional first-run right with the West End Lyric on the big pictures. He then turned to Goldwyn, and has done well.

The most interesting thing about the fall prospect is the Cella-Tate string of theaters. The two largest of these theaters are the Park and Shenandoah. There are eight others, all of first-run possibility and all very high-class houses, two of them—the Columbia and Grand Opera House—being in the downtown district.

The contracting and booking for the Cella-Tate string of theaters has been under the supervision of David Russell of the Park. Russell some time ago took over the Triangle program and used it at the Park, King's and Shenandoah. The King's is probably the most exclusive house in the city. Three weeks ago Russell closed his big houses for the summer and discontinued his contract with the Triangle.

That puts these big houses in the field for pictures for next season. The houses are all money-makers, and there will be strong bids for them. Russell says he will "pick up" the best that the distributors have. Russell will open his houses about August 1.

Dobbs Takes Over Laboratory

General Manager of Palisade Laboratories Company Ready to Begin Work in Ridgefield Plant.

GEORGE C. DOBBS, vice-president and general manager of the Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc., announces that the working forces have taken possession of the new steel and concrete building situated at Lafayette avenue and Bergen Boulevard, Ridgefield, N. J., a short distance from the 130th street ferry, on the Jersey side.

"Our new home is the largest building in the country devoted exclusively to a laboratory," says Mr. Dobbs, "and consists of three floors, totaling 12,000 square feet of space. The departments are laid out in sequence so that the film progresses in its various stages of development and takes no backward movement.

"Everything in the plant is the most modern and up to date, and elaborate arrangements have been taken to take care of the comfort of our employees and outside directors and cameramen who may desire to project and cut film. The building is strictly fireproof, and large vaults, complying with fire insurance regulations, will protect the film.

"The capacity of the plant is two million feet a week, though I do not propose to handle more than half that amount, which will enable me to give my personal attention to all work in the same manner I did at the Triangle laboratories.

The Paliasade Film Laboratories.

"I will turn out at least as good film as I have in the past, for, while it is a new plant, with new equipment and everything spick and span, I have a lot of my old employes, some of whom have been with me for four or five years.

"The location is an ideal one for a laboratory—on top of the Palisades, several hundred feet higher than New York, where there is very little humidity in the atmosphere."

HARRY ASHER NOT CONCERNED IN FILM CORPORATION.

Harry Asher, district manager for New England for Famous Players-Lasky, declares that the World was misinformed concerning his connection with the "Hearts of the World" company of New England, mentioned in last week's issue under the department of Trade News, with a Boston date line. It was declared that Mr. Asher and others had formed a corporation to handle the New England distribution of the Griffith film. This statement Mr. Asher denies and wishes us to correct.

A Message from Griffith

Master Director Congratulates Producers and Exhibitors on the Realization of Their Dreams.

IT WAS some ten years ago that many of us began working in the service known as the business of motion pictures. I know that many of you must often dream back to the old days, for this is common to all humanity, to dream back. It is also the truth that time remembered is grief forgotten. And again, perhaps, they were really very pleasant days.

How little we pioneers knew or dreamed to what great heights our little business of then was to grow? When we first talked even, seven years ago, of the picture that would run like a play for a full evening's entertainment at regular theatrical prices, it was considered a great joke. A few years before that it would have been equally as great a joke to have pictured the magnificent temples of art and delight you exhibitors have now given to the service of the people.

D. W. Griffith.

But we, the producers, and you, the exhibitors, had our little dreams. Your dreams have come true in many a beautiful temple where the people worship at the shrine of a beautiful Art. And our dreams in a small measure came true in "The Birth of a Nation," which went throughout the world at regular theatrical prices and has broken everywhere the records of the most successful plays produced in the history of man. It would be absurd to claim personal credit for this—we merely happened to strike one of the many millions of notes ready to be played on the great organ of the moving pictures—not your business and mine now—but the great world's.

I am glad to come back to you again with some short subjects. Not having made a failure in these special pictures, but after having another success which, so far, is rivaling "The Birth of a Nation"—"The Hearts of the World," which, as you well know, has played at top prices in many places with more extraordinary success than even "The Birth of a Nation."

But we do not have to take pictures into first class theaters to get beautiful presentation, because the moving picture theaters are now, since your dreams are realized, more beautiful than any theaters that have ever been built.

Also we believe that the story of the human heart can be told with the few people as well as with thousands. I do not intend to make you any exaggerated promise as to what we shall do. I am working night and day as in the old hall-rooms at the Biograph to try to catch a little of the tears and laughter, the joys and sorrows, of humanity, and to pray that I may bring to you some of the flavor that you were gracious enough to like a little in the old Biograph days.

Most sincerely and gratefully yours,

D. W. GRIFFITH.

"Shoulder Arms!" Is Chaplin's Next

It Is Designed for Entertainment of Soldiers and Their Families—Comedian Finds Possibilities in Grenades.

THE secret is out. Charlie Chaplin's second picture to be made under his contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is to be a military subject, and will be entitled "Shoulder Arms!" It will probably be released early in August.

The comedian decided during his recent Liberty Loan tour to make a picture primarily for the amusement of the boys in khaki and their friends and families. Those who have had a peep at some of the scenes already filmed declare that they represent the last word in comic novelty. Chaplin is said to be as expert in the manipulation of a hand grenade as a trench veteran, although the effects he secures with his markmanship are extraordinarily different from the accepted military kind.

Corporal O. W. De Varila, who fired the first shot in France for the United States artillery, and who is now in this country on furlough, has recently visited the Chaplin studios to give his friend Charlie some first-hand pointers on life as it is actually lived in dugout, trench and camp. There is a possibility that De Varila may himself appear in some of the scenes.

Clarke Appointed Division Director

Rochester Man Engaged by Community Bureau, Which Distributes Film Among Soldiers and Sailors.

SIDNEY R. CLARKE, former secretary of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, has been appointed a division director for service in France by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which supplies the war film here and abroad. Previous to his tenure of office at the Rochester chamber he was secretary of the San Jose (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce at the time of the great earthquake.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau, which operates under the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., carries out what is probably the largest individual undertaking in the film business today. It is under the direction of the Government's agencies, which is directly represented by the Commission on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departments.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau is distributing something like seven million feet of film a week, all selected for the camps and cantonments and military posts in this country alone. About three million additional feet are circulated weekly on the transports and battleships. About two million feet are supplied weekly to the camps in France, and arrangements are being made to extend this service to England and Italy.

The service in France requires the highest type of men, preferably those who have been engaged in work that fits them for the great social work of the Y. M. C. A.

The foreign service is personally supervised by Warren Dunham Foster, president of the bureau, and includes mechanics, skilled transport men and others capable of organizing and directing the work of a division covering a large amount of territory and many thousands of troops

WILLIAM BITTNER, VETERAN ACTOR, DIES.

Very suddenly, in his rooms at the Hotel St. Margaret, in New York, William Bittner died July 5 as a result of hemorrhage. He was fifty-two years old. His widow and two daughters survive him. Mr. Bittner entertained friends who called upon him the evening before he died, and he was then apparently in his usual good health. It was 8 o'clock in the morning when he suddenly passed away.

Mr. Bittner was an actor of wide experience on the dramatic stage, and at one time managed his own repertoire companies, touring the Middle West. In later years he played vaudeville dates, and finally began work before the camera. His last role upon the screen was that of Von Tirpitz in "My Four Years in Germany," the Gerard propaganda feature.

A delegation from the Green Room Club, of which organization he was a popular member, attended funeral services at St. Chrysostom's Chapel, and the burial was at Evergreen Cemetery under the auspices of the Actors' Fund.

ATLAS TO RELEASE COMEDIES IN THE FALL.

Miss Ida Harrison, representing the Atlas Film Corporation of Boston, was a visitor in New York the past week. Miss Harrison, who is on the ladies' committee for the Boston exposition, says the Atlas will begin releasing early in the fall the "Kiddie Comedies," which it has been making. Quite a number of these comedies have been privately shown, and the producers have received substantial encouragement to continue in their making. Frank J. Howard, the veteran New England film man, is president of Atlas, and Leon E. Dadmun is vice-president and general manager.

WALTER E. STRADLING, CAMERAMAN, IS DEAD.

The death of Walter E. Stradling at the Polyclinic Hospital July 6 brought to an end twelve years of service as a cameraman. With Vitagraph, Famous Players and other producing companies Mr. Stradling turned the crank for many screen celebrities, of whom Mary Pickford was the most conspicuous. His brother is manager of the Broadway theater, Yonkers. The funeral services were conducted at Campbell's Funeral Church. Deceased was thirty-nine years old.

American to Release Through Pathe

Announcement Is Made That Twenty-four Feature Pictures Will Be Distributed Yearly.

THE American Film Company, for years one of the most prominent of producing companies, announces that arrangements have been made with Pathe for release through the Pathe exchange of a minimum of twenty-four feature pictures yearly. This announcement sets at rest the many rumors which have been circulated and the speculation which has been rife ever since it was announced that the American had made plans for a different method of distribution of its product. The facts reveal a distinct departure from any method of distribution used by any other producing company. The new contracts have been signed by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of American.

"I take great pleasure in making public announcement of the new alliance," said Mr. Hutchinson when interviewed at his office at 6227 Broadway, Chicago. "Naturally the question as to through what channels our pictures were to be released received the most serious consideration from us when we decided it to be advantageous to terminate our former arrangements. We came to our decision after a most careful consideration of the entire motion picture field. We became convinced that the utilization of Pathe's great distributing organization, which, to our way of thinking, is as near ideal in its conception and development as this business has yet furnished, was materially to our advantage, and we have decided upon that to the exclusion of the many flattering offers which we have received from competing distributing companies."

Mr. Brunet was also enthusiastic over the new arrangements. When seen at his office at 25 West 45th street, New York, he made the following statement:

"The pictures made by the American Film Company have been popular with exhibitors and public alike for years," said Mr. Brunet. "It is noteworthy that its product has shown a consistent and marked improvement, that it has not been content to merely hold its own, but has steadily forged ahead. It has built up a producing force which, in accomplishment and ability, is second to none. In William Russell, Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher it has three stars who have been identified with a succession of real successes and whose names have a special box office value.

"There will be representatives of the American in each of our exchanges, who will personally secure bookings on the American pictures. These representatives will receive every possible co-operation and support from our exchangemen. The American will furnish the prints and the selling organization, but nothing else. Pathe will attend to the physical handling of the film, the booking, billing, collecting, shipping, scheduling, etc.

"The American will produce and exploit through the Pathe exchanges a minimum of twenty-four features a year, consisting in part of eight Mary Miles Minter productions and eight Margarita Fisher productions. Mr. Hutchinson has been able to make arrangements to distribute the William Russell productions through these same channels. These features will be released approximately every other week, beginning with September 15."

It is announced that Directors Edward Sloman, Henry King and Lloyd Ingraham of the American are already well along on the first productions.

CARUSO WILL DEBUT IN SPECIAL PLAY.

Contrary to rumor and general impression Enrico Caruso will not make his first film appearance in a visualization of one of the operas in which he made his way to fame, but will be presented by Adolph Zukor in an Artcraft production especially written for the event. Caruso will appear in at least two pictures during the summer, his work beginning July 15 at either the New York or Fort Lee studios of Famous Players-Lasky.

Artcraft publicity emphasizes the fact that Caruso's final decision to accept a motion picture contract was largely prompted by a patriotic motive. His usual summer engagements in Europe seemed out of the question because of war conditions there, and rather than spending these months in idleness the celebrated star of the opera expressed particular pleasure at the opportunity of being busily engaged in artistic endeavor and incidentally turning over to the Government a large sum of money in the way of income and film taxes as a result of his activities before the motion picture camera.

Official Films Must Be Widely Distributed

So Says Vice-President Brunet of Pathe in Letter of Instruction to Branch Managers.

WITH the desire that the Allies' Official War Review have the widest possible distribution, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has notified the managers of the thirty Pathe branches in the United States that the fullest co-operation must be given the Committee on Public Information and the Division of Films in placing this weekly feature in every city, town and village in the country.

"Wide distribution is the paramount object," declared Mr. Brunet. "The placing of the Government films before the greatest number of people is the Government's desire and Pathe's desire. Exclusive runs and consideration of regular customers must all be subordinated to the main issue—distribution. In fact, it is vitally necessary to obtain this important wide distribution."

Mr. Brunet said that under no circumstances shall Pathe managers accept excessive rentals for the Allies' Official War Review film, "Bear in mind," he said, "that we have promised Mr. Hart, director of the Division of Films, that every Pathe employee will loyally co-operate with a great endeavor to have the Allies' Official War Review shown in every motion picture theater in America."

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, said to a reporter for the World, during an interview at the division headquarters in the Times Building, that the subject of rates and matters of distribution may possibly be revised in some particulars very shortly. There will be a meeting at Mr. Hart's office of several representative exhibitors, and then the entire matter will be thoroughly canvassed.

It is Mr. Hart's purpose to have this delegation of showmen represent all classes of theaters where pictures are exhibited. It may not be generally known, but the fact is that the Government, in order to assemble all of the allied war pictures in news-reel form, was compelled to pay to France, Italy and England a substantial amount of money for subjects to comprise the weekly releases.

The Allies need money and the United States Government needs propaganda. The foreign countries are not vitally concerned in having their war subjects shown over here, while it is a matter of absolute necessity that United States activities shall be shown upon screens abroad as well as at home. Our soldiers over there must know what we are doing here. The general public in allied nations must be kept sustained in morale by photographic proof that the war for democracy will be battled to ultimate victory.

These considerations will enter into whatever decision shall be made concerning the cost of Government pictures to exhibitors.

Picture Men Reported Working for Lewis

Said to Be Backing New York Attorney-General's Campaign Against Whitman for Gubernatorial Nomination.

IT has come to light in Rochester that motion picture men throughout New York State have been quietly working in the interests of Merton E. Lewis, of Rochetser, candidate in the Republican primaries for the nomination for governor of New York State. In the first place it is understood Mr. Lewis is an ardent picture fan. In the second place those exhibitors who were at Albany in the interests of the bill legalizing the opening of moving picture theaters on Sundays will remember the scant courtesy that they received at the hands of Governor Whitman.

A quiet talk with theater men throughout the western end of New York State discloses the fact that they are lined up for Lewis almost solidly. They exhibit considerable friendliness for the attorney-general, and express the belief that if he is nominated and elected to the gubernatorial office he can be depended upon to further the interests of the exhibitors in any upright and honorable proposition that may arise during his term of office.

While the theater men are by no means mixed up in politics, either individually, as a rule, or as a fraternity, there is a hint that their open friendliness for Attorney-General Lewis may later develop into something more than passive support. There seems to be a deep-rooted feeling, learned by bitter experience, that a friend in Albany is the best kind of a friend.

Should the Lewis boom develop into an actual contest at the polls it may be that Mr. Lewis will find that his friendliness for the pictures is materially appreciated by the patrons of the silent art.

Exposition Declared Off.

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America and to the Motion Picture Industry:

Abandoned at the last moment by the producer and distributor branches of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, I have been compelled to call off the exposition scheduled to be held in the city of Boston, July 13 to 20, at Mechanics Building.

In lieu of the exposition and to make up in some part the loss sustained by the League by reason of the action of the National Association, a ball will be held at the Arena in Boston on Friday night, July 19, at which many of the great stars of the motion picture world will be present.

In behalf of the League I also desire to thank the trade papers for the space that they have generously donated to the League in furtherance of the aims of the exposition.

The convention of the exhibitors will be held as scheduled and from present indications will be the largest convention ever held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.
LEE A. OCHS, President.

Maryland Exhibitors Must Submit Paper

State Censor Board Declares Some of the Posters and Photographs Have Been Misleading.

THE Maryland Censor Board has sent a letter to all film exchange managers releasing pictures in Maryland, stating that hereafter they must submit to the Board for examination before used, all paper and photographs employed in advertising features. The letter does not specify what is the minimum length of the features to which the ruling applies.

Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison of the Censor Board charged this ruling was made because several of the theaters in Baltimore have been using advertising matter which is misleading. This she says, tends to give a bad impression of the moving picture industry.

The ruling of the Board provides that all paper and photographs left at the offices of the Censor Board will be examined and held for twenty-four hours, at the expiration of which time, if not called for, it will be destroyed.

MRS. SPOOR PRESENTS FLAG TO ESSANAY UNIT.

Mrs. George K. Spoor, wife of the president of Essanay, presented Unit 380, Illinois Volunteer Training Corps, with a large silk flag at a military ceremony at the Essanay studios Friday, June 21. The flag was made at West Point of heavy silk, with hand embroidered stars. It was accepted for the company by Captain Richard N. Woodman.

Although the company is officially enrolled in the state organization as Unit 380, it is known generally as the Essanay unit, George K. Spoor having supplied the company with guns as well as a drill hall.

There are now 118 members of the company and 43 stars in its service flag. The purpose of the organization is both to train younger men for service in the army and to form a nucleus of older men for service in the state.

The same week an entertainment was given by the auxiliary of the unit of which Mrs. Spoor is president. Two thousand dollars was raised to pay for the uniforms of the company.

IRENE CASTLE MAY GO ABROAD.

Two new Pathe Plays, in which Irene Castle stars, are announced by Pathe for release this summer. These are the last photoplays in which Mrs. Castle will appear for a long time, it is believed. She is said to have decided to give her services as an entertainer in the Y. M. C. A. huts in France, probably for the remainder of the year.

"The First Law," in which Antonio Moreno is her leading man, will be released on the program of July 28. Gilson Willets wrote "The First Law" and it affords Mrs. Castle a splendid opportunity for legitimate acting.

"The Girl from Bohemia," which has to do with the experiences of a young woman in studio life in New York, will be released on the program of August 25.

SOLE "UNCLE TOM" SURVIVOR TO BE GUEST.

Mrs. Cordelia Howard MacDonald, who as Cordelia Howard appeared in the role of Little Eva in the original production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the first performance of which was given at Troy, N. Y., in the year 1852, has been invited by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be the guest of honor at the initial screen presentation of Harriet Beecher Stowe's story in Boston, the Paramount production starring Marguerite Clark being set for release July 15. Mrs. MacDonald resides at 22 Putnam avenue, Cambridge, and is the only member of the original "Uncle Tom" cast still living.

SIMPLEX EMPLOYES TO HOLD OUTING.

The annual outing of the employes of the Simplex Company, 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, will be held at Belvidere Park, North Beach, near Long Island City, on Saturday, July 13. The outing last year was held at the same place. Over two hundred employes will attend the event. They will assemble at the Simplex building at 9 A. M. and march to the Long Island Ferry at 34th street to the accompaniment of a band of eight pieces. Special cars will convey the guests from Long Island City direct to the park.

A flag with thirty stars will be raised in honor of the Simplex employes who are now in military service.

LASKY FOLKS AT HOME FUND.

Approximately $9,000 was realized from the recent carnival and dance held at the big Lasky studio at Hollywood for the benefit of the Folks at Home Fund of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation West Coast studios. This sum will be devoted to the care of the men of the studios who are now in the service of the United States and the dependents they have left behind. Although for several weeks the committees in charge of the big event had worked with zeal for the success of the affair, even their most sanguine hopes were exceeded in the actual result.

MUTUAL'S PRESS DEPARTMENT IN NEW YORK.

Terry Ramsaye has returned to New York, bag and baggage, after a stay of considerable duration in Chicago, where he went with Mutual's publicity department, and now comes back to the old town he loves so well. On the top floor of the Mecca Building, at 1600 Broadway, Mr. Ramsaye and his battery of mimeographs, stenographers and typewriters are now established in commodious quarters, from whence will issue a continuation of the fine line of publicity Mutual has been producing under Mr. Ramsaye's inventive patronage.

TOURNEUR FINISHES "SPORTING LIFE."

Maurice Tourneur has just completed his film production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," which is to be exploited by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., and has started work on a photodramatic offering the title of which is at present withheld.

TWO DENVER JEWELS JOIN FORCES.

Fred Clark, poster clerk, left at the same time to join the United States Navy, which makes five service stars in the Denver office flag.

O'CONNOR IN CINEMATOGRAPHY SCHOOL.

L. William O'Connor, who turned the camera for Commodore J. Stuart Blackton during the filming of "Missing," is now enrolled in the School of Military Cinematography, Signal Corps, Columbia University.

Community Centers in Every School District

By Rev. W. H. Jackson

A Daughter of the President of the United States Is a Strong Advocate of the Community Center Work

THERE is no time as good as the present for the proper establishment of community centers. The war work of each community could be concentrated to a degree that would prove of inestimable value, and duplication of effort would be obviated in an unmistakable way." These are the words of Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President. Community centers are at present of two kinds—those which find themselves in the school-house and those established by neighborhood associations. Wherever they have been established they have proved of that "inestimable value" of which Miss Wilson speaks. It is not at all surprising then that with her experience that she seeks to have them established in all parts of the United States.

To those who have had any experience in community center work it is accepted that the first necessity for successful work is the moving picture. Indeed, it is only fair to say that it is the moving picture which has given the strength and character of the community center idea, and nowhere yet has there appeared a work of this kind without pictures except in such places where the work has been only for Red Cross purposes. The writer may be permitted to say that as he is associated with two such centers and personally responsible for one of them therefore he can speak with the authority of experience.

Timeliness of Miss Wilson's Efforts.

Without doubt the present is the most opportune moment for the beginning or the development of community work in city, town or country. Even the most remote places can now be reached by the community center arrangements. This especially has been proved by the excellent work done and results obtained by the school principal of Mingo, Ohio, who, together with others similarly situated, has accomplished much.

Miss Wilson very wisely points out that the timely combination of events demands immediate attention to this work—the war's needs, the benefit of concentration and coordination, also the great educational value to all. The greatest hindrance to the more rapid development of this great work comes from those in scholastic work and authority, who ought to be the very first to espouse the cause, and, still worse, the war needs, which Miss Wilson pleads as the reason for immediate efforts, are the very things which these procrastinators plead for their inexcusable delay.

The strange opposition, which in many places comes in the shape of the refusal of school authorities to allow the use of the school buildings for this new work, brings from Miss Wilson the demand, "Do not the people own the school buildings? therefore they have the right to assume the complete control of those buildings when they are not being used by the children. This is a principle which must be recognized and fearlessly followed if there is to be truly democratic use of the school buildings. It sounds radical, but it is only as radical as true democracy."

One cannot but admire the courage which puts forth such ideas, and coming from such a source may we not be permitted to at least suppose that the head of the nation shares these views, and, further, may it not be rightly supposed that if the people had more to say about the use of the school buildings the community center idea would not be long hiding behind its present living barriers.

Permanency of Community Work.

The community idea has the law of permanency within it. That which educates always grows and always lives. The school will never die. Anything which educates will never die. It may change its form, but its change will be progressive and more lively. This truth causes Miss Wilson to say, "The community center as a place for all sorts of community ideas and activities has come to stay. It is a fact coincident with the district school plan, which furnished the school as the common meeting place for all purposes." Strengthened by these opinions coming from such a most authoritative source the writer intends to push with still greater vigor the use of the moving pictures, which are the backbone of community enterprise. In the daytime pictures will supplement the text books for the scholars; at night they will enlighten, instruct, cheer and entertain the community at large. Their next mission will be to open the door for all those many things for which a community center stands. There are few branches of such activities which the pictures do not introduce and sustain, and the growing generation will be greatly benefited by the great advantages resulting therefrom. Let no one now delay any longer this good and great work.

The Church as a Community Center.

Ohio seems to be the leading state for community center work. At a recent meeting of a rural church conference, held at Pardue University, Lafayette, Indiana, the secretary of the Presbyterian Forward Movement in Ohio, the Rev. Moses Breeze of Columbus, Ohio, read a paper upon the subject of "The Church as a Community Center." He said he thought the church should be the supervisor of the community spiritually, recreationally, educationally and federationally. To teach a boy how to play is to teach him how to pray, and so far as he knew two of the best mediums for this purpose were the moving pictures and a gymnasium. It is an easy matter to agree with the above. There are places where the church and not the school has taken the lead in this work. Such will still often be the case. This is purely a local matter. Under either circumstances neither will be excused from either initiating or supporting the work it is part of the business of both alike.

EDUCATIONAL SELECTS NAME FOR COAL FEATURE.

The Educational Films Corporation of America announces "When the Giant Wakes" as the working title of its spectacular picture production, with many of the scenes laid in the West Virginia coal fields. As is the custom, the definite title will not be selected until after the completion of the picture.

Most of the cast have been engaged and are preparing to go to Charleston, W. Va., under the leadership of Carroll Fleming, director, and George B. Wilson, business manager. Among the players are: Ethel Grey Terry, for the leading feminine role; Albert Hall and Harry Hollingsworth, for prominent masculine roles; Robin MacDougal, the well-known Tyltyl in "The Bluebird," in the juvenile role; also J. J. Dunn, Charles Mason, William T. Hayes, L. F. Kennedy and George Harcourt.

DITMARS COMPLETES ANOTHER ANIMAL STUDY.

Professor Raymond L. Ditmars' recent completion for the Educational Films Corporation of his fifty-two "Living Book of Nature" studies marks the first definite transference of a natural science from the literary to the motion picture form. In the series presented, in 500-foot lengths, and now finished with "Birds of Vanity" and "The Tiger," the natural historian has covered the principal species of zoology, as well as the laws of natural selection, adaptation and evolution, on which biological changes depend. "The Tiger" is a portrayal of this gigantic feline species ranging from British India to the frozen regions of Northern Siberia.

"Birds of Vanity" are the most georgeous birds in the world, and the picture in which they are shown is a fit companion piece to "The Tiger." They belong to the group of pheasants, and many of them come from almost inaccessible regions in Asia.

IMPROVEMENTS AT VITAGRAPH WESTERN STUDIO.

A number of important improvements are now being made at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood at the direction of Albert E. Smith, president of the company. W. S. Smith, brother of the Vitagraph chief and manager of the western studio, is supervising the drilling of a one hundred and fifty foot well on the Vitagraph lot adjoining the negative department. The well will insure this department running cold water throughout the year, thus protecting the thousands of feet of negatives taken care of weekly at the Hollywood studio.

An additional row of dressing rooms for the men of the Vitagraph company has just been completed. The next construction activity will be by way of converting one of the entire buildings on the Vitagraph lot into directors' rooms.

Don't Let Summer Interfere with Business

If Your Patrons Are Thinking of Resorts Advertise and Bring 'Em In, Says Metzger.

G. A. METZGER, manager of the Portland branch of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., doesn't intend to allow summer to interfere with business. A firm believer in the idea that business will come to him who goes after it hard enough, Universal's Portland representative has been preaching this gospel to the exhibitors in the Northwest territory.

Recently Metzger sent out a letter to these showmen, in which he pointed out that the amount of business done by an exhibitor during the summer season is in direct ratio to the amount of energy he puts into trying to get it. His letter continued as follows:

"Old Sol, plus the gentle breezes of summer and good roads, inviting every one who owns or can borrow a car to stay outside, is a combination that the theater man views with annual alarm; and usually the summer "dull season," so-called, is accompanied by an outbreak of retrenchment.

"Which may be well and good, but in a big percentage of the cases the retrenchment starts in on the advertising end of the budget, which is just where the pruning hook should be applied last of all.

"If you want 'em inside you've gotta convince 'em you have something there that outlures the sun and the wind and the call of the outdoors, and you can't convince 'em by curtailing your advertising.

"Walter Armstrong showed what can be done in competition against the outdoor impulse when he put over the lobby on 'The Guilt of Silence' in Portland recently and packed his house for four days running in spite of a run of the kind of weather that makes every one want to stampede to the seashore.

"The summer dull season doesn't have to be so all-fired dull unless the exhibitor helps it along by lying down on his crowd-getting activities.

BIG COAST OPENING OF "PERSHING'S CRUSADERS."

An audience that tested the capacity of the Columbia theater of Oakland, Cal., witnessed the west coast premiere of "Pershing's Crusaders," the first United States official war film, on Sunday, June 20. A martial touch was given the opening performance by the presence of a number of prominent army and navy officers, who were guests of the theater management. A number of California's most prominent political and civic leaders were also in attendance, and were unanimous in praise of the big war film.

The Columbia was appropriately decorated with flags of the allies, the American Red, White and Blue, of course, predominating and forming the keystone of the entire decorative scheme. An enlarged symphony orchestra added materially to the effectiveness of the presentation, and during the intermission gave a medley of patriotic selections that aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm and brought forth volleys of applause.

FOX THEATERS HONOR MEN WHO HAVE FALLEN.

Taps, as a tribute to America's roll of honor, or the American soldiers who have lost their lives in the present war, was ordered played by William Fox in all of his theaters immediately following the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" on the Fourth of July.

COAST DEFENSE MEN ENTERTAIN DORIS KENYON.

In honor of her appointment as an honorary sergeant of the 122d Company, Seventieth Regiment, U. S. Coast Defense, Doris Kenyon, star of the recent photoplay success, "The Street of Seven Stars," was tendered a dinner Sunday evening, June 23, at the general headquarters of the Coast Defenses, at Fort Hamilton.

The dinner was given by Brigadier-General Eli Hoyle and Mrs. Hoyle, while Colonel Delamore Skerrett acted as master of ceremonies.

WILLIAMSON JOINS TRAINING CAMP FORCES.

James E. Williamson, general manager of Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., has resigned his position with that company and enlisted in the War Department Training Camp Activities. He will be stationed at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga.

S. Snowden Cassard

Assistant General Manager Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

THE man who owns up to the above likeness, wishing to come to earth the worst way arrived via Baltimore on January 9, 1886. His friends say that he looks older. His early ambition was to become a fireman, but as there were already sixteen or seventeen of this profession in the family his father persuaded him to abandon this idea. The child next turned to literature, and at the early age of ten he had thoroughly mastered the works of Jesse James, Old King Brady and Frank Merriwell. Being undecided as to whether he should become a famous train-robber, a great detective, or a college hero, he compromised by entering upon a manufacturing career.

S. Snowden Cassard.

He is generally known as "Dick," having foresworn his middle name entirely. This because it is the name of a mountain, and he is afraid it will always keep him "up in the air." We have it on information and belief that the name "Dick" was fastened on him by the police lieutenants of Baltimore, who became weary of writing the triple barrelled name of Samuel Snowden Cassard upon the blotter.

"Dick" Cassard is young in years but old in experience, and he has been well schooled in business affairs.

In 1908 he became associated with the Bay State Brass Company, located at Haydenville, Mass., where he had complete charge of the factory. This was a big man's job in itself.

In 1912 he became associated with the Nicholas Power Company, inaugurating a cost system, and later becoming the purchasing agent. This enabled him to obtain a keen insight into the business with the result that there is no phase of the mechanical end that he is not thoroughly familiar with.

His career has been marked by continuous, steady growth which is best evidenced by the fact that in November, 1917, he was made assistant general manager.

A genial, sunny dispositioned man is he. The door of his office, like his heart, is always open to any one who is "on the level," and rich and poor all look alike to him.

In addition to being a good business man he is also musical. He isn't afraid of the biggest piano ever, and he has many compositions to his credit.

A many sided man is "Dick" Cassard.

MacLAREN LOOKS US OVER AND STAYS DRY.

W. S. MacLaren, of the Majestic and Colonial Theaters, Jackson, Mich., was in town last week looking us over and both getting and giving pointers on the business. Mr. MacLaren is a well grounded manager and he has a pretty good idea of what he wants and how he wants it and he threw a jolt into some of the press men. And he did not indulge in the usual privilege extended a man who comes to New York from a dry state, and Michigan is arid if it is named after and mostly surrounded by a lake.

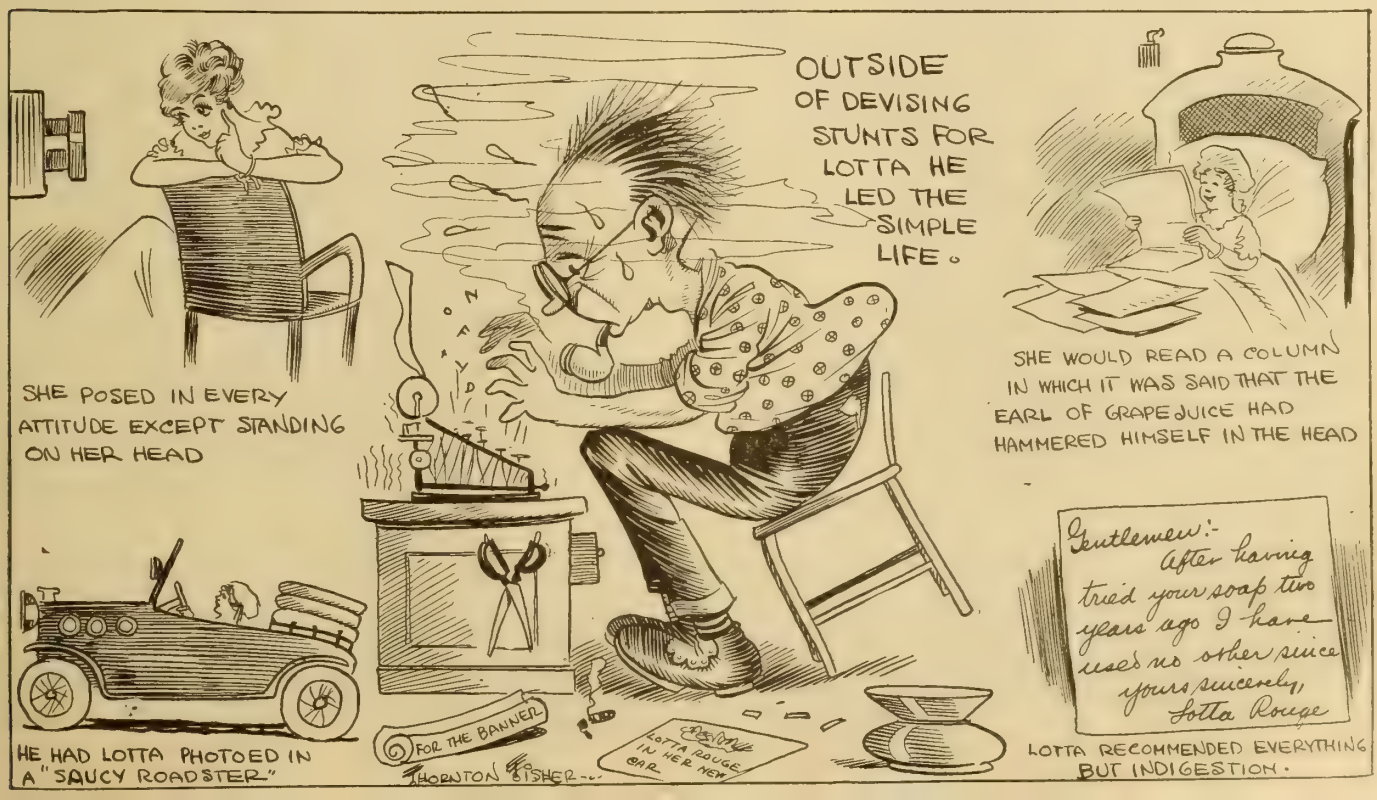
FILDEW BECOMES MEMBER OF ALLISON STAFF.

William E. Fildew has joined the camera staff at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. He will crank the cinema machine for Director Wilfred Lucas in the making of the forthcoming May Allison picture, "The Finding of Mary," the dainty star's first west coast production. Fildew was a Metro cameraman for a year in New York and has worked for Fine Arts, Kinemacolor, Majestic and Goldwyn.

Grinding the Crank

With Thornton Fisher

Being the Fable of a Guy of the Press



ONCE upon a time there was a publicity man who said, "This is the life, I guess I'll get busy and everything." So he employed a star for whom he might write some fiction, hired a metal typewriter and slid into first speed. The star was a nice lady who wore the loveliest gowns and had a regular maid and as many marriage fiascos as Ford has cars. So the "pub" man says to the nice star something like this: "Publicity is a great thing. A burglar gets publicity and pounds rock for twenty years. A star gets the Page One stuff and gets a five-year contract for so much mazoom that Rockefeller looks like a man who mortgaged his last year's panama by comparison. The Kaiser don't employ any press agents, but look how that guy keeps Germany in the papers." All of which nearly asphyxiated the nice lady star and she immediately subscribed for forty-five hundred of the country's leading newspapers in exultant anticipation of a popularity propaganda that would have made the Queen of Sheba quit like a dog. She went to a photographer and posed in every attitude except that of standing on her head. At last everything was set and the wise press guy was ready to pull a "Barnum." So one day Miss Lotta Rouge, the lovely star, ascended in an air wagon and flew with the nice aviator around the church steeple and penetrated the cloudy heights, meanwhile dropping her autographs upon the marveling throngs who twisted their heads like guys with stiff necks to witness the lady star cavorting in the heavens. And that night all the papers had it and the press guy got a twenty buck raise and the exchanges were as busy as a goof bailing water out of a leaky skiff supplying the exhibitors with Lotta Rouge's latest film. Over night Lotta's phizog became as familiar to the public as the measles. Then the wise "pub" man borrowed a new Rolls-Ford for a few minutes and had Lotta photographed "getting into her new limousine." After which he continued down "automobile lane" with the nice star and borrowed the "Saucy Roadster" and took a view of Lotta "driving her latest model." Lotta was sure going like lace at the bargain counter. She was there forty ways for a royal flush with the cards stacked in her favor. Six regular film companies broke their legs trying to tie her up to a ten-year contract. She was in as much demand as food in Germany. The press guy got another ten buck raise and a nervous spell turning out stuff about his star. He sat up nights writing advertising recommendations for her, for Lotta was recommending everything but indigestion. As an actress she was a swell dresser and no photograph section in the Sunday papers was complete without her. Competition for her latest releases was so keen that the exhibitors refused to speak to each other. Nobody knew the press guy except his tailor and laundry man. He seldom came up for air. Outside of devising popularity stunts for Lotta, writing six thousand words a day and kidding the editors he led the simple life. Every morning as the flaming sun pierced the boudoir of the nice star, Lotta's maid would serve her breakfast in bed while the second maid delivered Lotta's morning papers. One morning she would read with pleased surprise a column in which it was said that the Earl of Grapejuice had hammered himself in the head with a chisel after Lotta had given him the gate. Next morning perhaps she would discover in the news accounts that the war department was considering appointing her the first lady general in France. The funny thing about it was that the nice lady actress began to fall for her own stuff. She began to believe it. Lotta accused herself of being great and returned a verdict of guilty.

She rode to and from the studio in her robin's-egg blue machine and always reported at the camera two hours late. This lovely vision of feminine beauty was going strong. She had 'em eating out of her mitt. Picture fans were naming their offsprings after her and a tobacco company produced a "Lotta Rouge cut plug chewing tobacco." She almost noticed the nice press guy when she passed him. She seldom passed him, for that gent was leading the life of a recluse writing popular fiction. But one day—one day—the poor press guy withered and cashed in and Lotta sent around half a dozen carnations and her sympathy. Six months later the only persons who knew Lotta was on earth were her mother and the neighbors next door.

Moral—The pen in the hands of a press guy is mightier than the real thing.

FEATURES AND TOPICALS FOR SOLDIERS.

B. L. Steele, professor of physics, Washington State College, Pullman, Washington, visited the Universal exchange in Portland recently to arrange for features to use for the entertainment of the soldiers who will be sent to Pullman for special instruction in the near future. The course at Pullman began June 15, and about 1,500 soldiers were enrolled for special instruction during the summer. Professor Steele paid especial attention to war features in the Current Events, Animated Weekly, etc., and to special features, such as "The Man Without a Country," "The Kaiser" and similar productions.

Interesting Educationals

One Military Subject, One Sport, Two Zoological, One Travel, One Topical, and One Scientific Subject. Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 10" (Pathe).

THIS tenth instalment pictures a visit of King George to the Grand Fleet and gives a comprehensive view of the great fighting body of ships lying in readiness for action. The king is seen moving about among the officers and men. He is shown in conversation with Admiral Beatty and other officers, with Prince Albert, and also greeting the sailors. The knighting of Vice-Admiral Falenham and the farewell of the sailors are fine features.

"The Quest of the Big 'Un" (Educational-Maigne).

A one reel subject arranged by Charles Maigne. This picture will prove a delight not only to those who follow the "fly" in quest of the gamey brook trout of the Catskills, but to lovers of the beautiful in nature. The scenes photographed in the very best style are rampant with the beauties of deep perspectives of wooded valleys and rushing streams; and interwoven with these scenes is a slight story in which Rudolph, the monarch trout of the mountain stream, is pursued by an expert fisherman, caught, and then accidentally let go by a pretty maiden who indulges a desire to caress this splendid specimen of fishhood. The fisherman, thoroughly a gentleman, skilfully covers his disappointment and gallantly declares that he had intended to let it go anyway.

"Birds of Vanity" (Educational-Ditmars).

In this number of the Ditmars subject, which, by-the-way, is his 51st, a proud array of pheasants and peacocks greets the eye. The picture which is something over half a reel in length is delightfully entertaining, and introduces considerable comedy into ordinary bird life. Pheasants of different kinds are shown following their usual habits. These include the Reeves pheasant, the Silver pheasant, the Golden pheasant, the Sombre pheasant, the Chinese pheasant and others. The peacocks vie with one another for the beauty prize, and we are inclined to hand it to the exquisite beauty of the Albino peacock. This picture will be enjoyed by all.

"Prize Beauties of Birdland" (Universal).

In the 79th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found some pleasing views photographed on the farm of G. D. Tilley, at Darien, Conn. Among the species of fowl that are shown are the Bronze domestic turkey, and the White Silky fowl from Japan which are worth $250 apiece. Muscovy ducks from South America, a Chinese goose and a Mandarin duck and also the Rouen duck from France are also to be seen.

"Roseau, Dominica" (Post Film-Pathe).

Views taken on the island of Dominica, in the British West Indies, are included in this interesting number. It is one of a series picturing the islands of the West Indies and others of the Carribean sea. A great deal of tropical beauty appears in this, together with views of the natives at work and play. This is the land the Calabash pipes come from.

"Dogs of War" (Universal).

The Shepherd Police Dog is the center of attraction in this subject found in the 79th issue of the Screen Magazine. In sub-title his virtues are extolled while groups of his kind pose obligingly for the camera. It takes a seven-foot fence to keep him from going "over the top" we learn, and his usefulness as one would expect includes the saving of drowning persons as well as the locating of the wounded on the battlefield, which vocation he has but recently found.

"Motion Analyzed" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 127th release of the Pictograph will be found an interesting analysis of motion. These pictures were taken at the rate of 80 exposures to the second and are made to follow views of athletes in motion at normal speed, giving slow illustration of what really does happen with every movement of the muscles in jumping, falling or running. This method of the analysis of motion is not new but always interesting.

Getting the Flying Sensation

U. S. Marine Corps Pictures Photographed Under S. L. Rothapfel's Supervision at Miami, Fla., Prove Startling Success.

IF the use of the three reels of wonderful aviation pictures which were photographed for the U. S. Marine Corps Publicity Bureau at the aviation field at Miami, Fla., are desired, it will be necessary to communicate with the Committee on Public Information. These pictures were photographed under the personal supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, and were exhibited for the first time at the Rivoli Theater, New York City the week of June 30.

In looking at these pictures one gets as nearly as possible, without actually being in an aeroplane, the sensation of flying. The photography employed in the taking of the pictures is exceptionally good, and as the machines circle through the air sometimes at startlingly close range and sometimes at a distance which makes them appear like a flock of birds, the gleam of the sunlight on their bodies can be plainly seen. Through all three reels we live literally in the sky. From our plane the photographs are being taken; and there is no feeling other than the exhilaration of supposing oneself aloft in a lighter-than-air machine, until our pilot takes a sudden notion to loop the loop or make a tail spin. At this moment the heavens and the earth seem to meet in the most astounding fashion, and we wonder at the clearness of brain which must be a necessary adjunct of the successful aviator.

An interesting part of this group of scenes which occurs in reel three takes us to the assembling ground where the novice learns all about his machine.

Items of Interest.

The following are longer dramatic pictures for the family and for young people which have been used successfully for special programs in theaters: Goldwyn—"Joan of Plattsburg," "All Woman"; Metro—"The Winning of Beatrice," "Cyclone Higgins, D.D."; Paralta—"An Alien Enemy"; Paramount—"Selfish Yates," "M'liss," "Missing," "His Own Home Town," "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," "Prunella," "Hit the Trail Holliday," "Believe Me Xantippe"; Pathe—"Ruler of the Road"; Select—"De Luxe Annie"; Universal—"$5,000 Reward"; Vitagraph—"The Little Runaway"; World—""The Journey's End."

E. M. Newman, the famous traveler and lecturer, whose splendid scenic "Through the Nation's Parks," is released the first week in July by the Educational Films Corporation, has written to the home offices in New York from Paris on the eve of his visiting the war front. He says:

"Life goes on here as before, more soldiers perhaps and food plentiful but very expensive. No one seems to mind Big Bertha or the air raids. American soldiers are everywhere and very popular. France and England look to us and we must finish the job. Paris is not quite so gay but just as attractive as ever. Now for a tin hat and what goes with it and I am off."

PROMOTIONS IN WORLD PICTURES SALES FORCE.

World Pictures announces the promotion of Norman Moray from chief clerk of the New York branch office to be assistant manager of New York branch office.

Harry M. White, from special assignment, New York branch office, to become manager of the Indianapolis branch office. Nat Barach resigned to go with the colors.

This is in line with the policy of World Pictures to promote its own men who have made good.

John Van Denbroek Is Drowned

Cameraman for Maurice Tourneur Washed Out to Sea by a High Wave at Bar Harbor.

JOHN VAN DENBROEK, cameraman with the Maurice Tourneur Film Company of New York, was accidentally drowned at Schooner Head, Me., near Bar Harbor, Saturday, June 29, when he was swept off his feet by a huge wave while filming a scene in a photoplay under way here. At the time of the accident the company was in the vicinity of Spouting Horn making a picture, and Mr. Van Denbroek was on a ledge close to the sea, with his back to the water, using his camera. The sea was rough and a heavy swell was running. The director urged Mr. Van Denbroek not to stand so close to the water, but the cameraman said there was no danger and stuck to his post.

The company had been working all the forenoon when at about 12:30 a high wave came in with overwhelming power and took Mr. Van Denbroek and his camera out to sea. It happened so quickly that the other members of the company were powerless to render their companion aid, and he was drowned before their eyes. At the time of writing the body had not been recovered. The death of Mr. Van Denbroek, who was twenty-three years of age and unmarried, cast a gloom among the members of the company, with whom he was very popular.

Mr. Tourneur pays a high tribute to his assistant. "Van Denbroek was an artist, and didn't consider his own safety when he saw the opportunity of taking a beautiful effect," he said. "He risked his life many times and in the end gave his life for his art. For more than four years the boy worked with me every day, from morning to night. He is responsible for all the splendid photography of 'Barbary Sheep,' 'The Bluebird,' 'Prunella' and all the others. He was more than a cameraman; he was a lovely, sensitive, delicate artist. My intention was to surprise him by making him a director next fall, and he would have been among the best ones. He was loved by everybody."

Van Denbroek was born in Rotterdam, Holland, and educated there. He had been in America for seven years, being with Mr. Tourneur for the last four years.

SUNDAY CLOSING DOESN'T WORRY CINCINNATIANS.

Few Cincinnati exhibitors were present at the meeting held in Columbus a few days ago for the purpose of discussing the status of Sunday-closing agitation and of formulating proposed legislation to end the matter once and for all. The existence of a law which has several times been construed as making Sunday theatrical exhibitions of any sort illegal is, at best, an annoyance, but as it is in every respect a dead letter in the larger cities, including Cincinnati, most of the exhibitors are not doing any worrying about it. However, it is probable the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio will ask for the repeal of the old law at the next legislature, believing that it is not now representative of public sentiment, and that consequently its existence is an injustice to the exhibitors, who are forced by it to keep their doors closed on what would otherwise be their busiest day.

MARGUERITE COURTOUT ADOPTS A BATTERY.

Marguerite Courtot has taken on responsibilities which would cause many an older and bolder person to hesitate. She has been and gone and adopted—that's the word—a whole battery of Uncle Sam's gunners. Moreover, she has promised to answer every letter she receives from each of her "boys," as she calls them, and see to it that they are kept supplied with chocolates and cigarettes. It goes without saying that this will be no small job.

Battery E, 126th Field Artillery, U. S. N. G., stationed at Camp Merritt, after viewing a picture in which Miss Courtot was starred, sent an invitation to her to visit the camp. Miss Courtot came, saw and was conquered. Then and there she was installed with full military honors as the Battery's adopted "Mother."

KENNETH HARLAN AT CAMP KEARNY.

Kenneth Harlan, popular matinee idol, who has supported numerous Bluebird and Universal stars, has been called to the colors and is now stationed with the Fortieth Division at Camp Kearny, Linda Vista, California.

Harlan supported Mary MacLaren in "A Model's Confession"; Mae Murray in "Her Body in Bond" and "Forgive Me"; Carmel Myers in "The Wife He Bought," "My Unmarried Wife," "The Wine Girl" and "The Marriage Lie," and co-starred with Ruth Clifford in "Midnight Madness."

Utica Theaters to Open Sunday, July 14

Managers Decide on This Action Following a Conference With City's Mayor.

AN announcement which will come as a surprise to exhibitors of New York State and those showmen who have been attempting to open their picture houses on Sunday is that the city of Utica, one of the larger cities in the state, will open its moving picture houses on Sunday, July 14. The fight for Sunday pictures here has been a big one and has extended for over a period of four years when Dr. A. L. Bender opened his Bender Theater here on a Sunday in 1914. His house was closed within a half hour after he opened, and he fought the case throughout the courts even to the Court of Appeals, but to no avail. Bills introduced in the Legislature at Albany were defeated.

A conference was held in Utica, July 2, at which Mayor James D. Smith heard the arguments of the theater managers of the city that Sunday pictures should be permitted in Utica. The managers said that under existing laws they have a right to open their theaters on Sunday just as many other cities of the state are doing. Several theaters have already arranged for films for the first Sunday on which they will open. The managers stated further that they will govern their opening hour so that it will not interfere with the church services.

A new argument was brought up by the managers at the meeting which was that Sunday baseball has been discontinued in this section, and that there is, therefore, a need for clean and wholesome entertainment. They laid stress upon this argument by stating that such recreation is necessary in war time. As a large number of persons are now employed in the Savage Arms Corporation, a plant manufacturing the famous Lewis machine guns exclusively, there are many who will welcome this form of entertainment in Utica on Sundays. It is a matter of conjecture as to whether or not Sunday shows will pay in Utica in the summer, as there are a number of nearby resorts and amusement parks, but it is certain that in the winter the open houses on Sunday will easily prove their popularity by playing to capacity.

Just how the plan will meet with the public in general remains to be seen, but of course there will be a clique to oppose the plan while there are others who will heartily approve of it.

Big Week For Famous Players-Lasky

Seventy-nine Theaters in New York City Territory Showed Paramounts and Artcrafts in Week of July 1.

THE week of July 1, designated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as "Paramount and Artcraft Week" in and around New York City, established a new high mark for the New York exchange of the big organization. Seventy-nine leading theaters in this territory showed Paramount and Artcraft pictures every day during the week.

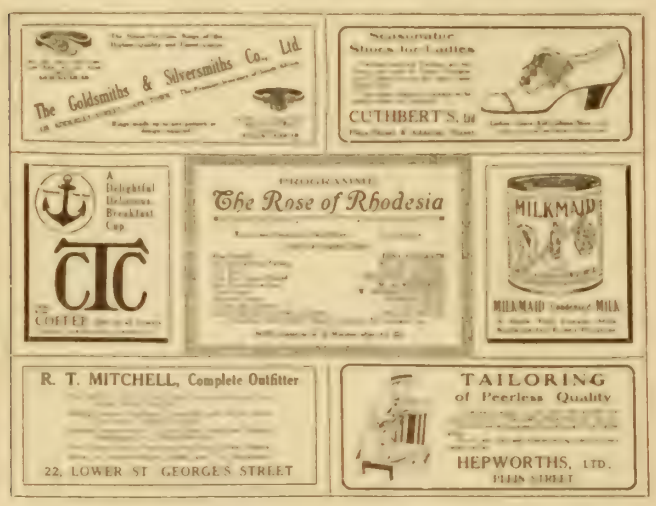
The observation of "Paramount and Artcraft Week" in these theaters also marked a most striking example of close co-operation between distributor and exhibitor in the exploitation of pictures. A newspaper campaign, in which the distributors advertised for the exhibitor his program for the entire week and in which a number of the larger exhibitors took additional space, tying up with the big advertising, offered a most effective exploitation plan.

In the New York Evening Telegram, the New York Evening Mail and other newspapers there appeared page advertisements, announcing the daily attraction of each theater. The Telegram on Sunday carried four solid pages. One of the pages consisted of a directory of the seventy-nine theaters and the attraction they would show. These theaters included all three of Broadway's big theaters—the Strand, Rivoli and Rialto—thirteen Marcus Loew and sixty-three other houses. In addition the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation shared with the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli in the placing of three full-page advertisements of their respective attractions for the week—Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" "Charles Ray in the Ince production, "The Claws of the Hun," and William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe."

NEW YORK TICKET TAKER FINED $50.

Murray Sternberg, ticket taker of the Crescent theater, 38 West 135th street, was arraigned in Special Sessisions Court, before Justices Edwards, Collins and Murphy, July 1, charged by William H. Nickels, of the Children's Society, with admitting Napoleon Hauser, a twelve-year-old boy. He pleaded guilty and was fined $50, with an alternative of ten days in prison.

Advertising for Exhibitors



Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Study These Pages.

BECAUSE he uses first runs an exhibitor writes that this department does not give him much service. So long as he feels that way about it this department is of no use to him whatever. This is not so much a department on how to advertise certain selected subjects as it is a critical study of advertising to help the reader advertise films in general, and unless it is taken in this light it does not perform the fullest service it can give the reader. If you have played a certain film and see a paragraph telling how another house advertised that same film, do not pass over the item because you have already advertised that particular title. Read the story, and you may glean a hint as to how to advertise some other title next week or next month. Keep the paper on file, and look it over now and then to refresh your memory. Be able to show a reproduction to your printer, and tell him you want something like that. Don't think that because one man raises a mock tombstone for "The Kaiser" that you can use the idea only for "The Kaiser." You can use the same stunt for any one of half a dozen other films from "My Four Years in Germany" to the Red Cross propaganda story. This department is not so much a news feature as it is a study of advertising in general. It presents each week some of the best work of the men at the head of the profession. These advertisements tell you how to advertise rather than how to advertise this film or that. Study the department each week. Learn what others are doing and how they are doing it, and you will be better able to do your own work. It is not so much the advertising of any one picture that counts. It is the advertising of all pictures that is important. Most companies give you ready made advertisements for special plays, but it is the purpose of this department to show you how practical men, rather than press agents, have done their work, and unless you regard the department as educational rather than news you are losing most of the benefit you can derive from these pages.

From South Africa.

The cut shows the center pages of a program of Fisher's, Cape Town, South Africa. The program is printed on better paper than can be had with us around here these days, and looks very neat. It is eight pages, pages 5½ by 8½, with write-ups for Harold Shaw, formerly an Edison director, and his camera man, and with a photograph of Mrs. Shaw (Edna Flugrath) on the cover. Apart from this and two advertisements on the inside back cover the cut shows the only house space, the rest being taken up with trade advertisements. We think that the house could have profited by the use of more chat.

Vaudeville and——

Sydney Pollock, the sixteen (he must be seventeen by now) year old advertising manager of his father's house at North Tarrytown, N. Y., says we are mistaken on the sort of vaudeville he runs, and cites Elsie Janis as one of his headliners and also names a Hippodrome act. We did not know that Miss Janis had come down to split weeks yet. His vaudeville may be above the average, but as a rule the sort of acts that will play picture theaters are not first-class, nor yet third or fourth class. He seems to be getting a better grade of act than the average, but we do not think that most of them match well with really good photoplays. He must have the advantage of stopping a jump. He has cut down to one feature, a comedy and an educational, as he writes that his patrons come in later these daylight-saving times, and it is necessary to give a short show if he is to run two a night. He claims that they made more money with the double feature. But would he keep on making more money? That's the point.

Handy Heralds.

Pathe is getting out heralds for "The House of Hate," with the back page left blank for the advertisement of the exhibitor. The cut shows one of these back printed by the Amuse-U, Lincolnton, N. C., with the program for a half week. The same herald is used during the run of the serial, but the copy is changed for each instalment. There is no reason why all heralds should not give the exhibitor room to use for himself, and every reason why he should be given decent space for house use, but heralds that give him more space than three postage stamps would cover are rare indeed.

Stoning the Kaiser.

E. N. Collins, of the Liberty, Elextra, Texas, sends in a photograph of his lobby dressed for "The Kaiser." Just in front of the box office is a tombstone for the Kaiser, the epitaph being the doggerel verse on the Hennegan novelty, which is not in the best of taste even for a propaganda story. At the base of the stone are a lot of rocks and cacti, the rocks being lettered with the title and amounts of the three Liberty Loans, which are supposed to cover the grave of the Kaiser. This is good, and can be elaborated with other details such as the troops abroad and in training, the Red Cross fund, and similar displays of patriotism. Profanity and cheap phrase are not in place around a picture theater. It would be possible to originate a stronger epitaph without the use of such material. The idea in the main is excellent.

Well Put.

E. P. Cox, of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, gives a new twist to the old war tax announcement. Others have found that you help the Government when you pay the tax, but Mr. Coe puts it—

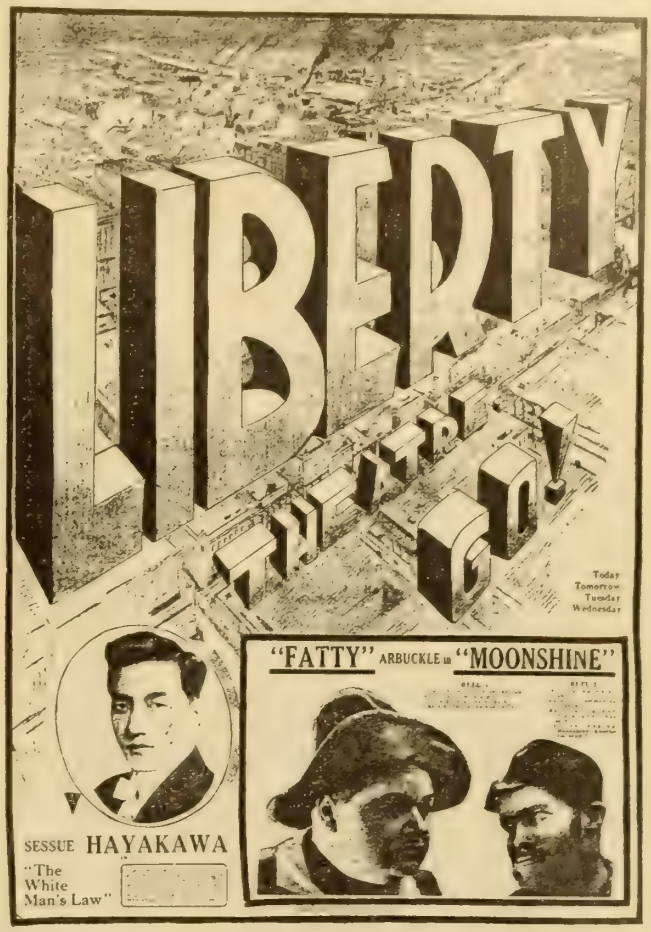
KEEP THIS IN MIND—that every time you attend any theater (through the war tax) you TAKE A SHOT AT A HUN, and statistics show that it takes several thousand shots to kill one Hun.

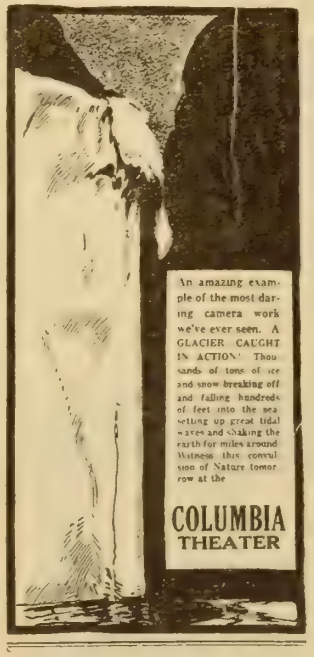
Mr. Coe works another good idea. He runs a calendar underline, and when he has an open date he merely writes "Not booked" instead of announcing "Great surprise" or some similar rot. It gives the impression that he books with care, and it does not get the goat of the intelligent part of the patronage. He does not cry "Wolf" until he sees what it is.

Getting in With the Town.

The Theater Wilbert, Plaquemine, La., was only opened this year, but it has been hustling right along. Lately, Lionel Delacroix donated the house to the Thursday Music Club for an organ recital by a New Orleans organist, thereby winning the attention of the town to the fact that the organ in the house was a superior instrument, bringing out many who do not usually attend picture performances, and getting himself solid with the club and their friends. The club got out a 32-page program that is as much an advertisement for the house as it was a source of revenue to the club. It is good work along the right lines, but we can't see a five-part feature being run through in 55 minutes even if there was an otherwise long program.



Had to Run.



Manager Charles W. Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, was up against it the other week. He had "Intolerance," "A Dog's Life," and "Tarzan of the Apes" all in the one week, and he was hard put to get all three on the front page of his Movie Fan, but he managed to locate them all. The Movie Fan, by the way, has closed its third year, an excellent record for a newspaper size four and eight-pager. Most houses drop down after a few months, but the Movie Fan stays put. It pays because Decker makes it pay. That's the secret.

Ruff Stuff.

Here is an example of what the patient exhibitor is up against. The stills or The Sign Invisible did not work well from an advertising point of view, and Ralph Ruffner worked up this three-sixteens from the press book, adding some groundwork to the figure taken from the press sheet. It would seem that good stills should accompany the state rights stories, but most of the stills are prepared by the cameraman, who may have no idea as to what constitutes a good advertising photo. This is the trouble that managers face all the time. The stills are made by persons who have no knowledge of the advertising end, and who probably would not care if they had. They shoot "dramatic" scenes and send them along whether they fit or not, and it is only by lucky chance that they fit. In this case a single figure was picked up and made use of, but there should be some effort made to supply exhibitors with proper materials for advertising purposes. We have passed the days when a ten-inch space was considered remarkable. This display is 48 inches, and it is through no credit of the company making the picture that the space was provided with an attractor The lower part of the space is given to a news film, featuring some pictures of the leper settlement, but the display can well take in two features of one bill, and it does not detract from the longer length to play up the single reel. A corking good advertisement is shown in the five sixteens reproduced here. The major portion of the space is taken up with the house name and the slogan, but it brings attention to the double bill with the major portion of the space driving in the house name. The house gets about two-thirds of the space, and it is the only advertisement we recall having seen that drives the house name in so prominently. We think it pays, because the house will still be there when the films are playing elsewhere, and it is just as important to feature the house as the attraction. Of course this sort of thing would not do for every day or every week, but for a "just once" it is hard to beat. Ruff always has favored the block letter in perspective, and used it frequently in Spokane. It looks just as well in the Portland papers. The small cut shows a special two-tens for a scenic. Apparently Ruff finds that it pays to play up these scenics and educationals, for he has several times played up the Finley Nature Pictures, but this special advertisement for an attraction to be shown the following day is something new. It is an unusual scenic, for that matter, but it takes nerve to pay newspaper space for a scenic, and it is in glaring contrast to the days when the scenic was tolerated as a necessary filler and left as severely alone as possible. As a matter of fact, sometimes a good scenic or educational will draw more business than a five-reel feature; particularly a feature that does not utilize the services of a star of the first rank, and people who get the scenic habit will pay just as good money as those who come in for the drama. If you can get both classes you will be getting more money and more money will more than pay the cost of the extra advertising. Make more of your own educationals, play them up to the schools and give them special readers now and then. The experiment will not cost much and it certainly will interest you if you follow up the results.

All in German.

The Box Office Attractions Co., of Detroit, has gotten out a very effective bit of advertising for The Caillaux Case and other Fox war pictures. It is printed with German type, but in English, and purports to be a warning from the German Government against displaying the propaganda films for the sake of the extra money you will make. It is hard to get at the idea for a moment, and you are started reading before you get the drift and then you follow it through. The suggestion is made that the posters in German be put up at night by permission of the police, then when they are torn down in the morning by those unable to read German the press story breaks. We think it would be better to adapt the circular with the English spelling to a warning against a certain play to be shown and to mail these out. The effect is apt to be better, and the advertisement will get further.

For Pro-Germans.

Here is a good idea from the Grand, Faribault, Minn., but we think than an even better effect could be gained by double printing, using stock the same size as the usual ticket instead of a card 3 by 4 inches.

We do not know what the attraction was, but presumably it was The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin. It would fit any propaganda film, however, and it would work a little better were the title worked into the ticket, as "This ticket will admit one to witness the performance of The Kaiser the Beast of Berlin," with the dates following and then the declaration, "I am a friend of the Kaiser," with the line for signature below. It is a good idea and a new one, capable of much extension and always calculated to work longer than the film does. The Grand also sends in a neat program, a sheet 5½ by 6¼. Two inches of the wide measurement are printed as a flap to fold over onto the remainder of the sheet, which carries the program for the month. The program is neatly set, carrying eighteen changes in the space and still with a good display. We reproduce a small section to give the idea.

Schedule of Attractions for The Month of

Saturday, 1st	WM. S. HART in "The Narrow Trail" Comedy and Scenic Pictures
Sunday, 2nd	EARLE WILLIAMS in "In the Balance" "Hungry Lions in a Hospital" Sunshine comedy
Mon. & Tues. 3-4	Maeterlinck's "THE BLUEBIRD" Screen Telegram

The reproduction is almost normal size. By the use of uniform type the entire month is shown in good display. It is not a question of the size of the type but the relative sizes which determines the advertising value.

Uses Billboards.

S. P. Clark of the Park theater, Passaic, N. J., uses bill boards for house advertising and wisely puts copy that does not require frequent changes. Painted boards are not to be used for film advertising. Advertise the house instead, and it will be found that it will turn attention to the house advertising in the newspapers at the last of current attractions is desired. It is just as essential to boom the house as a place of entertainment as to announce this subject or that as a means of entertainment. It is more important, in a way, because the house advertising lasts over while the films may be there but a day or so. Boom the house at all times.

Uses Lines.

Because he has to fight a lot of extra black reverse cuts, Harold B. Franklin, of the Hippodrome, Buffalo, uses the outline frames, and in a recent Sunday advertisement about two-fives deep, he goes a bit further and uses a line benday effect instead of solid black. As a result, the advertisement stood out on the page and got the first reading. It is not a matter of how large and black a cut may be. It is purely a question of how distinctive it is, and on a page of blacks, or with blacks in the majority, the light-line cut will stand out because it is so different from the rest. Previous reproductions of pages with the Hippodrome advertising standing out has proven this, but the benday effect is something new and worth while passing along. And note the box below the title announcing that the feature will not be shown elsewhere within thirty days. We are approaching what the English exhibitor calls "exclusives." The only thing we do not like about the advertisement is the lack of a date. Sunday to Wednesday is not as definite as the actual date, even though it is not to be supposed that a reader will keep the daily paper by him for several weeks.

The Hill Expands.

The Hill theater, Newark, has expanded its card program into a four-pager, with house talk on the front and a trade advertisement on the back. The house talk is announced as a "Weekly Letter," in the first issue, so we presume that the letter form will be adhered to. It is suggested that the signature of the manager will be better than the non-committal "The Manager." The signed announcement is greatly to be preferred to the other form and means much more. There seems to be a disposition to blame rebookings on "By special request." This phrase has been so sadly abused that it no longer carries weight with the average person and is apt to be looked upon as an apology. If a film is shown for a return engagement, the effort should be made to create the impression that it is brought back because it did so well the first time. It should be an act of the management and not be blamed upon an anonymous patron. A rather poor feature of the first program is a lack of uniformity of arrangement. One page is all display type and a second carries so much description that there is no display. Each hurts the other style. Either there should be a reader for each feature or none for any.

Needs Identification.

A. D. Cloakey, of the Allen, Calgary, uses a reproduced telegram to advertise The Bluebird, using both the normal size sheet and one 21 by 32. It is signed merely "Rothapfel, Director Rivoli-Rialto." We do not think that this carries much weight. The average patron in Western Canada knows little and cares less about Rothapfel and will not be impressed by his recommendation. Where he is known, his habit of endorsing is also well known and again the advertisement fails of its effect. It no longer carries as much weight with the trade to be endorsed by Rothapfel and the general patron out of town is apt to be even less impressed. The Bluebird, in particular, needs no endorsement. The play is by far the better known and should have been boomed for itself. The Allen does better with a coupon offering a free ride on the sight seeing car to children attending the matinee, but here, again, the film rises superior to the boosting attraction. Advertising could have been so attractively worded that the children would have come without any premium. An over effort on behalf of a really good film will defeat its own aim in that it will seem to the patron that the film needing such extraneous boosting must be bad enough to need this outside aid.

Notice!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

Giving It Time.

SYNOPSES take time to write, even if they are comparatively short. Lately an alleged author told of a script he had written in a day, but confessed that he had put in part of the previous day on a preliminary synopsis. Then came a man with a synopsis he was going to sell to a certain company. It ran between five and six thousand words. "It took a little more than two weeks to write," he replied, in answer to a question, "but, man, it's all there. I bet I sell it this afternoon." He did, and he got $750 for it, because all of it was "there." The editor did not have to use his own imagination. The whole synopsis was mapped out so that all he had to do was to visualize. All of the little points made were dovetailed into the other points. The editor did not have to figure that this or that thing happened "because." He knew that it happened on account of some other specified action. He did not have to invent excuses, the story was properly motivated. It took two weeks to get the story down so clearly that any person of average intelligence could get the idea. There was no trusting to luck, no omission of details on the argument that the editor ought to know that this or that was the case. It was all put before him because the author knew that the editor wanted a complete and finished story, and not merely something from which a story might be made. He confessed that it was more work than writing the continuity, but he knew that it would bring more money than a continuity, and so he was willing to give the extra time for the additional payment. He knew, too, that he stood a better chance of getting it over with the director. He knew from his own editorial experience that the director was prone to change and alter and that he stood the best chance of avoiding detrimental alterations by giving the director the least possible excuse for changing. If a director is forced to supply the psychology for the story, he will supply his own psychology and the story will require radical alteration to meet this new angle. Possibly the director will make ruinous changes anyway, but the surest way to prevent this is to make the story so clearly defined in both plot and psychology that the director has no alibi. The editor knows that the story was a good one when it went to the director. If there is something wrong on the screen, then the director, and not the author is at fault, and the editor retains his confidence in the author and will buy other stories from him. If the director can argue that the synopsis was so incomplete that he was compelled to fix it up, then both the editor and the author stand in a bad light. Take the time to get the synopsis right. Get it all down, even if it does take two or three weeks. When we get more of these stories coming into the studios, we shall have more original stories on the screen and fewer book adaptations, for the editor will then feel more safe in buying from a market in which the supply will meet the demand. Even some of the old-timers are doing sloppy work in their synopses. They do not realize the importance of getting the story all down. It is necessary to write in the psychology as well as the plot, to explain why things happen as well as to tell that they do happen. It is not sufficient merely to say that Mary dislikes John. Give an adequate reason for Mary's dislike, and this will, to a large extent, help the director to understand what sort of a girl Mary is and why John is the villain instead of the hero. It may be that the reason for this dislike does not appear in the story, but tell it, anyway, for the better exposition of the characters of Mary and John. Do not tell that Jack kills Henry "in a sudden fit of rage." Explain that Jack thinks that Henry has spread a slander about Mary and that he is preparing to still further traduce her character. Then the director can frame up the action to suit the motive instead of planning the killing to suit his own ideas. Of course this attention to detail may be abused as sadly as the avoidance of details, but a little practise will soon show the trained author about how much to write, and what the untrained man does is of small consequence at best. He will learn better when he has become a real author and not a student.

Do As You're Told.

A Chicago correspondent gets all het up because he is told not to send his continuity with his synopsis. He argues:

> This forced custom may well apply to those who send a crude continuity as a result of their haste, but to me it really hurts, as my work represents the labors of two years and a half.

Evidently he thinks that because he has spent two years and a half studying photoplay form he should be made an exception to the rule. To begin with, two years and a half is not such a long time to have given to the study of a subject that pays so well as photoplay synopses now pay, when they pay at all. In the second place, he can write a better synopsis as a result of these studies without having to send along the continuity, and even two and a half years' work has not yet taught him to do as he is told and not as he wants to. There is nothing to prevent any writer from sending in continuities if he so desires, and there is nothing to require the editor to read these undesired continuities. He knows that the man who does not know enough to follow the rules is not apt to know enough to write a good play. All synopses with continuities attached are generally thrown out on this broad principle.

Some authors seem to think that the market should be as they think it should be rather than as it is, and when there is any departure from what they individually regard as the proper procedure they proceed to yell their heads off instead of giving time to their plays. It is not probable that they even stop to figure out the reasons. It's all wrong merely because it is not their way.

We do not like the synopsis-only idea. We never did, and never shall, but studios think this is the best plan, and since it is their money which pays for the work the work must be done their way. The motion picture differs from the fiction story. The fiction story is a definite form. The written words give the final result. It may be set in eight point type or twelve point, but the story is precisely the same. The play is different. The author merely suggests certain lines of action. The director either seeks to reproduce this action or follows his own ideas. If he follows the author's idea, at best he can only give his version of the author's action. It is not like a dance where the choreographic symbols can be used; at best the most careful following of the author's scene will largely be influenced by the personality of the director and the players. The same players under the same director may not give the same results twice playing from the same script.

It is argued that since the director can at best but imperfectly realize the author's idea it is better to give him a free hand and permit him to have the continuity constructed by someone in sympathy with his ideas and able to shape the plot to his liking and understanding. For this reason the details are asked for in synopsis instead of in scene layout, and the synopsis only is requested. When the continuity accompanies the script it has been found that the bulk of the details will be found in the continuity despite the care of the author, and so the sending of the continuity is discouraged, and those who follow this practice immediately mark their work as that of an inexperienced and therefore inexpert writer.

No matter what line of work you follow you must please the purchaser rather than yourself. To be dictator you must first get the money. And you cannot consider yourself an exception to the rule. There are no exceptions.

Staff and Free Lance.

The money is not as regular if you are free-lancing as it is when you have a staff job and get an envelope every Saturday, but free-lancing is apt to prove best in the long run. The staff man is apt to work along a certain line favored by the studio until he can write in no other direction. If he loses his position he is handicapped in the general market. He is apt to find, too, that he has grown careless, knowing that his stuff must be used as it is written. If he does not do his very best, he is doing well enough to get by for a time, but when he ceases to get by then he discovers that he is out of the habit of writing good stories that will sell in the open market. On the other hand the free-lance is continually kept upon his toes. He knows that unless he writes something better than the staff man he stands no chance of a sale, so he does his best at all times and is more regular in his sales. If one company stops buying he has other connections and is only slightly inconvenienced. It may not seem as nice to be a free-lance, but it pays best in the long run and gives a better future.

Playing Personality.

Speaking of a recent production Wid Gunning proclaims that the weak story is "saved" by the dominating personality of the star. He does not realize that the star's rather unusual personality would be no asset were it not that plays were written to suit this personality. We happen to know that this story was written with one idea in mind of fitting one of the robust screen stars; not this particular one, but one of his type. And to that end all the work was thrown to the star, giving him his opportunity. And yet the author receives no credit and the star is given all. This would not be worthy of comment were it not that it represents an all too common condition of affairs. If the story is good, the star saves it. If he fails then the author is to blame. A man of a desert island might have a pocket full of diamonds and yet be hungry and thirsty. The most appealing personality is useless without a vehicle, and the better the vehicle fits the less apt is the critic to give credit for the story. He does not realize that the story is what makes the star possible. He sees merely the good action of the star and gives credit. Unless the critic is a man of sufficient intelligence to know, he should at least refrain from commenting upon the story. He is apt to do the author an injustice.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Richardson Saves the Bacon.

AT the request of the officials of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. O. unions the editor of this department went to Washington on the "Work or Fight" order as affecting projectionists and had a talk with Colonel Warren with favorable results. Read the story on page 365 of this issue.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Insult to Projectionist.

Perry Sherman, Corpus Christi, Texas, is with us again with the following:

> I was a bit puzzled by Friend Miller's statement. Concluded he believed what he said, but was a little out of date as to some points. He says the single meniscus lens is used by some advanced pictorial photographers. This I am not able to agree with, nor with the statement that they are used in any of the leading studios. So far as I am informed they are used only by small, country photographers. They are very cheap, costing around five dollars for the lens itself. As for the rapid rectilinear lenses they are not trust anastigmats. As to the circle of confusion modern lenses are corrected for this down to 1-1,000 of an inch. As applies to the motion picture industry the only lens worth considering is the anastigmat, it being the only one which will give a perfectly sharp image with any size opening, which means that it will pass more light, as it can be worked with a larger aperture than can the meniscus or rapid rectilinear. I would also inform Friend Miller that the true anastigmat is an expensive lens—that is the really good ones are. The Glauker Models range from $150.00 to $325.00 in price.
> It has long been my contention that the lenses ordinarily supplied with projectors are an insult to the intelligence of the projectionist. By the use of cheap lenses we are forcing inferior screen results on the public and doing injustice to the work of our producers. Although the camera departments of our studios invest small fortunes in fine lenses and fine work in developing, printing, and tinting combine to produce some marvels of photographic excellence it is all shot onto the screen by CHEAP lenses. The lens manufacturers of England are planning better lenses for the trade after the war. It is to be hoped that our own manufacturers will do the same. The Germans were turning out really splendid lenses when Bill the Kaiser started on his murderous career. The German supply stopped short, of course, and today our own optical manufacturers are forging to the front, and we will soon be teaching the German his own game in lens making, as we have in other things he thought before the war he owned.

And by golly he pretty nearly did, too. But the day of German superiority is Past (observe the capital P, please). In future, "Made in the U. S." will be the hall mark of excellence. Don't know where you got your dope on the English manufacturers. Hope it is right. As to our own lens makers, I was talking with one of the head men of the Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Company recently, and he made the positive statement that they were right now making the best possible lens for projection purposes; that if I or any one could show them a better one they would gladly produce it. But with this, I take serious exception. That they are making a very wonderful lens for the money I freely grant. But that a very much better lens cannot be made for more money I dispute. Or at least I firmly believe a better lens can be made for more money. I fall back on the proposition: Why pay large sums of money for a camera lens if its work is to be done in reverse by a cheap lens? Maybe I'm wrong, but they have got to prove that fact to me before I'll believe it. I am not a lens man, and don't profess to be. But I do know that one plus one makes two, and common sense applies in lens problems as well as in other matters. An anastigmat lens is a more highly corrected lens than is the lens ordinarily used for projection. There is no reason why it won't work equally well, as applies to the conditions of projection, hence it will, as a matter of plain common sense, work BETTER, it being a more highly corrected lens. The only trouble is it is more expensive as to first cost, and is apt to be more expensive in operation, since, as I understand the matter, it cannot be had in large diameters.

His Lonesome Life.

P. L. Boardwell, Hood River, Oregon, arises to make the following pertinent remarks:

> For the first time in my lonesome life I am going to bust into the Projection Department. Have been in the business two years and am projecting pictures at the Liberty theater, this village. Hood River is a town of about 2,500 souls, and we claim to have the best theater for a town of this size in the entire west. I have sufficient nerve to say that no theater in the west puts up a better projection than we do. Yes, that's saying a whole lot, but allee samee I firmly believe that it is true. And, by the way, when are you coming to Portland again? That is the only place I could hope to go to hear you. It is sixty-five honest miles away, but when you come again I'm going to be there. We have a Simplex and Motiograph DeLuxe and I like the latter machine very well indeed, but I also like the Simplex very well also. They both put on a rock-steady projection, and I think that is Jake. (Say, are you from Chicago? "Jake" is Chicago slang for "good" "allright." Ed.) I have just constructed one of those ten-minute rewinds, and it too is Jake. I took the regular Motiograph rewind and reversed the gears, put an 8-inch pulley on the rewind and a 1-inch on the motor, which latter turns up to 1,700 r. p. m. Quite classy! Quite considerable classy! I also second the motion that manufacturers put out a left-hand projector. It would, I think, be a very acceptable improvement. Am sending small photo of the Motiograph as it is installed in my projection room. I have a jake boss. It is only necessary to ask for supplies to get 'em. Have one of your handbooks and a set of Hawkins' Electrical Guides, both of which are invaluable.

If you claim that you can equal the work of some of the large western theaters, friend Boardwell, you certainly have a good, steady nerve, though the thing is not impossible. Duplicating the projection of some of the San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and other Coast cities would, however, be a pretty expensive thing in a town of 2,500, unless your electric power is very low in price. You might duplicate it in every way except brilliancy, however, as you have the projection equipment to do it. Well, anyhow, I am sure you have high-class results, and that is good. Cannot say when I will come west again. Maybe never. Trips of that kind are very trying, and aside from the pleasure of meeting so many good friends, travel has very little attraction. You have done well to reduce your rewinder speed. If more projectionists did that there would not be so much film damage, but it is very hard to get men to realize and understand the importance of such things. They will watch a crooked reel running at high speed, scraping the edge of the film, without apparently having the slightest idea that damage is being done, or that they ought to do anything about it. Time and time again I have showed projectionists their rewinder doing this sort of damage, and have pointed out to them that the standards were not even in line with each other, only to find later that I might as well have talked to a stone post, for all the good it did. It is bad enough to have to be told or shown so simple a thing as that, but to be told, and even then do nothing about it, spells rank incompetency, carelessness and a reckless disregard for property placed in their charge. If the rewinder does not actually rip out some of the film track right before their eyes they seem to imagine that no damage is done. They do not seem to have the power to reason from cause to effect, and to understand that a thing of that kind must inevitably work damage to the films. Either that or they just don't care, so long as the damage is not enough to cause the exchange to charge it to their theater.

The future hope of the profession does not lie in such men ,or in such crude work. It lies in the careful, painstaking, intelligent projectionist who uses his brains and is not too infernal lazy and shiftless to take the trouble to remedy a condition which common sense tells him is wrong. Come again, brother Boardwell, when the spirit moves. Always glad to hear from up to date, progressive men, whether they be in the largest city or smallest hamlet in the land.

The Blow That Killed Father.

Our old friend Moon, Sherman, Texas, shines forth once more with the following:

> The new Handbook is for an apprentice serving under me. He is progressing nicely, this being his fifth month, but gets a little peeved when I occasionally nearly eat him up concerning something I have already corrected him about several times, but you can bet if he serves under me he will learn to do things right, and remember the things I tell him. And now here is the blow that killed father. I have one brand new Type S Simplex, and it is a beauty. The late model speed control is the best I have ever used, bar none; also, I have a two-inch diameter Gundlach lens on the baby, and sure get the results on friend screen. Incidentally, I notice the new Gundlach lens I have has no spacing ring between the two back lenses. I do not consider this as good practice, since should a particle of dirt get between them in replacing after cleaning a scratch would almost inevitably result when the ring is tightened down. Of course this would not occur with the careful man, but—. We have just taken over a panel in the wall of Labor Hall, cleaned it up, and hung our charter, a satin service flag with three stars, a large photograph of the local, and an emblem of the I. A. It certainly looks good, old man. Would like to see you down here again this summer, but am afraid we'd have to feed you on hamburgers and take you for a spin in a mule cart, as we have bought bonds, contributed to the Red Cross, and are doing our "bit" by buying tobacco for the boys. Say, can you imagine that little old Edison on one side and the Type S on the other? Looks like a bird cage beside a coffee mill. Have removed the noisy tin from the projection room floor and put a door in the wall, so that I can now ascend to my domain in dignity befitting its importance via a honest-to-gosh stairway. Maybe now I'll get that other new machine. Best wishes to you and to our department.

I'm glad you have the new projector, Brother Moon, and that it pleases you so well. The Type S is a fine machine, and that is the kind you deserve. Hope friend manager loosens up for a second edition real soon. He must feel guilty every time he looks at the horrible example beside the new projctor. As to Mr. Apprentice man, why (this is for his ear only) you must not imagine because you have served five months, even under a good man, that you know it all. Any idea of that sort will seriously hamper your progress. The very best attitude for you is to try and imagine you know but very little, because the man in that frame of mind is in the best possible mental attitude for learning and making rapid progress. The man who thinks he is already a reservoir of knowledge is very apt to not be keen to acquire more. And here is a secret, friend apprentice—a dark, dense, deadly s-e-c-r-e-t. For Gawd's sake keep it inviolate. On peril of your life don't let it leak out. Sh-h-h-h: I don't know it all, or even nearly all, myself, about projection, although I have studied that subject, with unusual facilities for learning, for many years. That being true, and it is true, five months' apprenticeship has not put you beyond the point where you may still acquire knowledge if you try.

Would like to give that panel the once-over, but there'll be no trips to the Lone Star State for me this summer. I have just purchased a big lot on the ocean beach at South Lyme, Connecticut, 12 miles this side of New London. It is a beauty alright, and all my spare time this summer will be given over to improving it. And I'm going up there in July, peel off my good clothes, clamber into a bathing suit, and just live in the darned thing (suit, I mean) for a month anyhow. I'm going to shoot lobsters on Hatchet reef, snare clams, go in swimming every seventeen minutes if I feel like it, and in my own individual ocean too. And that's where your projection department dope will come from in July, and maybe August, too. We're going to live in a gol darned house tent and co-habit with the bugs, etc. Point o' Woods is the name of the place, and South Lyme is the post office. If any of you Connecticut, Rhode Island, or Massachusetts boys who have gasoline to burn feel like calling for a chat or a swim, why the latch string will be found swaying gently in the breeze, and the welcome mat spread all over the place. Also, I don't like hamburger, and mule-cart joy riding hath no pleasure for me. Nope, sorry, but no Texas for mine this year. My very best to you all, nevertheless, and some day we'll shake hands again; in fact, as I am now doing in the spirit, for the Sherman men are the real, simon-pure, all-wool-and-a-full-yard-wide goods.

How About This?

C. A. H., Decatur, Illinois, asks why it is that some otherwise respectable insurance companies refuse to consider motion picture projectionists?

Did not know any insurance company behaved in such a scandalous manner. If any do I cannot tell you the reason why. Probably because of the stories written by square-head newspaper reporters, with more space to fill than brains, concerning "film explosions." Can any of the good neighbors enlighten us further on this subject?

New Theater—Fine Equipment.

Recently the editor of this department received an invitation to attend the private opening of the Symphony theater, Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, New York, which was accepted. As the new house and its opening already have been described in another section of a previous issue, only the equipment, lighting and projection will be taken up here.

The Symphony theater has every facility for an absolutely ideal auditorium lighting installation, and I at first thought it had the right system. But, alas, it was not so. The ceiling is a series of deep indentations, or coves. I merely use those words for lack of more descriptive ones. These indentations are somewhat in the form of an inverted V, maybe ten feet across at the bottom and several feet deep, or high. They run crosswise of the auditorium. At the back of each of them, and near the bottom, is a light trough, quite similar to a stage border trough, its face covered with some kind of amber-color diffusing material. And that was the chief error. Had they placed proper side shades for each lamp, left the front open, or covered it with a transparent, non-diffusing material, and brought a shade down in front so as to cut off the light at the proper point, the Symphony auditorium would be lighted in an absolutely ideal way, and the lights could be left burning during projection, if desired, without in the least annoying the audience or injuring the projection. But the instant the diffusing covering was placed over the front of the trough, all chance of directing the light where it is wanted, and keeping it away from where it is not wanted, is utterly lost. But anyhow the Symphony management started in the right direction.

The projection that night was fine, with one exception. The light was pure and brilliant, and the speed for the most part correct. I would recommend the use of amberlux ray filters to slightly soften the whiteness of the light. The exception noted consisted in the blowing of a fuse while the show was in progress. This was and was not the fault of projectionists N. I. Gannon and O. F. Diehl. The too-small fuses were installed by the electrician; also there were no duplicate fuses to throw over on in case one blew. But the projectionists should have examined the fuses and made certain they were of sufficient capacity to meet their needs. That is one of the things they were there for. They may, however, have done this and made demand for larger fuses, which was refused. I do not know. As it was, Mr. Robin, who was present in the room watching the operation of special equipment he had installed, bridged the fuse terminals with a pair of plyers to finish the reel. For several minutes the light left much to be desired, and an otherwise most excellent performance was sadly marred. Must have been pretty hot work holding those plyers, though. Moral: Fuses amply large and two sets of them connected by D. T. switch. Moral No. 2: Examine and test all new equipment thoroughly to make sure that it will do the work.

The projection room is of the asbestos type, of goodly size, and opposite the screen. It contains a closet for use of projectionists. Two Type S Simplex projectors are used. Barlow arc controllers handle the arc, but the criticism is made that they are not powerful enough to feed the Type S lamp. There is a Robin program recorder, which supplies the management with a permanent record of happenings in the projection room; also a Robin speed indicator. Aside from the lack of duplicate fuses the installation was most excellent. The interior walls of the projection room should be painted, either a very dark green or non-gloss black. There is an ample vent flue and an exhaust fan, but I did not notice any fresh-air inlet.

The picture was of correct size for the house, and conditions are such that the Symphony should have continued high-class screen portrayals, as I am sure it will have. Aside from the fuse incident I congratulate Messrs. Gannon and Diehl on their excellent work. Also I congratulate the Kennedy Theaters, Inc., on its excellent installation and its beautiful Temple of the Photoplay. The installation was made under the direction of B. F. Porter, of the Precision Machine Company.

Rectifier Trouble.

E. F. Roberts, Abilene, Texas, is having trouble with his rectifier, which trouble he describes as follows:

> Would appreciate information as to what causes series underload relay of my G. E. rectifier to heat. It gets so hot that the insulation has burned off from around the coil. Can only use 20 amperes. Were I to use 30 amperes, capacity of same, I think it would at once burn out. It has a 60-cycle, 110-volt rectifier. Would you suggest having our voltage tested and then have the G. E. make a coil for whatever it proves to be? Have examined all the wiring of rectifier, which same is O. K. according to the blueprint. The Queen Amusement Company, who owned the house before the present company took it, had the same trouble with their rectifier, which was the same size and kind as ours. It burned out the coil; also the tube.

By all means test the voltage; also amperage on arc side. If the series underload relay gets hot at 20 amperes there is something wrong with it, and very radically wrong at that. Most likely it is a coil short-circuited. I am of the opinon, however, that you are actually, due to high voltage or to wrong connection, pulling very much more than 20 amperes at the arc. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that the other company had the same trouble. If there is an ammeter on the outfit, and it shows 20 amperes, it is, I am pretty sure, a gay deceiver, a wanton prevaricator, and the truth is not in it. The relay in question is in series with the arc, hence carries the entire secondary amperage. Test your amperage and if it is high (I think you will find it nearer 45 than 20) seek for the cause, and the first thing to test will be the line voltage. If the amperage is found to be really 20, then you must have a new coil for the relay. If the amperage is found to be high and the relay continues to heat after it has been reduced, then the relay coil is damaged beyond repair by the abuse it has been subjected to through heating.

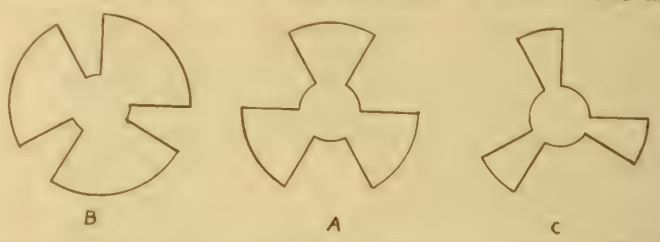
Apprenticeship.

There is just as much reason for the beginner in projection serving a lengthy apprenticeship as there is for the beginner in any other branch of human endeavor. About the only thing which does not need and require some term of learning is shoveling dirt, and even there the man who is advanced to position of foreman is the man who has learned how to "lay out work," and to use the labor of other men to advantage, which, in itself, requires a term of learning—an apprenticeship, if you please.

It may be conceded that the greater the required amount of knowledge required in any profession or trade, the longer the term of apprenticeship is required to master it, and if it be not mastered, then the novice must, perforce, gain what he lacks in knowledge at the expense of efficiency while posing as a full-fledged professional.



And this is precisely what the non-apprentice projectionist has been, and still is doing. In seeking to induce the establishment of a really competent term of apprenticeship this department feel absolutely certain that it is acting in the best interest of all concerned. The interests at stake in the proper, high-class projection of the modern photoplay are too many and too weighty to be given second place as against the curtailment of the supply of half-baked projectionists, whose only recommendation is their comparative cheapness; that is to say, cheapness in first cost—in salary, or wage. But the incompetent man is never really cheap. What his employer gains in wage reduction he loses, and very much more than loses, in inferior results, or results which are excessive in cost. As the matter now lies, the average projection equipment for a theatrical show represents pretty close to two thousand dollars, where there are two projectors and a current rectifying device. Considerable of this is in the form of films, which are highly susceptible to damage through improper usage, and any damage done to films is, as has been repeatedly pointed out by this department, an overhead charge of the industry, which must inevitably come out of the box-office receipts; for example, suppose that for the week ending July 20 there is a total film wastage of 7,000 reels (about what it is if we figure average life of films at four months). At $125 per reel this means $875,000 a week overhead on this item, which must, of course, be assumed by the box offices of the country. Now suppose that by more careful, intelligent work in the projection room we can reduce this wastage by five per cent., it would mean a saving of close to $44,000 per week, or more than $2,200,000 a year, in one item alone. And let me again tell you that the film wastage due to carelessness and lack of knowledge in the projection rooms of this country is very great indeed. But film is not all. There is something like $800 worth of projectors in the modern projection plant, and often a motor generator costing well up to $700. Say a total equipment cost of $1,500, which is at the mercy of incompetency, if that article is present in the projection room, added to which is an input wattage of electrical power which runs into the thousands, very much of which may easily be wasted through lack of knowledge. As a matter of fact, I myself have found cases where a projectionist was wasting more than half his electrical power, for no other reason under the canopy of heaven that an utter and complete lack of knowledge of the optical train of the projector, and the possibilities for width reduction in the blades of his revolving shutter, under the existing local conditions. I remember one instance of this sort where a theater manager employed me to look over his projection plant, believing his projection expense was out of proportion to screen results. I found the projectionist (?) using D. C. through two rheostats in multiple. The theater ran continuously thirteen hours a day. The current bills for projection (projection room on separate meter) averaged more than six dollars a day. It required little more than a glance at the apparatus to show the man in charge to be totally lacking in technical knowledge. Before he knew who I was I asked him if he had a Richardson Handbook, to which came swift reply, "Naw." What th' hell do I want with that junk?" I asked him if he had matched the revolving shutter to his local conditions, to which he replied "Match it? How? What do you mean? It's the shutter that came with the machine, and I guess the ——— people know their business." To make a long story short, I worked there that night for just one hour, having secured the lenses, etc., I wanted during the day, and at the end of the hour made that by main-strength and awkwardness projectionist admit that there was a better light on the screen, with LESS than half the amperage. He then had more respect for technical knowledge, but the fact remained that for two solid years he had been wasting in excess of three dollars a day for no other reason than pure, unadulterated IGNORANCE.

I do not claim that a competent apprenticeship would eliminate all waste, or make all apprentices competent projectionists at the end of their apprenticeship. We would still have carelessness and laziness to contend with; also there would be the apprentice who would not learn were he to serve a ten-year period. But by and large a reasonable term of apprenticeship of say two years would be very much worth while. Even the most humble craftsmen (if there is any such animal as a "humble" craftsman in these days of King Labor) must serve at least that period, whereas very many must serve much longer. Yet the projectionist who must, in order to be really competent, have at his finger tips accurate knowledge in electrics, mechanics and optics, and whose knowledge must be fairly wide in each of the things named, serves absolutely no real apprenticeship at all. In mechanics he is handling machinery which must be true down to one one-thousandth of an inch. In optics he is handling a complicated and extremely difficult optical train, lack in efficiency of which costs friend Boss real money every moment it is used. In electrics he is using motors, generators, rheostats, arc lamps, electric speed recorders, electric programme indicators, and other things, all of which he must understand thoroughly if he is to handle them intelligently and efficiently.

Taking these facts, and THEY are facts, mind you, into consideration, gentlemen, don't you really think the motion picture industry is acting the part of the ingrowing solid-ivory top in placing its finished product in the hands of men who have served absolutely no apprenticeship at all, many of whom are almost entirely lacking in the most elementary technical knowledge, or any apparent desire to acquire it? Of course we now have a large leavening of men who have served what amounts to the equivalent of an apprenticeship in a way, since they have been projecting pictures for years; also there are many who are well equipped with technical knowledge, and a very large number partially equipped. But for the future don't you think it would be well to demand that the novice start in right, and serve at least a reasonable period of apprenticeship? We would then at least have some guarantee that he did not learn his profession while showing people to their seats and rubbering in the port holes while returning along the aisle.

Projectionists, What Is Your Experience?

Burton Benwell, Los Angeles, California, puts forth the following proposition, which same I am not prepared to admit. I would like to have the views of projectionists, particularly those who have experimented with this particular thing.

> The point I wished to make in my letter, June first issue, was somehow left incomplete. It was this: At the expense of more or less light, dependent on speed of intermittent, any projector may be made to reach the point of minimum flicker merely by putting on a cardboard shutter with all blades the same width as the width of the main, or cut-off blade. Whether it is advisable to do this with all machines and under all conditions depends on many things. It certainly is worth while with one very popular make of projector. Insofar as flicker be concerned, the width of shutter blades does not matter, provided they all be the same width. This may be proven by trying out three shutters as per diagram. It will be found that all three will become flickerless at the same speed.

You will have to illustrate that to me, brother Benwell. That is all I care to say at this time. Admitting that my actual knowledge on this point is based on experiments made by projector manufacturers, my understanding is that the most nearly flickerless shutter practical for a projector is a three-winger, with blades of equal width, light openings of equal width. In other words all blades and openings to have equal width. As I understand it there is increased tendency to flicker when this condition is departed from either way. This is an important and interesting question. Let us hear from you, gentlemen. If I am in error, let it be proven. If you make experiments, give figures as to speed in various tests.

Maybe This Explains.

In looking through one of John Griffiths' articles I came across the following item: "The tendency is to advance the crater image beyond the aperture, towards the projection lens, so that the beam does not begin to diverge until it is quite near the lens. This results in a somewhat higher candle power at the screen, because there is no loss, or but slight loss, through divergence. To accomplish this the crater is advanced toward the condenser, but this practice has the drawback that it has tendency to introduce Mr. Ghost, the film being then in a section of the light beam which has uneven illumination."

Maybe this is the secret of the added illumination secured by the short distance from condenser to film in Mazda lamp practice. At what point does the condenser focus the lamp filament? Is it approximately at the aperture, or at a point near the projections lens?

Special Lenses Wanted.

Our old friend, John Solar, Solar Building, Watertown, New York, wants some special condensing lenses made. Schneider, of New York, has no glass thick enough. Who can tell brother Solar where he can get the job done.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which can not be answered in this column $1.00.

Co-operation.

THE caption to this department speaks truthfully but with brevity. It does not explain fully enough that this music page is conducted by us, for you and your best interests. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD aims to give the best possible service to the exhibitor and cover every field in which he is interested. This page is yours. Your position in the picture industry is no longer that of a necessary evil. By individual and painstaking effort, supplemented by our music department, music has become a feature in the presentation of pictures. Together, we can make music the feature in the picture business, but the results to be obtained through individual effort cannot be as large and gratifying as those gained from co-operation in intelligent endeavor.

We have tried to present the art of picture setting in its many phases in leading articles intended to assist in solving the knotty problems of the leaders throughout the country. We have had many kind comments made upon them, but no constructive criticism. The former we like, but the latter would be more beneficial in that it would give us a line upon the thoughts of our readers that would make for greater endeavor and more lasting results. We cannot see all the problems that may arise in picture fitting, and the time has come when glittering generalities is not the nourishing food which the orchestra leader needs. Tell us your troubles and pass some of your burdens to our broad shoulders that we may lighten the load and encourage you in your work, which in many cases is so little appreciated.

Brother Mirsky, of Dubois, Pa., has been kind enough to say "It is indeed a pleasure to note the constant improvement in the Music Page of the 'World.' Can't you induce the boss to give you more space. The Leader's Service Bureau is a peach."

We thank brother Mirsky and assure him that the "boss" has promised more space in the fall. This tribute to our poor efforts is indeed encouraging.

A brother in Los Angeles writes: "We always read your pages with great interest and believe your music suggestions synopsis very helpful to all theaters."

We are always glad to hear words of praise from the balmy land of sunshine and will renew our efforts to create an interest that will become more widespread on the Pacific slope.

Even the theater managers have been generous in comment. Mr. G. R. Dettor, manager of Jefferson theater in Charlottesville, Va., writes "I have been a close reader of your music department and find it a great help and fully agree with you that an orchestra must consist of only first-class men."

Friend F. A. Mangan writes us a personal letter in which he says: "Your page in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the only musical department upon which I can rely for adequate information for the music for the pictures. You show a fearlessness in your reviews which is highly commendable, and your clever hints for special effects have proved of great value." Mr. Managan is a picture-presenter of no mean ability and his opinion well worth while.

Friend S. R. Rothapfel in a letter of congratulation says "Keep up the good work." His praise means much to us as he really has created a standard of musical presentation which is followed by all live exhibitors.

Now all these kind words are pleasant to the ear and we are glad to get them, but we want more of them. It is estimated that there are 7,644 leaders in picture houses scattered throughout the country. We want to hear from 7,643, and an excuse from the other fellow that he will write when he gets better.

We want to know what your troubles are. We want to find out what kind of service you need the most, both from the producer and ourselves. We want you to use our good offices with the exhibitor if necessary. Tell us about your cue-sheets. Are you getting them regularly? Are they what you want in the way of musical service? How could the cue-sheet service be improved? Don't say to yourself that in spite of the difficulties that are constantly arising that you manage to make a living, so why kick about it. Have some consideration for your brother musician who may not be so adaptable to adverse conditions.

What about the new music question? Can we help you in that respect. We do not represent any publishing house and show no preference as to the class of music placed upon the market. If it can be used for pictures we care not who puts it out. We can neither be biased nor bought, so our judgment is based solely on the merits of the music submitted aud your needs in picture setting. Let us be the medium of putting you in touch with the new pieces that are issued from time to time, a brief review of which you may have for the asking. If sufficient of my brethren ask for it we will give it space in this column?

Are you satisfied with your present position or do you yearn for wider worlds to conquer? It is not our intention to establish an agency for supply musicians to the theaters, but we do want to help those who through circumstances cannot help themselves. Don't forget that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD officially recognizes the musicians who are to be found enlisted in the ranks of picture players.

Every orchestra leader, piano player or organist, who has charge of the music for a theater should be a subscriber of this publication. He owes it to himself to keep abreast of the times and know what things are being accomplished in the field of his chosen vocation. No longer can he afford to arrive a few minutes before the show begins, hurriedly gather together a few numbers which may be useful, play the bill in slipshod manner and hasten away immediately upon its conclusion. To get results he must be a student of the picture industry, searching it from every angle for those little touches that make an artistic presentation. He must learn what the "other fellow" is doing and how he is doing it. Self-satisfaction spells his downfall, and there is no longer room for the "bluffer."

We expect to make some changes in the policy of this department, not anything of the radical order, but merely adding some things that may make it more effective, and enlarging its scope for good. We want your co-operation in this matter and solicit your suggestions along the line of an improved service to you. Let us get together for the mutual benefit of all "movie" musicians. Don't wait for weeks to elapse but write us at once. Let July be flooded with mail for our perusal and consumption. We can assure you that our request is not an idle desire for your acquaintance. We do not want to know you, but our aim is to help you, with that sincerity of purpose that comes from one who has been "through the mill" and knows its vicissitudes.

Music At the Strand.

During the week commencing June 23, the Strand theater offered an exceptionally good bill. Mr. Edel, the managing director, changed the routine of his numbers, which, we believe, enhanced the entire performance. Instead of beginning his show with the usual overture the orchestra played a prelude of a few minutes duration and segued immediately into the pictorial review. The music chosen for this number was, as always, very appropriate. Special mention must be made of the selection played during the scenes showing our aviators. The time-worn march was eliminated, and a trippy bird-like piece substituted. Nothing could have been more suitable.

The third number offered was programmed as an exclusive war scoop, showing the rousing reception of our Camp Upton boys when they arrived in England. Let us first tell you about the clever setting of this film, at the same time, passing for the present, the opening of it. When the Highlanders appeared with their bag-pipes the orchestra created one of the best imitations of those skirling instruments that we have ever heard. Nor did they carry this strain too long. It was a simple suggestion without the monotony which would have been brought forth had they played it throughout the scene. The trumpet calls for "fall in" and "prepare to march" were beautifully synchronized, as was the fife and drum solo, when they played "The Girl I Left Behind Me" as the veterans marched into view. Every little detail showed care and great thought.

The scenic received the best possible musical interpretation, and was thoroughly enjoyed.

Miss Cora Tracey, a newcomer, showed one of the most remarkable contralto voices in her rendition of two song numbers. "A Spirit Flower" was most artistically done, well enunciated, and with perfect breath control. Miss Tracey's voice is well placed, and her bridging is unnoticable to that extent which forces one to believe in one register. Her entire scale is smooth and well balanced, and her richness of quality is a delight. We do not happen to be privileged with her acquaintance, but predict for her a merited success.

Her second number, "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling," was enhanced by a fine setting showing the tents of our soldier boys in the gathering dusk. The house lights were dimmed and a spot thrown upon the singer. Gradually the late evening glow faded as the singer progressed with her selection until at the close of the song night had enfolded in her mantle of darkness the bivouacs of the soldiers. This made a decidedly strong impression.

The feature, "Her Final Reckoning," with Pauline Fredericks, received a musical setting that we were proud of, and those who were responsible for it could be proud of it too, for it FITTED. The fitting of the Gypsy scenes were especially good, and the use of Chopin's Nocturne was an inspiration. Another of those little pizzicato effects played by strings was effective in conveying the idea of the guitar played in the picture by Count Menko. This selection was synchronized to a nicety and made the scene live. Mr. Reiser conducted the feature, and we liked his well marked beat. In his over-anxiety to catch the cues he sometimes chops off the music before a cadence or natural ending of the phrase, but experience will eliminate this fault in an otherwise good director.

During the wedding scene the organist played both Wedding Marches of German origin. Fundamentally and from the picture presentation standpoint he was right, but in view of the strong feeling against German music it is good judgment to refrain from bringing into the atmosphere an antagonistic thought.

The overture, "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini, was directed by Oscar Spirescu in a musicianly manner and with a broad interpretation that was pleasing.

"Madame Butterfly," an opera in two acts, music by G. Puccini. This opera, which from the first aroused the keenest interest among opera-goers, has become an enduring success. The original Metropolitan production in Italian was under the personal direction of Puccini himself, who refined and beautified it according to his own ideas into one of the most finished operas ever produced here.

The story of the drama is familiar to all through John Luther Long's narrative and the Belasco dramatic version. The tale is the old one of the passing fancy of a man for a woman, and her faithfulness even unto death, which comes by her own hand when she finds herself abandoned.

Puccini has completely identified his music with the sentiments and sorrows of the characters in John Luther Long's drama, and has accompanied the pictorial beauty of the various scenes with a setting of incomparable loveliness. Rarely has picturesque action been more completely wedded to beautiful music.

The setting and the lighting effects that went with this overture was typical of the Strand. Mr. Harold Edel has developed this part of entertainment to a high plane, and no pains are spared to make it the hall mark of this national institution.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

ANNEXING BILL (Pathe—Five Reels)—No Theme Necessary.

The music for this picture should be only moderately heavy, and some slow waltzes will be found very effective. Note the two dancing scenes in the first reel and see that your light selection be properly synchronized. The first dancing scene is followed by the depiction of an old man playing a violin. Here you should use a violin solo without any accompaniment whatsoever. Then you will find the second dancing scene following immediately after. This is the only tricky part of the feature, but if accurately gauged you will obtain excellent results. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

ACE HIGH (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Slow Moderato. Suggest "Land of Dreams"—Baltzell, "Canzonetta"—Strado, or "Melodie"—Friml.

This picture deals with the Canadian Mounted Police, and is rich in pastorale effects. You will need some waltzes, a couple of fox-trots and a one-step (preferably of a Mexican character). There is an opportunity to use a short American Indian theme to depict the squaw. It would lend variety and be appreciated by your audience, for she is a lovable character. You will also need some fast allegros or scherzo to fit the chase scenes. The balance of the picture should be heavy dramatic. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

CLAW, THE (series—Six Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "May Dreams"—Borch, "Enchanted Hour"—Meyer, or "Reverie"—Doolhof.

This feature will give you some trouble. The atmosphere is largely African, and as there is a dearth of distinctive music you may be forced to improvise some original airs. Get all the African music you can to make the setting real. Long numbers will fit nicely, as the scenes are quite lengthy and the few flash-backs do not occasion any difficulty. You will find excellent material in "Three African Dances," "Congo Love Dance" by Herman, "Africa 1-0" by Ryder, "Voices of Africa" by Joyce, and "The Arabs Dream," by Kendall. The cue sheet supplied for this picture can well and easily be improved upon by careful selection. The tempo can be governed upon to guide you and those found in atmospheric numbers will give you a good setting. Cue sheet can be obtained from the Select exchange.

FAIR PRETENDER, THE (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Dawn of Love"—Bendix, "Canzonetta"—Godard, or "Meditation"—Cutsinna.

The picture has some dramatic values that must be carefully taken musically. It opens with light stuff, gradually working up to its climax in the fourth reel. You will need some heavy dramatic tensions, a couple of popular fox-trots, and a one step. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

FIREFLY OF FRANCE, THE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "? ? ?

It would be well to open this picture with the "Marseillaise" to establish the French atmosphere. Light music will follow, and good judgment would dictate those of French origin if possible. Use Bizet, Chaminade, Ballez, Massenet, and Chopin if possible. During the last two reels you will need considerable dramatic stuff, agitatos, and a battle hurry. Close with either the theme or the "Marseillaise." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

GIRL IN HIS HOUSE, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Serenade"—Chaminade, "Serenade"—Widor, or "Whispering Willows"—Herbert.

The character of this picture is a modern society drama with American atmosphere. The music necessary will consist of light stuff intermingled with a misterioso dramatico and an honest-to-goodness misterioso. Note the possibilities in the reception scene, where you may use a violin solo with splendid effect. Watch for the shot after Doris gets the gun. A railroad effect can be worked providing you do not overdo it. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

HER FINAL RECKONING (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Nocturne"—Karganoff, "Romance in F."—Tschaikowski, or "Three Songs from Eliland"—Von Fielitz.

Here is a grand opportunity afforded for a big musical setting. The atmosphere is English, with a touch of Gypsy. The picture opens dramatically blending into the pathetic. After what you might call the prologue we are introduced to the Gypsy life of the young heroine. Here you have a chance to use a violin solo taking as your subject a weird Hungarian melody or one of Dvorak's masterpieces. At the proposal of the prince, which is shown in the garden scene, you may begin the Nocturne of Chopin in C minor. This long number will bring you through the dramatic meeting of Count Menko and our heroine, and it will fit every foot of the film. As Count Menko relates their former meeting the strings should play a Venetian Love song, pizzicato, to imitate the guitar with which he is seen accompanying himself. Do not play the Wedding March during the marriage between the prince and our heroine. Use a strong processional instead. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

MAN'S WORLD, A (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "Gardenia"—Densmore, "Serenade"—Strube, or "Love Song"—Powell.

Here you have an emotional modern drama with French and American atmosphere. Open with the theme, and follow up with some light French stuff. During this picture you may use violin and piano solos to splendid advantage. In the fourth and fifth reel you will require some heavy dramatic numbers, and not in the French style. Be sure to mark the contrast in your music when the location is changed. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

SHARK MONROE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "My Dreams"—Lee, "Longing"—Armand, or "Regrets D'Amour"—Bright.

This is the tale of the Klondike country, a story of the gambling gamer, sodden sots, and rough ruffians. You will need some pastorale music, some pathos numbers, and a few dramatic tensions. Have a two-step ready for the dance hall scene. You will require a furioso in the first reel and a big agitato in the last reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

Light music is what you will need for this picture. Select numbers with lots of pep to them. No special atmosphere or effects are prevalent, and the only suggestion which might be helpful is the wedding scene at the close of the picture. The cue sheet suggests "Over There," but we think this is over-done. Play a processional march as a fitting finish and a suitable selection to the scene. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

New Firm to Handle Picture Music.

Recently a charter was granted to the Belwin, Inc., New York City, to conduct theatrical and motion picture enterprises and publish music, capitalized for $12,000, with the directors named as Sol. P. Levy, Charles Hollender, and S. M. Berg.

S. P. Levy and S. M. Berg have for a long time been intimately acquainted with the picture game of music, and their publications has been widely used in the setting of features. The amalgamation should be ideal from many standpoints. It will mean the joining of both catalogues under a single head, which will make it loom larger for picture use. Mr. Levy's excellent arrangements will find a wide field in the original ideas of Mr. Berg, and together they should make a fine team. These gentlemen know exactly the needs of the orchestral leader, and are qualified in every respect to supply those needs. The editor of this department extends his good wishes for their joint venture, and sincerely hopes that they will continue to keep the standard of their works upon the high planes of legitimate art.

Leader's Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. A certain producing company has discontinued the distribution of cue sheets and I am lost without them. I have taken the matter up with my employer, and he has promised to write them for the music service which we have been accustomed to get. Can you suggest a temporary remedy?

A. Since you were good enough to add the name of the company in a P. S. we shall personally call upon them and urge the necessity of the service. In the mean time if you will send us a list of your pictures which you expect to play we shall be pleased to give you a little idea of what you will need in the way of music. We feel sure that no company releasing pictures on a regular program can afford to neglect the orchestras of the exhibitors.

Q. I am a lady saxaphone player, and desire to learn to play the clarinet, with a view to playing in a picture theater orchestra. Is it hard to learn, and where can I procure suitable training?

A. Having played the saxaphone you naturally read fairly well, and your knowledge of fingering will prove helpful. Of course, the fingering of a clarinet is entirely different, and may be confusing at the start. If you will write to C. H. Ditson & Co., Carl Fischer, or G. Schirmer, Inc., all of New York, they will be pleased to send you a list of text books treating with the playing of the clarinet. Study these well yourself. Practice the exercises therein, and when you have mastered the rudiments secure a good teacher. Whatever you do be sure to get a thorough grounding before trying to appear in public professionally.

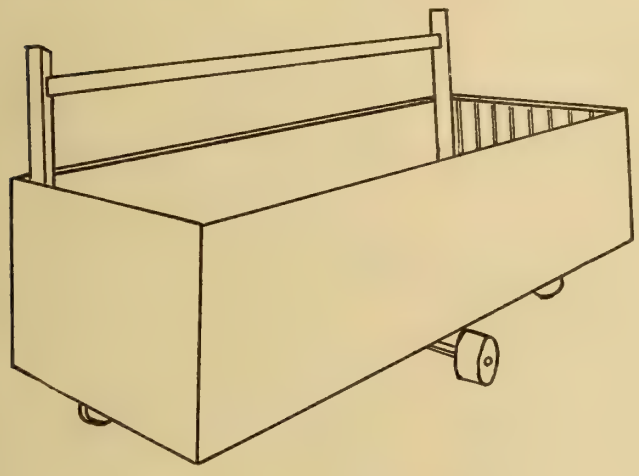
Hints for the Laboratory Worker.



By Gerald A. Prager.

ONE of the chief factors in the proper conductance of the motion picture laboratory is the care given to the minor details of production.

It is true that no time or labor is too much for the actual taking of the motion picture, but usually it seems that a negative or print must be made at almost breakneck speed, and in view of this fact we give a few simple hints that may be of some service to the laboratory worker in expediting his work.

How often have we gone into the laboratory, and found six or seven racks lying against one another, waiting either to go into the washing tanks or onto the drying drums; or have we ever gone into the joining room and found heaps of scrap film laying about on the floor and elsewhere for the want of a proper container for same.

We show the sketch of a film rack truck (Fig. 1) that we have found practical and inexpensive to construct. The sides of the carrier are made of ⅞-inch wood, and the uprights are of ⅞-inch stock with a drain hole cut in one end, as shown, to carry off any superfluous water. The wheels are placed as indicated, one in the front and rear and two in the center on either side. (A preferable material is sheet and angle iron. Ed.) There should be plenty of play between the frame and the dividing rods, to allow the frames to be easily removed.

FILM RACK CARRIER.

A fireproof film scrap can that is useful around the busy assembling room is shown in Figure 2. The scrap can is made of ordinary sheet metal to dimensions as illustrated on the sketch. The door on the upper end of the can is controlled by a spring as indicated. At the back of the can is a hook to fasten the can to the cutting table or to bend over the cross bar generally found under all metal tables.

Ofttimes we have a number of copies to make of the same negative, and the rolls while waiting to be assembled and joined if not placed in the proper containers are apt to become mixed and cause confusion. We therefpre show a sketch of a roll rack that is easy to construct and practical (Fig. 3).

The rack is made of ⅜-inch stock, to the dimensions as given in the sketch. The metal frames at the bottom of the tray are for the purpose of inserting the number of the roll in the corresponding section. The frames can be purchased in any hardware store.

One of the main accessories of the film laboratory are razor blades, and it is surprising how many of them are consumed during one month. We have found by the following simple method that we could make one blade take the place of three. The blades are taken to the machine shop, and with the aid of a very fine jeweler's hack saw are divided into thirds as in Figure 4. They are then placed in holders as described and can easily be reversed by moving the thumb screw in the handle, thus saving the original cost of the handles many times in the saving of the blades.

We have found that by the use of two paper fasteners such as manufactured by the O. K. Fastener Company film can be attached to the slats on the drying drum (Fig. 5) far more securely than by pins, with the additional features of not rusting or bending, nor do they tear the film, and can be used a number of times.

If the film is desired to be dried rapidly a hot air hand blower similar to the ones used by shoe shining parlors are very practical for the purpose, being played on the film while the drum is in motion.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

THE PRESENCE, we are told, of Madge Kennedy in a motion picture studio is as much a delight to her associates at the big Goldwyn glass-top in Fort Lee as it is a constant surprise. For Miss Kennedy is a quiet revolutionist. She changes everybody's conception of what a popular star should do and say.

Like no one else, she is as individual in her appeal as if she were escorted always by a brass band. Yet, Miss Kennedy's quiet, easy composure and her never failing interest in everyone around her makes her a star of a distinctly different kind. Her unaffected charm is as eloquent as a blare of trumpets.

Without Her, What's the Band?

She comes and goes about her work with never a loss of the poise which is an important element in her character. It is this which removes her from the ordinary run of screen favorites.

Nothing ruffles her and she has never been known to evince annoyance or show the slightest sign of a lost temper. Our Madge only smiles when trifles go wrong and that, she says, keeps the big things from ever coming near to disturb her.

The Witching Lure of Publicity.

The small things which assume the aspect of tragedies in the minds of the conventional spoiled darlings of the screen are unknown to Miss Madge. If the curtains in her ivory and silver dressing-room do not allow a sufficient current of air to enter these Summer days, the Kennedy girl does not regard it as a calamity but in cool tones asks the invaluable Frieda, her maid, to help her gather them up and put them out of the way.

Miss Kennedy's quick sympathy and intelligent interest in what concerns those around her contribute quite as much as her poise toward endearing her to the rank and file of Goldwyn workers.

The Quicksands of Gibraltar.

She is never merely "sweet to talk to," but when someone really needs her the screen queen gives quick all whether it be an understanding talk; the loan of a frock to a girl at her wits' end to equip herself for a part, or more substantial assistance when the need is genuine.

She is more a real woman than a player of parts, and her daily life at the Goldwyn Studios is a tribute to the normal, even life she pursues away from it. That she is an accomplished artiste, versed in all the subleties of the stage, is the most natural thing in the world to those who know that beneath Madge Kennedy's soft coils of hair is the most level of heads.

She lives to study and improve herself and to her pleasure is secondary to artistic advancement.

Tom Moore's adaptibility to Mimeographic exploitation will be exposed next week in just about this location.

If we could get ninety inches of such good stuff as the Kennedy-Moore effusions every week Rambles would be well worth the space it takes.

Displacing the ancient thumb?

The Small Town Kelcey Allen.

By L. M. Thornton, Waverly, N. Y.

I've been a moving picture fan
Since first the fad for films began,
And now I am a "first night" man
At all the new creations.
I know the history from her birth
Of every movie star of worth
Just where and when she came to earth
And half of her relations.

I speak as though I'd met and knew
The Paramounts, Pathe and Drew,
I spiel of Fox and Keystone, too,
But yet I grow dejected.
No one for history seems to care—
They only know some star is fair
And yell "Keep still, you, over there"—
My wisdom all rejected.

Secret Service Stuff.

The Goldwyn publicity department, which strives to keep abreast of what is going on in the studio at Fort Lee, has a mystery on its hands. For a while it was known as "Production No. 25"; lately it has become (deleted by the censor).

Beyond the knowledge that the production will be first shown to the public on August 25 and the sight of a lot of strange photographs with a strangely costumed actress in them there is nothing much to report but mystery.

When the orders came sending the command to France the officers of the company did not know what to do with the animal, as a War Department rule expressly forbids the taking of animal mascots by the American Army into France. On the other hand, the men want to be sure that the bear would be treated kindly during their absence.

At last the company sent a telegram to Miss Bara at her home in Los Angeles in which it was stated: "Several organizations want Theda badly, but after a meeting of the company a unanimous decision was reached to send her to you. Sheldon Lewis, in the coming serial starring Leah Baird, is again enacting some of the heroine-foiling stunts for which he is famous. Mr. Lewis, hissed by countless small boys of the front row, and devoutly consigned to bad places by innumerable small (and many large) girls, is greately over-hated, it would seem.

"Truth to tell," says his press agent, "the screen has few gentler, kindlier, or more courteous gentlemen than Sheldon Lewis in private life. Beloved by his friends and acquaintances, an even more severe test is the regard of his fellow workers in the studio. There he is idolized and respected for his quiet solicitude, his regard for the feelings of all, and his lack of care for self if able to assist his fellow-man."

A few days ago she completed the 20th and concluding episode of "The House of Hate," and when one figures the number of thrills contained in the 40 reels that comprise the latest Pathe serial, there is no need to wonder why Pearl White is on a vacation.

An interviewer saw her the day they completed the last episode of "The House of Hate" at the Astra-Pathe studios in Jersey City.

"No gay boardwalk at Atlantic City for me this year" laughed this queen of the screen. "Believe me, I am going to take the rest cure this summer. I am just going up to a farm in New York State and do nothing but just rest."

"But what about plans for the future,"

"Oh, I expect to be back to work in a month," said Miss White. "You know we have another big serial coming and I figure that a month out with the buttercups, the cows and the chickens will make me fit and keen again for the thrill stuff."

Suffering in Patriotic Silence.

The Goldwyn stars, hitherto anxious to practice wartime economies, have hit upon another plan to prove their patriotism and their regard for needs greater than their own.

Led by Mabel Normand, incorrigible telephone chatterer; Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, and Tom Moore resolved to eliminate telephone calls except of the most urgent nature. Not only this, but they discourage all incoming calls on the wire.

This rule applies to everyone they know, and since every star is constantly bothered by unnecessary calls it will free them from needless interruption.

UNSUSPECTED BIOGRAPHIES.
No. 2.

(Drawn from Paramount-Artcraft-Pep.)

Charles Kenmore Ulrich.

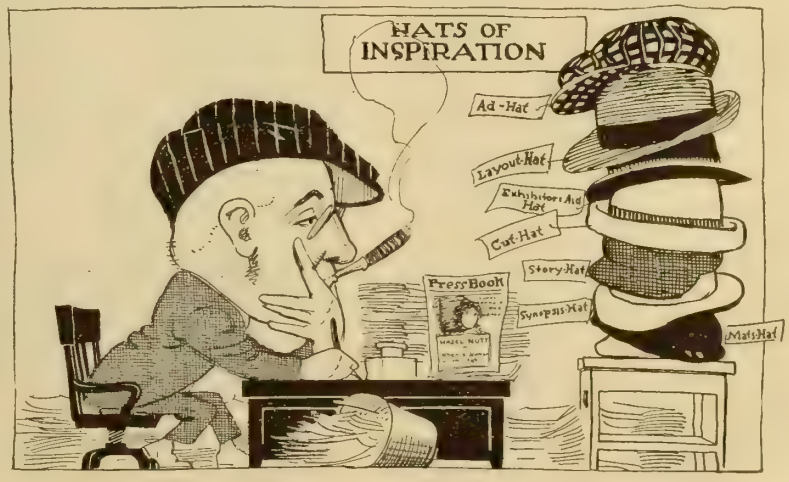
By Pete Schmid.

"I am out here in the land of sunshine and flowers," writes Charlie Fuhr in his original mode of expression and under a Los Angeles date line, "and find that the fame of my old pal Charles Kenmore Ulrich has been enhanced, enlarged and crystallized for all time since he acquired the editorial supervision, direction and production of the Press Books.

"Exhibitors everywhere greet me with the same questions: 'What sort of a fellow is this Charles Kenmore Ulrich, this master of the English language, this wonder of the Press Book age?' 'Could we possibly arrange for his personal appearance at this theater?' 'Is he really as nice a man in real life as his press books would indicate?' 'Does he autograph his own photographs?' And so on, etc., and so forth.

"In lieu of spending my entire day answering the countless questions fired at me regarding my old pal, I have had printed a biography on the Editor of Press Books and have had run off 300,000 rotogravure photos containing a facsimile autograph. Of course, many persons demand original photos with Mr. Ulrich's own signature, but with a little explanation they readily appreciate how impossible it would be for Charles to autograph his own pictures. Why, goodness! he would have no time left to play poker!

"Many people are mystified at the unusual excellence of Ulrich's press books. but little do they know of how easy it is for Charles to turn out the best in the industry. Little do they suspect that Charles has had years and years of training in this very field of endeavor. If they but knew that the very first press book heralding the appearance of Eve was created, designed and supervised by none other than our own Charles!



"If they could learn how Adam showered his praise on Charles over the excellence of his press book on Eve, written on oak leaves, with advertising cuts made out of birch bark; if they could have seen how the Indians howled with joy when they read Ulrich's press books announcing the booking of Columbus for a long run in Manhattan; if they had read Charles' press book giving advertising suggestions for Robert Fulton's steamboat, then they would take as a matter of course his superiority in this world of press books, mats and coarse screen cuts.

"However, I believe that despite the fact that Ulrich's press books are the best in the world, they are merely in their infancy. I believe there is a great field of usefulness ahead of this backbone of film exploitation, and that the time will come when even school children will be able to read them. Seriously, though, let us therefore drink a toast, two toasts, three toasts—a whole gang of toasts—to the man who turns out the best press books in filmdom."

P. S.—It was thought to keep the secret of how Mr. Ulrich gets his inspirations, but we have changed our mind. For the benefit of those who would aspire press book fame, we disclose the Ulrich Method. It is nothing more or less than a collection of hats. When he wants an idea for a story, he puts on a Fedora. When he is in doubt about an ad., he puts on his Advertisement Cap, etc. We intend to Cap-italize this Method and will shortly have for sale a full set of hats and caps for the creation of wonder press books.

Mr. Ulrich bears a strong resemblance to his picture shown on this page.

Next week we shall present Morrie Ryskind's idea of how a branch office should be run with H. M. Owens, the "Daredevil Dallas Demon," as the "fall guy" for the unprovoked assault.

Truly Warner Has the Right Idea.

Bathing Suits Excess Baggage.

Alice Brady puts picture first! This fact was exemplified recently when Miss Brady balanced in the scales interest in her picture and the desire to wear two fetching costumes. It was at Long Beach, and Miss Brady was accompanied by some very particular friends; and a bathing party was projected. It so happens that in her next Select Picture there is a bathing scene, and Miss Brady had bought two unusually handsome bathing costumes, the price of which, be it whispered, ran into three figures, one of which was her own. These costumes Miss Brady had just purchased, and had taken them with her in her car on the trip to Long Beach.

Given the three elements for a dramatic situation—particular friends, a bathing party and marvelous bathing costumes—what would any other girl do? The answer would appear to be a simple one; but not so in Miss Brady's case. She struggled—and Alice Brady is some struggler. (See "At the Mercy of Men.")

Although her companions teased and protested, Miss Brady stoutly refused to wear her gorgeous bathing costume before they had been filmed for the scene in her picture. Choking back her vanity, she astounded her fashionable friends by buying in a Long Beach "department store," an ordinary bathing suit.

This she put on, and drably attired, when she might have been gorgeously arrayed, enjoyed her dip in the surf. The gorgeous beach costumes of silk and satin remained safely encased in their tissue wrappings under Miss Brady's tonneau.

Texas Talent Under a Bushel.

Louis Pelcran, auditor for the Metro and the F N E C of Texas offices at Dallas, is an auditor than whom there is none whomer. At any rate, that's what folks from Dallas have declared. Louis thinks in figures, they say. Also he get's good figures for good "fillums."

But another talent possessed by the versatile statistics sharp has been discovered. When Madame Petrova was in Dallas on June 28 in the W. S. S. campaign, she visited the Metro and F N E C. offices. She was introduced all 'round, and everybody gasped when it came Louis' time.

They saw him click the heels together and his trim body bend at the waist like in a bow that might have been the envy of a Paris boulevardier. They heard something like this:

There was a whole lot of wig-wagging with hands and rattling of tongues, which nobody else understood, by which it was discovered that Louis is a finest master of the French language, a talent he had been hiding under a bushel all the while. His forbears were all of that brave nation which has shown the world how valiantly its sons can fight.

Great Star's Good Influence.

Geraldine Farrar has amazed her director and the Goldwyn organization by her tremendous eagerness for hard work. During the entire fortnight devoted to her first picture she has been at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee before 8 a. m. daily, and since it requires an hour to get from her home over the river into New Jersey her rising time each day can be guessed.

On several occasions she has not only worked all day, but on two occasions well into the night. Evening came on a few days ago with the star and a big group of players in the middle of important scenes for which every player was properly keyed up.

"Why stop now," asked Miss Farrar, "when everyone of us feels the parts we are playing? Tomorrow we would have to work for a long time before we attained our present pitch and sympathy with our roles."

The entire company worked before the Goldwyn cameras until 1 a. m.

Satisfying An Optical Yearn.

Ever since Madame Olga Petrova entered the picture business she has with seeming deliberation turned to us in all of her publicity portraits, the left side of her face. We have, with hitherto unrequited determination, sought for a glance at her right cheek.

Bert Ennis and Charles Wisner Barrell, publicists for the famous Polish actress and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, respectively, very haughtily spurned our pleadings for a picture of the always-hidden right side of the Petrova profile. But we have fooled the whole outfit.

Here is a picture of Petrova, kodacked by our Atlanta, Ga., correspondent while Mme. Petrova was in that fair city selling Thrift and War Savings Stamps in her personally conducted patriotic drive to sweat the Hun on the fly.

World Pictures Names Four Subjects for August Issue

THE announcement of World Picture issues for the month of August presents to exhibitors what are considered the best pictures ever turned out by this organization. First on the schedule comes "Heredity," in which Barbara Castleton is starred and John Bowers featured. The story is by Maravene Thompson, well and favorably known as a writer of fiction and plays. As its title indicates, the theme is based on the old adage, "Blood will tell." Nedda Trevor, a direct descendant of the Trevor who aided Charles the First of England, meets Paul Winslow when a child, and a romance ensues. Many years later her stepfather murders her mother and escapes. Nedda is accused of the murder. Paul comes back to Europe and eventually gains her freedom, while the real murderer is arrested. William P. S. Earle directed.

August 12 is the date for the publication of "The Beloved Blackmailer," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred. Harry O. Hoyt is the author, and Dell Henderson is the director. Bobby Briggs, an overfed, overpetted youth, believes he is sick. His father endeavors to ruin the father of the girl he loves. The girl tells him that she will marry only a man and not a mollycoddle. She has Bobby kidnapped and taken to a health camp, and also works a worthy blackmail on Bobby's father. When Bobby returns, strong and ruddy, his girl is forgiven, and all is well.

Coming on August 19 is "Merely Players," starring Kitty Gordon, with Irving Cummings supporting her. The story was written by L. Case Russell, and directed by Oscar Apfel. It is a story of great dramatic strength.

The picturization of the sensationally successful stage play, "Inside the Lines," is scheduled for publication August 26. Lewis S. Stone, who was featured in the stage production, is the star. "Inside the Lines" should prove to be as great a success on the screen as it was in the speaking version. In fact an added intensity and interest has been given to the picturization of Earl Der Biggers' success. The story of "Inside the Lines" contains among other factors a supposed German spy, with designs on the British grand fleet, and an American girl.

Anita Stewart Completes Picture.

Anita Stewart has completed "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the first of the special series of Anita Stewart productions which Vitagraph plans to release in the near future. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Miss Stewart are now busy in the consideration of a number of other plays, selections from which will be used for her other vehicles. All of the plays under consideration are from well known subjects, either legitimate stage productions or popular works of fiction. Mr. Smith says that so many plays are under consideration that he will not be able for some days to announce Miss Stewart's next vehicle. But he said, however, that the rest of her pictures, like "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," will be made under his personal supervision and directed by Wilfred North, who gave the screen such a splendid picture in "Over the Top."

Exhibitors are awaiting the announcement of the release date for the first of the Stewart series, and judging from the Vitagraph announcement, their curiosity soon will be satisfied.

Fannie Ward and Her Woman Chauffeur.

Washburn to Make "The Gypsy Trail."

Bryant Washburn will make his bow under Paramount management in "The Gypsy Trail." "The Gypsy Trail" was one of the comedy successes of the last season. It is from the pen of Robert Housum. It is a comedy of the romantic type, just suited to Washburn. Its story turns on the difference between the romantic and the prosaic viewpoints.

Ernest Glendenning created the role on the stage which Mr. Washburn will present on the screen. "The Gypsy Trail" will be the first of the series of eight Bryant Washburn Paramount pictures to be produced during the coming year. The director has not as yet been decided upon.

Fox's "Salome" Has First Secret New York Showing

SURROUNDED with the usual secrecy, "Salome" underwent its first unreeling in one of the projection rooms of the Fox general offices on Forty-sixth street last week. The picture was shown in the rough—that is, typewritten titles were introduced where later art titles are to stand, and certain scenes were screened in all their redundancy and with retakes superimposed.

The showing was solely for the cutters and those who exercise critical judgment in the final finishing of the product. Publicity men on the staff of the Fox organization also were present. Hettie Gray Baker, film editor of the Fox output, was principally in evidence as regarded the "taking of evidence."

"Salome" is to be the one independent offering of the coming season by the Fox organization. By which is meant that it is a non-release feature de luxe, which will be shown in about fifty of the foremost theaters in America which usually house only purely dramatic offerings of the highest standard.

A monster big publicity campaign has been set in motion properly to put before the public the massiveness of this production. Samuel F. Kingston is in charge of the production, with Will T. Gentz acting as his publicity aid.

Theda Bara enacts the titular role. The strong dramatic fiber of the story safeguards the play from being dwarfed by its massive mise en scene, which, in one instance, involved the construction of a replica of the Jerusalem of 40 B. C.

W. W. Hodkinson Adds Plaza Pictures to His Service

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, according to a statement issued this week, is adding product to its Hodkinson service. This new material will be known as Plaza Pictures.

Although no definite statement is forthcoming as yet in reference to the exact nature of these pictures, it is understood that two and possibly three popular stars will be included under the brand, and that their pictures will be released in series maintaining the present alignment of Hodkinson service.

W. W. Hodkinson's personal statement in reference to Plaza Pictures in part is as follows:

"Plaza Pictures are good photoplays in every sense of the word. We are convinced that the producers of this material have obtained a consistent quality of production which, coupled with the popularity of the star appearing in these pictures, will make our new offering very acceptable to the exhibitors.

"Producers of Plaza Pictures decided to release their material through us because they wanted not only present profit for themselves, but also to prove to the exhibitor that they were ready to make good pictures, sell them at a reasonable price to help the exhibitor make money from them, and by that same token insure the continued prosperity of their own business as producers. They felt that our organization and method of working presented the logical means to accomplish the above results.

The addition of new product is a step forward for us. We now have Paralta Plays, Plaza Pictures, and the Douglas Natural Color Pictures, and more coming.

"We know that there has been some confusion in the past in the exhibitors' minds in reference to us and those producers releasing through us.

"Many exhibitors seem to be unable to fix clearly in their minds that the Hodkinson organization is built with a definite purpose in mind, and is striving to achieve a definite object; namely, the buying of product for the exhibitor at a reasonable rate rather than to force upon him the product of the producer regardless of quality.

"We will be in a position to announce the stars in Plaza Pictures next week, and may say, moreover, that the production of Plaza Pictures is well ahead of schedule, so that we can assure the exhibitors that there will be no delay or trouble on that score."

Arbuckle Gets Really Soaked in "Good Night Nurse"

IN the new Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Good Night, Nurse," released July 8, "Fatty" Arbuckle accomplishes, after many ludicrous attempts, the unusual feat of lighting a cigarette in a blinding rainstorm. While this might be possible to almost anybody blessed with patience and perseverance it is pointed out that it takes a "Fatty" Arbuckle to make it funny. This laughable stunt is one of the thirty which should cause a full minute's laugh, every minute in the new travesty on life in a sanitarium.

"Good Night, Nurse" opens with Arbuckle trying to make his way homeward through a terrific rainstorm. At the corner drug store the jovial one encounters another happy pedestrian—happy, but in a sad condition. "Fatty" sends him home parcel post. Just how "Fatty" fares in his adventures would lose the humorous edge in the telling, but it can safely be reported that he finally reaches home and wife with some odd companions—an Italian organ grinder, a pretty girl dancer and a monkey. The exasperated and long-suffering spouse throws "Fatty's" friends out and puts him to bed and the next morning takes him to a sanitarium for the cure.

At this point, it may be stated, the fun has really just commenced, for what the doctor and interne do to poor "Fatty" would be shameful were anybody else their victim. But "Fatty" has a regular field day when he masquerades as a female nurse.

Arbuckle wrote this comedy and directed it himself, while George Peters did the camera work.

No Summer Let-Up in "Big V" comedies.

There is to be no Summer let-up in the production of Big V comedies. Two companies are steadily working at the studio in Hollywood and they will continue there indefinitely. One of these companies is headed by Lawrence Semon, the other by Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, and they alternate weekly on the Vitagraph program.

A statement from the Vitagraph offices is to the effect that the comedy business is on the increase and it is attributed to the general desire of the public to see the brighter side of life, even if it is slap-stick. Exhibitors report that there has been a steady improvement in the Big V's, both in the matter of story and settings, and each one seems to get better than its predecessor.

Great Mob Scenes in "The Road to France"

ONE of the largest mob scenes ever employed in the east in pictures was handled by Director Dell Henderson in "The Road to France," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred. The title of this picture is claimed by World Pictures to be indicative of just how the present conflict between nations will be brought to a successful termination. It displays just what weapons the United States will employ in forcing peace on the Huns. Even though our people have a general idea of the resources of this country, "The Road to France" will open their eyes to the enormous power of this nation in the way of men, material and means. Mr. Henderson expresses the belief that never in all his career has he had a picture that gives him the one great chance he found in this one.

Five Second Year Plays Under Way at Goldwyn's

FIVE productions, two of them virtually completed, for Goldwyn's second producing year, which begins the first week in September, are under way at the Fort Lee studios of the company. This means that the twenty-six pictures promised for the year which was begun with "Polly of the Circus" have been finished and are undergoing titling and assembling. With the release of "Money Mad," starring Mae Marsh, on August 25, Goldwyn's first milestone will have been passed.

Geraldine Farrar's initial Goldwyn production, which probably will be the first release of the new year, is nearing completion under the direction of Reginald Barker. Its title has not been announced, nor has the nature of the story been made public. Herbert Rawlinson heads a supporting cast including such well-known figures of the stage and screen as Violet Heming, Hassard Short, Percy Marmont and Maude Turner Gordon.

Tom Moore's first Goldwyn starring vehicle, completed some time since, is being given the final polishing touches of assembling and titling and will be ready for release among the first few of the forthcoming season. A capable cast supports the new star, formerly a popular leading man for each of Goldwyn's feminine stars in turn, in an original story from the pen of Charles A. Logue.

Madge Kennedy has been photographed in the concluding scenes of "Friend Husband," written by Lois Zellner, and directed by Clarence G. Badger, and has begun work on her first picture for the new year. Its title has not yet been announced, nor has its nature been made public. It is said, however, to be one of the most delightful vehicles provided for her since she became a screen star under Goldwyn auspices.

Mabel Normand's "Back to the Woods" is completed, and she is at work on another production. Mae Marsh has finished "Money Mad."

Sennett's Next Is "Ladies First."

The Paramount Mack-Sennett comedy release for July 15 is "Ladies First," and features Chester Conklin, Mary Thurman and Harry Gribbon. Its theme lies in the truism that it would be all right for anyone to have a beautiful wife if all the other men in the world were blind, otherwise the situation presents complications. For Chester the most acute of these "complications" is a man dressmaker.

Among the other capable comedians in the picture are Eva Thatcher and Paddy McGuire. Ray Grainger, and Fred Fishback directed the picture.

Exhibitors Enthusiastic Over Vitagraph Serial Policy

A DEMONSTRATION of exhibitors' faith in Vitagraph promises and Vitagraph product has been recorded during the past week as the result of the new continuous serial policy announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company. Just a week ago Mr. Smith, in letting it be known that Antonio Moreno had resumed his place on the roster of Vitagraph stars, gave out a statement in which he announced that a permanent serial policy had been decided upon by Vitagraph whereby William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, would head one serial company and Moreno and Carol Holloway another. The company will produce four serials a year, each of these companies appearing in two productions, it was stated.

Already a score of exhibitors in various sections of the country have signed in advance for a yearly serial service on the new Vitagraph booking plan. This is believed to be the first time that exhibitors have been given the opportunity of arranging their serial bookings a year or more in advance, and the first time that contracts for such service have been made for that period of time.

President Smith, in discussing the serial policy of his company, said: "Vitagraph has arrived at that point in serial production where we can safely promise, a year in advance, four high-class serials in a twelvemonth. A year ago we established the rule of 'a serial episode for each week in the year,' and now, with two strong companies organized and producing arrangements made definitely, we are in a position to announce far in advance the release dates of the several serials. I also pledge to exhibitors that all of our serials in the future will be up to the standards set by 'The Fighting Trail,' 'Vengeance—and the Woman,' and 'The Woman in the Web.' To these will be added on July 15 'A Fight for Millions,' featuring William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan. On October 21 this will be followed by the first Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial; this in turn will be followed by another Duncan serial on January 27, 1919. The second Moreno-Holloway serial will be released on May 15, 1919."

Gordon Is Leading Man For Ethel Barrymore

IN the cast of "Our Mrs. McChesney," which, under the direction of Ralph Ince, is the current starring vehicle for Ethel Barrymore now being filmed at Metro's Sixty-first street studio, is Huntley Gordon. In fact, Mr. Gordon is Miss Barrymore's leading man, playing the part of T. A. Buck, Jr. Mr. Gordon was especially chosen for this role by Maxwell Karger, manager of productions for Metro, not only because of his having been a member of Miss Barrymore's cast in the original stage production of "Our Mrs. McChesney," but, too, because of the young man's former clever work in previous Metro pictures. In the role of T. A. Buck, Jr., Mr. Gordon is first the junior member of the famous Featherloom Petticoat Company, and later the owner, as is Emma McChesney—Ethel Barrymore—the traveling saleswoman in the opening scenes, and the secretary later in the production.

Mr. Gordon began his professional career on the speaking stage, being associated with several Broadway successes, notably that of the William A. Brady production of "Life."

Among Mr. Gordon's former screen successes prior to his association with Metro are several features in which he was the leading man for Lucille Lee Stewart. Under the Metro banner he played first with Joseph Kilgour, was a member of Miss Barrymore's cast in several feature screen productions, and had an important role in "The Million Dollar Dollies."

"Love and the Woman" (World Pictures)

World Pictures has purchased of Philip Lonergan a scenario entitled "Love and the Woman," the continuity for which is now being made by the scenario department with June Elvidge for the stellar role. At the beginning of the story Miss Elvidge appears as a scrubwoman employed in a hotel. She is the sole support of her infant daughter. Realizing that without wealth and social position her child will have little or no opportunity to better her condition, she seizes upon a chance to substitute her child for that of a rich man's offspring. This situation furnishes the principal theme of the story. Frank Mayo will play opposite her.

Margery Wilson and William Desmond Lead Triangle

DESCRIBED as an unusual mystery play, "Marked Cards," featuring Margery Wilson and Wallace MacDonald, is the first release on the Triangle program for the week of July 14. It was written by Adela Rogers St. Johns. It is a story of sacrifice. The heroine sacrifices her honor that she may save from the gallows the boy she loves. And she wins the affection of the obstinate mother who objected to the marriage of her aristocratic son to the daughter of a former laborer.

H. D'Elba directed the production which offers Margery Wilson, who appeared recently in "Old Loves for New" and "The Hand at the Window." Wallace MacDonald, who received favorable comment for his portrayal of the wayward son in "Madame Sphinx," will support Miss Wilson. This will be MacDonald's final appearance with Triangle before his enlistment in the Canadian Artillery. Jack Curtis and Rae Godfrey also are in the cast.

"Hell's End," with William Desmond, is the second release of the week. The New York underworld forms the background of this play, which shows Desmond as the ruler of a district from which the picture takes its unusual title, a refuge for crooks and political intriguers.

Josie Sedgwick will appear for the first time as Desmond's leading woman in the part of Mary Flynn. Louis (Bull) Durham will play the heavy role of Hank Dillon, and Dorothy Hagar is Belle Burns, who habituates the district.

"Hell's End" was written by A. Steese Richardson, with scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. The production was directed by J. W. McLaughlin and photographed by S. S. Norton.

Fox Completes Spectacular German Spy Production

THE German spy system in America has at last been exposed on the screen, according to an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation. Captain Horst von der Goltz, confessed leader in the plot to blow up the Welland Canal in Canada, and for ten years a secret agent of the Imperial German Government, has made far-reaching revelations of the workings of German spies in this country and has assisted R. A. Walsh to film "The Prussian Cur," a nine-reel spectacle-drama, featuring Miriam Cooper and showing Captain von der Goltz in person engaged in the pro-German activities which he exposes.

"The Prussian Cur" not only reveals the workings of German spies and propagandists in America, as set on foot by Ambassador von Bernstorff, but it is virtually a review of the whole World War. It goes clear back to the close of the Civil War and shows the development of the conditions and ways of thought in Germany and the United States which have finally clashed in the present struggle.

Beginning with Lincoln and William I. of Prussia, the picture throws on the screen an impressive galaxy of world figures, including President Wilson, the Kaiser, General Pershing and numerous other statesmen and military leaders who are now making history.

So pretentious is the production of "The Prussian Cur," that the William Fox forces announce that its first-run showings will be made only in first class theaters. It is said that these performances will probably be given through the K. and E. circuit.

Although historical figures and events and the secret activities of the Kaiser's minions in America are the leading themes in "The Prussian Cur," strong heart interest has been provided by Director Walsh in the romance of a typical American family, one of whose daughters is played by Miriam Cooper in the role of Rose O'Grady. Another daughter, Lily, is wooed and won and driven to her death by Otto Goltz (Capt. von der Goltz), a German spy. In the course of this story of love and treachery, the workings of the Imperial German spy system are said to be revealed.

It is declared by those who have seen "The Prussian Cur" in its preliminary showings that virtually no chapter of the Great War has been omitted from its scenes.

The Allied fleets, the submarines, air squadrons, vivid battle scenes, the Kaiser and his crew at Potsdam and in the field, the departure of the Lusitania, Congress in session, American war works, troop movements, launching of ships, the pouring of our armies into France—these and many other stirring scenes are woven into "The Prussian Cur."

Also, running through, and casting its sinister influence over these activities is the German spy system and the damage wrought by its agents.

Griffith Artcraft Ready For Public Showing Soon

D. W. GRIFFITH'S first Artcraft production, "The Great Love," has been scheduled for public presentation early in August. The production marks the first D. W. Griffith cinema to be released direct to the exhibitor in several years. A notable cast is presented, including Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, George Siegmann, Rosemary Theby, Mansfield Stanley and Gloria Hope.

In the making of "The Great Love" Mr. Griffith received the help and encouragement of Queen Alexandra and the leaders of social activities of London. The Queen directed scenes in Lady Manner's country estate which has become a hospital for convalescent soldiers from the front. The picture in its entirety tells a love story, but its prime purpose is to show how war has leveled all ranks and awakened the so-called leisure classes of the British Empire to the need of their country.

"One Thousand Dollars" Sounds Good.

There is a good omen for exhibitors in "One Thousand Dollars," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature which has been scheduled for release on July 8. The story is another one of the O. Henry gems done into a five reel feature, and in addition to its rather alluring title the production will give to exhibitors three stars of recognized drawing power and a supporting cast of strength. Edward Earle, Florence Deshon and Agnes Ayres are featured in this production, which was made under the direction of Kenneth Webb.

"His Bonded Wife" Chosen by Metro for Emmy Wehlen

MAXWELL KARGER, manager of productions at the Metro Sixty-first street studio having selected "His Bonded Wife," a five-act up to date romance by Lois and Arthur Zellner, as the starting vehicle for Emmy Wehlen, has appointed Charles J. Brabin as her director, with Alfred Raboch as assistant.

Mr. Brabin has spared neither time nor energy during this past week in the selection of a cast to surround Miss Wehlen so as best to enact the interesting characters of "His Bonded Wife."

Creighton Hale will play the role opposite to that of Miss Wehlen. Miss Wehlen's sister will be played by Warda Howard, who has just finished a forty-two weeks stock engagement and who also makes her debut with Metro in "His Bonded Wife." Miss Howard is a San Francisco girl. She began her stage career in stock and was graduated to star in "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Wolf," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "Paid in Full" and "Brewster's Millions." Her debut before the camera was under the Essanay banner in 1915. Miss Wehlen's cast also includes a Metro favorite of two years, Frank Currier.

As Doris Morse in "His Bonded Wife," Miss Wehlen will have one of her best opportunities. She will have practically a dual role, yet that of one and the same person. She will depict a typical American girl, adventurous, fascinating. And she also will wear several recent Paris importations.

The scenes of "His Bonded Wife" call for many elaborate sets and not a few interesting outside locations. Mr. Brabin will divulge one scene, or rather a scene within a scene. For this a team of Pierrettes, Columbines and Harlequins have been especially engaged. They will portray in pantomime a playlet entitled "What Is Happening at a House Party" in an Urbanistic setting.

Montgomery Attacked by Auto Bandits.

Earle Montgomery of the Vitagraph Big V Company team, Montgomery and Rock, suffered considerable facial injury on a recent Sunday night when, returning from Seal Beach with a party of friends, a hold-up auto crowded the Montgomery party off the road, and then attacked Mr. Montgomery and his friends with monkey wrenches. In reaching for the monkey wrench at the side of his car, Mr. Montgomery met all comers. There were three of them. Mr. Montgomery downed the first one with one tap of the wrench. But the struggle with two other men was a long one. For twenty minutes they fought; at the conclusion of that time, Mr. Montgomery, his face hardly recognizable issued triumphant from the fray, holding in the strong grasp of either hand the ankle of a dethroned hold-up man. Mr. Montgomery was forced to allow his prisoners to get away.

Miss Frederick Will Soon Begin Work at Goldwyn's

PERHAPS the happiest screen star in all the world at this moment is Pauline Frederick, who shortly will begin work in the Goldwyn studios on her first production to be released under the Goldwyn imprint.

Miss Frederick is not by any means beginning a new career, for she is backed by years of deserved popularity, both on the stage and screen. But her new productions will bring her back at once to the most successful period of her career on the screen—the time when she deserted the stage at the height of her popularity to play emotional roles in modern drama for the cinema. From her first day in pictures Pauline Frederick has been a profitable star for the nation's picture theater owners.

Possessing beauty, charm and dramatic power, her initial productions most skillfully utilized her splendid capacities and won her the instant liking of the men whose approval is essential before a star can reach the great public which has made motion pictures the world's greatest amusement.

Willard Mack, who, in addition to being Goldwyn's scenario editor, is also Miss Frederick's husband, has for months been selecting her new material, and expresses the belief that the biggest work of her life is that to be done during the summer and winter months in the productions that Goldwyn will release in the coming season.

Metro Engages Two Stars; Each Will Head Company

TWO new stars have been engaged by Metro, Olive Tell and Hale Hamilton. Both Miss Tell and Mr. Hamilton will head their own companies.

Mr. Hamilton's initial production will be "Five Thousand an Hour," from the pen of George Randolph Chester. Miss Tell's vehicle has as yet not been decided upon.

Both these stars have within the past few weeks established themselves as Metro favorites. Mr. Hamilton was the leading man in "The Winning of Beatrice" and in "Opportunity." Miss Tell made her Metro debut in "To Hell With the Kaiser," playing the part of Alice Monroe.

Hale Hamilton is one of Broadway's popular actors. Most notable of his engagements was that in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," which play, the dramatization of George Randolph Chester's famous stories, Mr. Hamilton made famous in America, England, and Australia. In fact, it was the young man's success in Wallingford which caused Mr. Chester to have him in mind when writing his novel, "Five Thousand an Hour."

Last season Miss Tell co-starred with Thomas A. Wise and William Courtney in "General Post," and received the honor of being engaged by Henry Miller to co-star with him in the opening production of his beautiful theater, the Henry Miller.

Vivian Martin in Rinehart Story.

Vivian Martin, whose many charming characterizations in Paramount pictures have won for her a host of admirers in the ranks of the film patrons, is announced in a new production entitled "Her Country First," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, with the scenario by Edith Kennedy. James Young directed the picture and the photography is by Frank Garbutt.

Particularly interesting at this time, because of its patriotic character, filled wth delightful comedy, of the sort that Mrs. Rinehart can so perfectly create, and which, it is said, has been transferred to the screen by Miss Kennedy with genuine skill, "Her Country First," should prove the most appealing of Miss Martin's Paramount vehicles.

Sherry Reports Excellent Returns from His Exchanges

FOLLOWING the second release of the new distributing service, "The Street of Seven Stars, which was shown to the public for the first time last week, William L. Sherry announces that the demand for his initial releases has greatly encouraged him and given him absolute confidence that the style of pictures he is handling are what exhibitors want. He has now permanent managers for all his exchanges, and from each excellent returns have been received. Reports show that business is especially good in the Western territory.

"I have now gone far enough to obtain a practical, concrete basis of judging what the newly organized William L. Sherry Service is capable of accomplishing," says Mr. Sherry. "Most of my men have been well acquainted with me for years as a practical man in the film industry, and many have been affiliated with me in former enterprises. Thus it has been comparatively easy for us to co-ordinate our efforts and get the results we expected to get.

"Both of my early releases, 'A Romance of the Underworld,' a Frank A. Keeney production, and 'The Street of Seven Stars,' produced by De Luxe Pictures, Inc., are having a very wide sale "in spite of the lassitude of the hot weather demand. This is due to two causes—the pictures are good and my salesmen are hustling. I might also add that exhibitors are showing great confidence in the William L. Sherry Service."

Mr. Sherry expects to announce shortly the third of his releases, "Out of the Night," a Keeney production starring Catherine Calvert, who is featured in all the other Keeney pictures. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. All of the De Luxe pictures star Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company. The second release of De Luxe will be "The Inn of the Blue Moon," especially written for Miss Kenyon by Louis Joseph Vance. The fictional rights have already been contracted for by one of the leading magazines of the country.

The Keeney forces are now well under way with their fourth picture, "The Girl With a Past," by Paul Armstrong. It is stated that some beautiful exteriors have been taken within the last week. All the interiors are being made in the Biograph studios.

Employes of Large Plants See "Pershing's Crusaders"

UP TO DATE three of the country's largest manufacturing plants engaged in war work have staged special showings of "Pershing's Crusaders" for the benefit of their employes.

In Minneapolis, where the film is playing an engagement at the Metropolitan theater, the Pillsbury Milling Company and the Washburn-Crosby Company purchased the entire seating capacity of the Metropolitan for one day and held a special showing for the workers in the plant. The performances, which were attended by upward of 5,000 employes, were marked throughout by continuous outbursts of patriotic enthusiasm.

In Boston the Gillette Safety Razor Company, which is also engaged in important war work, recently invited more than 2,500 employes to a special performance of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Shubert theater, purchasing the entire seating capacity of the theater for the occasion.

Officials of the companies mentioned above explained to representatives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that their purpose in giving these special showings of the big spectacle was to spur their employes on to increased effort and efficiency by instilling each one with a keener realization of his individual importance in the prosecution of the war.

Skeptical Author Conceals Identity.

"The Driving Power" is the title of a story which World Pictures will soon put into work for a five-reel feature. Its author is a celebrated writer whose name is a household word in America. The contract for the sale of this story explicitly states that the author's name shall not be divulged without his consent. This is contingent upon the reception of the picture after its production, and if it is favorably received he is then willing to have his name used. This rather remarkable situation grows out of the experience he had with another film company that was not pleasant. Since then he has decided that never again would he either permit any of his writings to be seen on the screen or would he create a special story for film purposes. At the request of Charles Sarver, the scenario editor of World Pictures, a lifelong friend of his, he was persuaded to try just once more. The advent of "The Driving Power" on the screen will be looked forward to with unusual interest.

Essanay to Issue Third Block of Ten Broncho Billies

THE revived Broncho Billy dramas have proved so popular that Essanay has decided to issue a third block of ten pictures. These one-reel dramas of the western hills and plains are booking at an unprecedented rate, according to the George Kleine System, through which they are being released.

Exhibitors declare that these dramas have filled a long felt want, there being a dearth of first class one-reel subjects to fill out their programs. However, these are not only being used as program fillers, but in scores of instances as the big event of the night. This is shown not only by what the exhibitors have written to Essanay and the George Kleine offices but by the amount of paper being used. It has been necessary to get out a full line of paper for these one-reel subjects and just as many one and three sheets have been used to advertise the plays as for the features.

The majority of exhibitors using these subjects are booking them one each week and advertising them for a certain night. They have reported a large attendance on these nights.

This third block will bring before the public thirty Broncho Billy pictures now ready for release. The third series will start July 19 and will be issued once a week thereafter. The first release is "Broncho Billy and the Gambler," followed by "Broncho Billy Butts In," "Broncho Billy, Vagabond," "Broncho Billy, Favorite," "Broncho Billy's Punishment," "Broncho Billy and the Claim Jumper," "Broncho Billy and the Sheriff's Office," "Broncho Billy, Outlaw," "The Accusation of Broncho Billy" and "Broncho Billy's Double Escape."

Dustin Farnum Is Adopted By 115th Sanitary Train

FOR what is said to be the first time since America entered the war a male moving picture star has been adopted by the medical department of the army. Dustin Farnum has been made the big brother of the 115th Sanitary train stationed at Camp Kearney, California.

Mr. Farnum recently visited this organization, which includes four field hospitals and ambulance trains, has a personnel of over 1,000 men and is commanded by Major W. A. Jolley, and was presented with a handsome watch on which was inscribed: "To Our Big Brother, Dustin Farnum, from the 115th Sanitary Train, U. S. Army."

A review of the entire train was held, after which a luncheon was served, during which a number of vaudeville acts were performed by members of this organization. Later, several athletic events were held, including a ball game between the 115th and the 159th Infantry, who are proteges of William S. Hart, the 115th being the victors. A variety of races and several boxing bouts concluded the day's events.

Williams Working in Santa Barbara.

Earle Williams and his company, including Grace Darmond, his leading woman, is on location in Santa Barbara. Location cites in this picturesque city, together with the Gillespie Estate, in Montecito out of Santa Barbara, figure in the picture being directed by Jack Conway which is entitled "The Man From Brodneys."

Scene from "Back to the Woods" (Goldwyn).

Kerrigan's Work Shows Not a Trace of Injury

NOW that J. Warren Kerrigan has completed his Paralta Play, "A Burglar for a Night," it is worth while mentioning that in none of his previous pictures has he been called upon to perform so many hazardous and thrilling "stunts" as he does in this production, which should set at rest any fear that his recent accident will in any way handicap him.

The scenarioist, F. McGrew Willis, made it incumbent upon Kerrigan to fight his way through a mob of Chinese highwaymen, which the actor does in a manner that would elicit the warmest commendation from experts. Then, as if this opening scene in "A Burglar for a Night" were not a sufficient test of Kerrigan's physical prowess, the Paralta player proceeds to prove that his injured leg is as good if not better than it ever was by a series of screen acrobatics that range from rescuing Lois Wilson from the chilly waters of the Pacific to climbing up the side of an eighty-five foot bridge and then diving from this altitudinous perch into the waters beneath the steel structure.

Story Chosen for Mary MacLaren.

"The Vanity Pool," a magazine novelette by Nalbro Bartley, which appeared recently in Youngs, has been chosen by Universal as Mary MacLaren's starring vehicle. The story has been turned over to Universal's artistic woman director, Ida May Park, who is creating the working scenario.

It is a modern society story of a young girl's development, that promises to work up into a sensational melodrama.

A notable supporting cast is being carefully selected to support Miss MacLaren in this Universal special production.

General's Camp Films Are Popular.

The series of four one-reel subjects picturing the life of army recruits at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, produced by the Connecticut Film Company for General Film distribution, are proving popular in those territories represented by troops in training at the eastern camp, according to General Film. Although each reel is complete in itself, many exhibitors are combining the four reels and using them as a feature, a plan that is reported to have met with big success wherever tried.

Pathe Releases a Washburn in August.

Bryant Washburn has another of his amiable "young fellow" characters in hand in his new Pathe play, "The Ghost of the Rancho," which will be released in August by Pathe. Also, he has a very charming and sightly leading woman in the person of Rhea Mitchell, whose work on the screen has made her a favorite.

In "The Ghost of the Rancho," Washburn is a millionaire's son, who flees parental wrath and a threat to be doomed to hard work. There is a strong, compelling, dramatic force that slips into the picture toward the end.

"Maggie Pepper" Chosen For Ethel Clayton's Debut

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the motion picture rights to "Maggie Pepper," which will be an Ethel Clayton vehicle to be released under the Paramount trade mark.

The subject was Rose Stahl's greatest dramatic success and was written by Charles Klein. It had its first presentation in December, 1911, at the Harris theater, New York. One of the most successful stories of Mr. Klein, the play presents a human touch which met with popular approval when it started its phenomenal run as a "legitimate" attraction.

The part of Maggie Pepper offers an ideal character for Miss Clayton, who will be given a supporting cast that among motion picture patrons will be just as important as the players in the stage production were among theatrical followers.

"Maggie Pepper," which will be directed by Robert Vignola, will be one of the series of eight Ethel Clayton pictures to be produced for release during the coming year starting September 1.

Theda Bara to Portray Artist's Model.

Theda Bara as an artist's model will be the central theme of the next drama which the William Fox vampire will film, according to an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation.

Miss Bara, who has just completed filming "The Message of the Lilies," is now taking a short rest before plunging into work on her new production. The latest drama bears the temporary title of "Little She-Devil," but this, it is understood, is going to be changed.

The play is described as being considerably different from anything Miss Bara has yet attempted, but will afford plenty of opportunity for the William Fox star.

J. Gordon Edwards will direct the picture. This will make the twenty-eighth production which Mr. Edwards has directed for William Fox.

"Winning Grandma" Set for August.

Child lovers will find great delight in "Winning Grandma," the new photoplay in which Baby Marie Osborne appears and which will be released by Pathe in August. The comedy action is fast and furious and little Smiling Sammy, the colored lad who has been a big laugh provoker in recent Baby Marie pictures, is there with bells on.

Artist Says Bert Lytell Is Ideal American Type

BERT LYTELL is the ideal type of American manhood, in the opinion of Hans Ledeboer, Dutch artist and sculptor and gold medal winner at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. Mr. Ledeboer made the acquaintance of Mr. Lytell at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood and was so enthusiastic over Mr. Lytell's qualifications as a model that he asked and was granted permission to make the head and bust of the screen star in clay.

"Mr. Lytell embodies all that is characteristic of the young American," said Mr. Ledeboer. "He has a splendid head, with a strong jaw; well-placed eyes; a firm mouth and a general air of determination, physical vigor and mental alertness."

At the Panama-Pacific Exposition Mr. Ledeboer won a gold medal for supervising the art work in the Netherlands Building, to which he also contributed two mural paintings. He intends to complete the clay bust of Mr. Lytell and then have it cast in bronze, to be sent to Holland for exhibition in one of the national art galleries as representative of the ideal young American.

"A Wife's Conscience" Now Ready for Showing

Bessie Barriscale has completed her seventh play under the Paralta banner. It is entitled "A Wife's Conscience" and is a play of powerful human emotions in which the problem appears at once and the subsequent suspense is maintained at a high pitch throughout. Then, at a point where it seems that the heroine cannot possibly be extricated from the difficulties of her situation without losing the sympathy of the audience, there comes a startling denouement which reverses the situation and proves the wife whose conscience is the crux and title of the story, a very noble woman indeed.

Miss Barriscale and those connected with the filming of this production were especially pleased with the story. It combines the emotional situations of the actress' former plays, with a humanness and compelling sympathy of the sort usually found in plays more exclusively of this variety.

The original story, written by William Parker, was adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamothe. The production was filmed at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles under the direction of Howard Hickman. The technical and artistic details were under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton.

Miss Barriscale was supported by Edward Coxen as the lead, with Mary Jane Irving, baby star, and Charles Gunn, leading man.

"Britain's Bulwarks" Winding Up.

Pathe will release the twelfth and last episode of the Official British War Film, "Britain's Bulwarks," July 28. The title is "The Canadians at Vimy Ridge" and is said by those who have seen the advance showing to be by far the best of the series.

Most certainly it is of the widest appeal right now that renewed activity on the West front is centering on this historic battlefield, where so many brave Canadians met death in the first year of the war.

"Ne'er Do Well" Gets Business.

That the motion picture version of Rex Beach's famous story, "The Ne'er Do Well," has lost little of its hold with the public and the exhibitors is indicated by the large number of bookings received for the new edition of the photoplay feature, says General Film Company this week. A large number of General exchanges are reporting a brisk business on the reissue of the Selig picture, long runs predominating in the bookings received to date.

Success Series Schedule Complete For Half Year

THE complete schedule of the first six months' releases of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Success Series of reissues has just been announced. It includes twenty-six features, or one for each week of the period from September 1 to February 23.

The utmost care in the selection of subjects as well as the stars to be featured has been observed, to the end that the schedule presents the widest diversity possible. Each month offers one special subject, and, with the exception of Mary Pickford, whose "Caprice" is scheduled for November 3 and who will be seen in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" on December 29, no star will be featured in the series in two successive months. In addition to the six special productions, four of the reissues will feature Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark will be seen in three, Pauline Frederick in three, John Barrymore in two, Jack Pickford in two, Dustin Farnum in two, Geraldine Farrar in two and William Farnum and Victor Moore in one each.

As a fitting lead-off feature "The Eagle's Mate," one of Mary Pickford's most popular plays, has been selected for September 1 release. James Kirkwood directed this production, which shows Mary in the role of a gently reared girl of the hills who is thrown in with moonshiners and becomes the storm center of the rival affections of mountaineers.

Work on the renewing and retitling of these films, gathered from the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the United States and Canada, is progressing rapidly at the laboratories, a special department having been created for the purpose under the supervision of Frank Meyer, assisted by Hector Streyckmans. When the labors of this staff of experts are finished, it is promised that these reissues will be even more satisfactory to exhibitors and public as when they were originally placed on the market.

Roy Stewart Writes a Western.

The next Triangle Western subject will be a play written by Roy Stewart, the popular cowboy player.

Stewart and Director Cliff Smith are now working on the interior scenes of this play, which is temporarily titled "The Fighting Gringo." On July 1, they went with their company, thirty-three in all, to the O'Neill ranch near San Juan Capistrano, for the summer round-up, where they will secure the exterior scenes. Steve Rounds is handling the camera.

Marion Davies in Washington Starts Second Select

WORK on the second picture Marion Davies is making for Select has started in Washington, to which city Miss Davies, accompanied by the members of the company, and Julius Steger, under whose supervision the picture will be made, went July 1.

The vehicle is a down-to-the-minute story of romance, intrigue and international politics. The action takes place in the present year, and the settings are laid entirely in American cities, Newport and Washington being the locale of most of the scenes. "The Burden of Proof" is the title which has been given this story, which has been prepared by S. M. Weller. The photoplay is not a war drama in any sense, but nevertheless there is a background of war in the picture—as must needs be the case with every drama dealing with national American life today. Indeed, there are glimpses of the National Capitol, with flags flying and marching columns of men in khaki.

Miss Davies' role is that of a bride who, through peculiar stress of circumstances, finds herself the center of a maelstrom of international intrigue. The big moment of the play comes when, seemingly convicted by the accusing figure of circumstantial evidence, the bride faces her husband and tests his faith in her.

Mr. Steger will be assisted by John G. Adolphi. Andre R. Barlartier will do the camera work. Miss Davies' leading man will be John Merkyle. One of the most prominent characters in the picture will be played by L. Rogers Lytton, well remembered for the role which he created in "The Battle Cry of Peace." Mr. Lytton will portray another one of these characters, such as are often termed "Rogers Lytton roles."

Jobyna Howland Plays With Norma Talmadge

JOBYNA HOWLAND, the original "Gibson Girl" and dramatic actress, who scored during the past season in "Nancy Lee," faced the camera for the first time last week at the Norma Talmadge studio. She has been cast by Director Sidney A. Franklin for an important part in Miss Talmadge's new picture, "What Might Have Been." Miss Howland has a regular vampire role, and is called upon to exercise all her feminine arts to entrap a wealthy banker whom she wishes to lure away from his wife.

Although this is her first motion picture appearance, Miss Howland has been a prominent figure on the speaking stage for years. She has alternated in musical comedy and the legitimate, and has played important roles in such widely different plays as "Rupert of Hentzau," with James K. Hackett, and "The Passing Show of 1917," a Winter Garden show. Her greatest triumph was made last season in Eugene Walter's play, "Nancy Lee," at the Hudson theater. As the model for the famous "Gibson Girl" drawings which were a sensation some years ago, Miss Howland first came into prominence. She admits that acting before the camera at the Norma Talmadge studios is the first posing she has done since she was a model for Charles Dana Gibson.

"Miss Innocence" a Strong Fox Special Feature Issue

A PLAY of political treachery, intrigue, false accusations, innocence, Broadway life and convent cloisters is the description given in a statement from the Fox Film Corporation of "Miss Innocence," which, with June Caprice as the star, will be the latest Fox special feature release. The play is said to be the strongest which June Caprice has yet enacted.

Miss Caprice is surrounded by a capable cast, other players in the production being Marie Shotwell, Robert Walker, Frank Beamish, Carlton Macey and Mrs. Carlton.

Universal Well Ahead of Production Dates on Serials

SUCH satisfactory progress has been made upon the production work of two of Universal's forthcoming serials that long before the dates set for their release both will have been entirely completed and distributed among that company's exchanges.

The serials are "The Brass Bullet" and "The Lure of the Circus," the former featuring Juanita Hansen and Jack Mulhall, while the second will be the vehicle in which Eddie Polo will display his athletic prowess.

"The Brass Bullet" will be the first of Universal's 1918-1919 serial thrillers and is scheduled to be shown at the first run theaters commencing with August 15. The story will be told in eighteen two-reel weekly episodes and, according to its producers, is beyond all question the best and most unusual story of the to-be-continued type yet turned out by that organization.

The cast engaged for this serial includes, besides the principal players, such sterling performers as Charles Hill Mailes, Helen Wright, Charles Force, Hal Cooley, Joseph Girard and Ashton Dearholt.

Although there are sixteen episodes of "The Brass Bullet," but five have been completed and titled so far. The names of these chapters are: Episode No. 1, "A Flying Start", Episode 2, "The Muffled Man" Episode 3, "Locked in the Tower", Episode 4, "Smoked Out", Episode 5, "The Mock Bride."

As the "Lure of the Circus" indicates, the Eddie Polo story will be a circus serial. As a matter of fact, this Universal player was formerly one of the most famous of circus acrobats and it was because of his work with a big tanbark aggregation that he attracted the attention of Universal officials.

Although no definite release date for "The Lure of the Circus" has yet been set, it will follow close upon the heels of "The Brass Bullet"—probably within a few weeks after the first episode of the latter serial has been issued.

Dog in Essanay's Feature Doubles Just Like Humans

THE doubling of an actor in a scene is an old story to film folk, but it was left for Essanay to double with a dog. This is done in the George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," now being produced at the Essanay studios in Chicago.

It required infinite patience on the part of Director Berthlet as well as the dog's master, Charles Frohman Everett, who plays the lead in the picture, to accomplish the result. It was wellnigh impossible to keep the dog in the same position long enough to register accurately, although the canine has been trained with infinite care by its young master.

After nearly a score of retakes the scene was finally completed, and it is believed to be the first scene ever presented in which a dog doubles for itself. The picture is taken from the Cohan and Harris production written by Fred. Ballard, and which had a great stage success recently. It will be seven reels in length.

Pathe Summer Program Avoids the Heavy Stuff

PATHE announces that the plan for summer programs will be happily devoid of "heavy stuff." The big features to be released in July and August are for the most part light comedies, altho there are two serious plays in the list.

The program for the summer will include "Annexing Bill," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale; "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan; "Cupid by Proxy," with Baby Marie Osborne; "The First Law," with Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno; "Waifs," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale; "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan; "Cupid by Proxy," with Baby Marie Osborne; "The First Law," with Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno; "Waifs," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale; "The Ghost of the Rancho," with Bryant Washburn, Rhea Mitchell and a fine company; "Winning Grandma," with Baby Marie Osborne, and "The Girl from Bohemia," with Irene Castle.

"The Girl from Bohemia" will be released on August 25 and it is a rather notable Pathe play for the reason that it may mean the marking of Irene Castle's retirement from the screen.

There will be another feature play released on the program for the week of Sept. 1, but for the week of September 8 the fall season will be inducted with a big special, "The Woman Eternal," starring Elaine Hammerstein.

No Vacation for Harold Lloyd.

Harold Lloyd comedies will continue without interruption this summer, it is announced by Pathe. Rolin studios do not expect to take a vacation, but will keep the respective noses of Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard to the studio grindstone. Subjects to be released are "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," July 21; "That's Him," August 4; "Bride and Gloom," August 18, and "Two Scrambled," September 1.

Two New Faces in Paramount Issue.

Two faces new to Paramount will be seen in the next Sessue Hayakawa picture, "The City of Dim Faces," written by Frances Marion and directed by George Melford. These are Marin Sais, well known to screen patrons, and Doris Pawn, a young woman who has been starred by other companies in popular productions.

San Franciscans Greet Clara Kimball Young

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, in accordance with the schedule of activities following the completion of "The Savage Woman" at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, appeared on July 2 at the California theater, San Francisco. The occasion was an added impetus to stimulating recruiting activities and also the first of Miss Young's appearances in her tour of the western coast on her return trip to New York. Miss Young's reception was one of the most enthusiastic welcomes ever accorded a player in the city.

In honor of her appearance at the theater a big parade was held in which fifty automobiles carried many naval officials and prominent citizens. The parade was headed by a navy band consisting of one hundred instruments. The crowd which gathered in front of the theater seeking admittance after the doors had been closed on a capacity house was so great that the traffic police had difficulty in restoring order.

Miss Young's next appearance will be in Portland, Ore., and following that she will visit Tacoma, Seattle and Spokane.

W. H. Rudolph, Miss Young's personal publicity representative, accompanied by Harry Garson, her manager, have gone ahead to supervise all arrangements for her appearance at the various theaters.

Mix's Cowboys Do a Shooting Bit.

American hatred for the Kaiser was given an exhibition the other day at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal., during the filming of "Kultur," a big film which the William Fox director, Edward J. Le Saint, has just finished, with Gladys Brockwell as star. One of the scenes took place in the council chamber of the German Emperor, and in the center of the rear wall hung a huge portrait of the Kaiser. After all the scenes in which this set was needed had been completed a bunch of cowboys from the Tom Mix company, who happened by, walked across the stage and emptied every chamber of their six-shooters into the face of the All Highest. The painting was riddled by bullets.

In "Kultur" Miss Brockwell appears in the role of the Countess von Ahrenberg, and reports from the West Coast state that the picture is one of the most powerful this Fox star has yet produced. The story deals partially with the secret intrigues of Germany in forcing Austria to begin the world conflict by attacking Serbia.

J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton wrote the story and the scenario was done by Mr. Alexander.

Big Demand for "Hypocrites."

The announcement that General Film Company would take over the distribution of the George Loane Tucker feature, "The Hypocrite," has been followed by a flood of bookings, General reports. From indications at hand, it is expected this feature production, which is declared to be among the best work done by Mr. Tucker, will score a success, especially in the larger cities, where the advertising value of the name of the producer is fully appreciated by showmen. Bookings in such cities as New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, San Francisco, Detroit and Washington have been unusually heavy.

Preparations have been made by General Film to place an intensive sales campaign back of the production which officials of the company believe is due the photoplay because of its great artistic merit and high entertainment qualities. Elizabeth Risdon, the star, is already a big drawing card, and in this production, which is based on the famous stage play of the same name by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, is expected to score the hit of her career.

Scene from "L'Occident" (Metro).

Baby Marie in "Cupid by Proxy" Starts Pathe July 21

CUPID by Proxy," in which Baby Marie Osborn is starred, heads the Pathe program No. 208, released July 21. "Cupid by Proxy" is an elemental comedy with a strong romantic flavor. It concerns two families who live side by side. Fortune comes to one of them and with it social aspirations which threaten to disrupt a romance. Baby Marie has a delightfully ingenuous role and of course there is a happy ending. The picture will have a wide appeal to the army of admirers of the little star.

The final and concluding chapter of Pathe's serial "The House of Hate" is released on this program. It is called "Following Old Glory." The Hooded Terror is not only further identified, but a just retribution overtakes him and the members of his gang. The episode ends somewhere in France, where Pearl as an ambulance driver and Antonio Moreno, the hero in khaki, are united.

There is a big comedy knockout on the program in "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," with Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. Harold Lloyd is a warrior in the trenches and his rough treatment of the Huns will be sure of a laugh. How he manages to reach Berlin in time to save the beautiful Red Cross nurse in the person of Bebe Daniels and how he acts up rough with the Kaiser and the rest of the Huns is told in a swift moving and entirely inoffensive way.

Part 11 of "Britain's Bulwarks" is titled "The Canadians on the Western Front." There are several exciting scenes presented with marching troops, prisoners and front line activities of the brave Canadians in this instalment.

The Allies Official War Review will contain up-to-the-minute battle pictures from the American, British, French and Italian fronts.

"East Indians of Trinidad" is the title of the Post Travel Series, one reeler, on this program, and in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 60 and No. 61 late war films and topical news subjects will be included as usual.

"More Trouble" Still Branching Out.

Probably with the idea of duplicating the hit registered at the Rivoli in Broadway, New York, where it had its premiere, "More Trouble," the Pathe Play in which Frank Keenan stars, has been booked at a top price by the management of the Rivoli in San Francisco. Other big bookings are reported by Pathe branch managers in all large cities.

Pathe's publicity department has issued a campaign book de luxe for the use of exhibitors, and in this volume are reproduced the splendid notices afforded the picture by the critics in New York. An elaborate layout of display advertising suggestions has also been issued, with the result that in twelve cities exhibitors booking "More Trouble" have largely increased their usual space for this showing.

Ebony to Use Mixed Casts.

Luther J. Pollard, general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, whose comedies are enacted by an all-colored cast released regularly on the General Film program, announces that the next series of Ebony comedies will be a departure from the usual custom of production, inasmuch as the five comedies will be enacted by a mixed cast of white and negro comedians, the negro humor still predominating.

Three of the liveliest and best laugh-feasts produced by this company have just been completed at the Windy City studio and ready to be shipped to the General Film Company in New York. The first subject is "When You Hit, Hit Hard." This was prepared for the screen by Bob Horner, scenario editor, from a story by William H. Rice. Beside this, Director Charles David wrote and produced the two other subjects, "Champion by the Flower-Pot Route" and "Unfinished Finish," which features Sam Robinson, Elmer Brown, Vyonne Junior, Samuel Jacks, and a large supporting cast. Plans for an advertising campaign on a larger scale is well under way.

Irene Castle in "The First Law."

"The First Law" will be released by Pathe as the big feature of the program for Sunday, July 28. Irene Castle is starred and Antonio Moreno featured in "The First Law," which is a screen version of the popular novel by Gilson Willets.

Hodkinson Calls for Twenty Representatives

ONE of the most significant moves in the business is claimed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in its call for twenty salesmen representatives to join its forces and not only sell Hodkinson service, but to spread the Hodkinson gospel of "responsibility to the exhibitor and a fair deal in every way."

"This is not merely a 'want ad'," said Mr. Hodkinson in commenting on the announcement which appears in the advertisement columns of the trade papers this week. "Note the wording and you will see that we are not simply engaging men. We are in fact recruiting a picked army for an offensive which we are contemplating.

"Every big reform movement encounters obstacles. The bigger and more sincere the endeavor the harder the battle. That is why we want men with moral courage in addition to their other qualifications—who cannot be stampeded by present conditions no matter how menacing.

"This is the reason we must have men with foresight—who can see what we stand for—who can appreciate why we are different than any other organization in the field.

"We do not expect the ordinary average film man to see this distinction, and this is why our appeal is only to the bigger men of the business who are in fact looking for the very opportunity which I was looking for ten years ago when I entered this business and which I did not find.

"The men who join us will be those who can see that our principles, ideas, and plans for the reorganization of this industry are correct and inevitable, and knowing this they will be eager to join us in order to ride on the crest of the wave that is steadily gathering in size and strength.

"While we call these men salesmen representatives that is only a partial description so they will be our connecting link with the exhibitors. They will not only sell our product on a fair and square business basis, but they will also, out of a sense of responsibility to the exhibitor, assist him to their fullest capacity in making a success of the product they sell him.

"We have a big job mapped out for each of these men, and are willing and anxious to remunerate them in accordance. We do not want failures, chronic change-abouts, or transients, but we do want clean hearted, clear headed, far-sighted men."

Scene from "Wedlock" (Paralta).

In "Wedlock" Louise Glaum Has Story That's Different

LOUISE GLAUM'S latest production, "Wedlock," is the third Paralta Play in which she has appeared. The picture was directed by Wallace Worsley. It is an original story from the pen of Denison Clift, who has contributed many successful stories to the silent drama, and in this play he has furnished Miss Glaum with an entirely different kind of role from anything in which she has heretofore appeared.

Before Miss Glaum joined Paralta she was popularly known as "The Peacock Vampire," but under the new management she is appearing in roles where this element does not appear. On the other hand, she is appearing in roles which, through strong, emotional acting, she is enabled to gain the sympathy of her audience. The decision was a wise one and the dramatic and emotional ability which she displays in "Wedlock" is a revelation to her old admirers. The very fabric and strength of the story of "Wedlock" rests upon the woman's nobility of character. Few stories have been written which show this element so strongly for a woman star, and in this one it is emphasized by the ingenious contrast brought in by the author.

It is the opinion of dramatic critics that Miss Glaum should play strong emotional parts, giving scope for her wide range of histrionic powers. Hitherto, these "strong" parts have been in the nature of sex problems, or in some way connected with the grosser side of human nature. In "Wedlock," the strength is there in abundance, but it is the strength of the character's great nobility and fine spirit.

Universal to Reissue "Scandal" as "Scandal Mongers"

FROM Universal comes the announcement that arrangements have been completed to issue a revised version of Lois Weber's sensational production, "Scandal." Under the new title of "Scandal Mongers," this subject, which excited such wide comment and which was the forerunner of features similar in theme, is to be the Bluebird release for July 22.

Released in its original form in 1915 "Scandal Mongers" represented the screen's first attempt to convey a message while providing entertainment. How well it succeeded is evidenced by the success it scored and by the booking demand that resulted.

The picture was notable for another reason. It was the first of a series of pictures which Lois Weber was to produce for Universal, and the relations which exist between that director and the Universal have continued with but a brief period uninterruptedly since the release of this subject.

It was "Scandal's" popularity that caused Miss Weber to favor stories which contained a message. The discovery that such pictures present a powerful appeal to the mind while also appealing to the heart caused her to specialize upon pictures of this type. "The Price of a Good Time," "Idle Wives" and "Even as You and I" are examples of how well she has succeeded in this work.

"Scandal Mongers" prove as popular today as it did three years ago because the story is as true and as timely in 1918 as it was in 1915.

The success which is attending Rupert Julian in the title role of Jewel's "The Kaiser" brings to light the fact that his first work as a screen artist is contained in "Scandal Mongers." Julian appears in the important role of Robert Gordon.

Lois Weber, who also enacts one of the central roles in this production, based her story upon an argument advanced by one of the greatest editorial writers in the country. According to this man, if you could stand behind one of the club windows of any great city you could hear more poisonous and dangerous gossip in half an hour than you could hear at a sewing circle during the whole afternoon.

In "Scandal Mongers" Miss Weber shows the result of carelessly uttered gossip; the mesh of circumstances which ruins the lives of William Wright, his wife, Robert Gordon and his wife, Daisy, Gordon's sister and John Austin.

In addition to Lois Weber and Rupert Julian, the cast includes Philip Smalley, Adele Farrington and Abe Mundon.

Universal Issues Campaign Book.

Full of valuable and practical ideas on various ways of merchandising "The Brass Bullet," Universal's forthcoming serial featuring Jack Mulhall and Juanita Hansen, is the campaign book just issued on this subject by that company.

Claiming the distinction of having issued the first exhibitor help book on serials, Universal has striven to make them of the utmost possible use to showmen. Its latest campaign book is no exception to the rule and exhibitors booking "The Brass Bullet" will find it a mine of information which should aid them greatly in putting the serial over.

Fifty Newspapers Print Post Travels.

More than fifty newspapers throughout the United States are now co-operating with Pathe and the Post Film Company in the exhibition of the Post Travel Series. The numbers to be released this summer are No. 6, "East Indians of Trinidad"; No. 7, "East Indians of British Guiana"; No. 8, "Venezuela"; No. 9, "La Guayra to Caracas." There are fifty subjects in all to be released.

Pathe's Toto Comedies for August.

One-reelers released by Pathe for Rolin, with Toto starred, will be as follows this summer: July 28, "Beach Nuts"; August 11, "Do Husbands Deceive?"; August 25, "Nipped in the Bud."

State Rights Department

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Arrow Has Ambitious Program for Next Four Weeks

Announces Seven New Features in Addition to Several One and Two Reel Reissues. Also to Issue a Monthly Bulletin for State Right Exchanges.

DURING the next four weeks the Arrow Film Corporation will offer several single and two-reel reissues, together with seven new productions varying in length from five to seven reels. Of this number thirty single reel and ten two-reel Warren Kerrigan subjects and four Allison-Lockwood subjects, each in five reels, have already been announced.

In connection with the enlarging of activities a monthly bulletin will be issued which will contain advertising matter in connection with each production, advertising and exploitation talks by W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, reports from local men, and other items of interest to state rights buyers. This bulletin will be mailed gratis to state rights exchange men.

Dr. Shallenberger also announces he has made a change in the method of territorial division so as to call for a minimum number of prints on each attraction in the belief that exchanges should be protected in the amount they invest in a production, and if the demand compels the use of additional prints the exchanges can be guided accordingly.

Gaumont Shows Buyers First Half of Serial

THE twenty-reel Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is now ready, and during the past week the first five episodes were shown to a number of independent buyers who are said to have been most enthusiastic in their praise.

Exhibitors have been writing and telegraphing the Gaumont Company at Flushing for several weeks, requesting terms. This unique serial, which will be released only through independent exchanges, is said to be full of pep, life and hustle. The characters are all red-blooded, the situation thrilling, and the dangers too numerous to mention. There is not a sex-situation in the entire story.

A line of slides and posters illustrating many of the most thrilling situations in the story have been prepared by the best artists. These have been designed to make the public want to see at least one episode of the story, with the conviction that whoever sees one episode will not stay away from the others.

Export Official Aids in Selecting Serial Title

IN the controversy as to the most appropriate title for the sixteen episode serial now being filmed by Western Photoplays, Inc., Leah Baird, the star has found a champion for her views in Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Incorporated, which has bought the export rights on this production.

Mr. Garrett believes that the selection of a suitable title is important, as in the foreign markets, such as Calcutta, Tokio, and Johannesburg, success often depends to a great extent of the psychology of the title, as a wrong title might arouse the antipathy of natives or officials. He is therefore collaborating heartily with Miss Baird in her search for an appropriate world-wide title, and in some instances has sent cablegrams to foreign motion picture centers along the same lines as the messages sent to exhibitors in this country.

Brady's "Stolen Orders" Moves to Lyric Theater

THE William A. Brady spy picture, "Stolen Orders," after a successful four weeks' run at the Park theater, New York, has been moved to the heart of the theatrical district, and opened for an indefinite run at the Lyric theater.

With its demonstration of the manner in which enemy secret agents operate, showing that people in all walks of life are often apparently innocently made a part of their plots, and the presentation of many unique and thrilling scenes, together with the fact that it is interpreted by a cast of several hundred people, including four stars, it is said to be proving an even greater box office magnet in its new home.

In addition to the New York engagement this production will shortly be seen in other theaters, among them Poli's theater, Washington, where it will open for a week's engagement commencing July 7.

"Your Fighting Navy" Now Ready for Buyers

THE Educational Films Corporation announces that prints of its patriotic naval picture, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," are now available for State Right buyers. Since its completion, several months have been spent in cutting out non-essentials, trimming to flashes, editing and titling, making a forceful continuity, and tinting and toning under the guidance of naval experts, until it is now a well edited, forceful picture. Its value to the State Right owners and exhibitors consists in its timeliness.

"Mexico Today," George D. Wright's series of one-reelers descriptive of conditions in the Southern republic, is receiving many new bookings on account of the interest in Mexican affairs. The series has been edited by President Skinner of the Educational Films Corporation.

Sid Grauman Using Gaumont News Reels

ONE of the greatest motion picture palaces in the West—indeed, one of the greatest in the world, is Sid Grauman's million dollar Theater in Los Angeles. It is therefore gratifying, not only to the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., which handles the Gaumont Semi-Weekly News Service on the Pacific Coast, but to the Gaumont Company, to be able to announce that Mr. Grauman is now running the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic exclusively in this theater. In the past it has been Mr. Grauman's custom to make up his own news-weekly by selecting a thousand feet of the most interesting subjects appearing in all of the news-reels.

Freak Auto Crash Caught For Leah Baird Serial

A LUCKY as well as spectacular effect was obtained dcring the filming of one of the "stunt" scenes in the serial starring Leah Baird, being filmed by Western Photoplays. The particular incident involved was the crashing of a touring car over a 150-foot cliff. Four cameras took all angles—two at the top and two below. When the auto landed, it hit squarely upon its four wheels, having turned over completely, and seemed to bound up in the air and then burst into a thousand pieces. The chassis with the four wheels still attached made a direct run head on to one of the cameras, demolished the tripod and damaged the camera, but upon developing the film it was found uninjured and intact.

Outside of a slightly barked skin, the cameramen escaped injury and the spectacular incident proved to be a wonderful "shot."

Mabel Scott Engaged For "Ashes of Love"

MABEL JULIENNE SCOTT has been engaged by Director Ivan Abramson for one of the principal roles in his new production, "The Ashes of Love," and one which it is said will afford her splendid opportunities for the display of her talents.

Miss Scott is well known to picture theater patrons, having appeared in several productions, including "The Barrier," "The Sign Invisible," and "Reclaimed."

Director Abramson is about ready to commence filming "The Ashes of Love," and, when finished, this picture will be released by Graphic Film Corporation.

Territory Sales on "Zongar" Announced

JAMES E. WILLIAMSON, general manager of Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., has returned from a tour of the country, disposing of state rights territory on the five-reel feature, "Zongar, the Dare-Devil of Romance."

His last two sales were to Josiah Pearce & Sons Amusement Company, of New Orleans, covering Louisiana and Mississippi, and Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, covering Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina, and Tennessee.

The only states now remaining unsold are Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Delaware.

"His Day Out" is Sixth Jester.

The sixth of the series of the Jester (Super) comedies, "His Day Out," will have its initial release August 1. This release completes the first half year of the Jester comedies.

Second Draft Drawing Pictured in Gaumont Graphic

Work of Railroad Administration in Keeping Rolling Stock in Good Condition. German Liquid Fire Projectors, Signal Service Laying Telephone Wires on Battlefield and Other Interesting Items Shown.

THE second selective drawing, in which 246 was the lucky number first chosen by Secretary of War Baker, is pictured in Gaumont Graphic No. 14, together with views of the work the Railroad Administration is doing in keeping the rolling stock in shape to handle the freight and passenger traffic. In one big Western shop, 4,800 locomotives are being repaired weekly.

Other scenes include the burning of German text books; a wreck in Utah which resulted in one death and fifty injuries; the production of potassium salts so necessary to war munitions, in the Salton Sea, in the Colorado Desert, one of the weirdest spots in existence, hundreds of feet below sea-level. From Italy come pictures showing the delivery of our U. S. Liberty Bonds to the Italian soldiers who subscribed for them, and the decoration of American Red Cross officers for exceptional valor on the Piave front by the Duke of Aosta.

No. 15 of the Gaumont News shows an instructive photograph of the "Flamen Werfers," liquid fire projectors which were captured in "No Man's Land" by our boys; "The Nerves of the Army," picturing the work of the Signal Corps in laying telephone wires to the different batteries on the battle front; and the work of the U. S. Marines in maneuvers, in airplanes, and in trench warfare.

The opening of the International Trade Exposition in New York City is also shown, together with the "Flying Gymkhana," held at Westbury, N. Y., for the benefit of the British and Canadian Fund.

Activities of Picture Men in New England

Harry I. Wasserman Elected Head of Committee to Confer on Operator Difficulty —William C. Franke Goes to Boston Appliance Company—Other Interesting Items.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

Operator Question Taken Up.

BOSTON.—At a recent meeting in this city of representatives of film exchanges, motion pictures exhibitors and representatives of the Motion Picture Operator's union, Harry I. Wasserman was appointed head of a committee to confer with the Vitagraph company on its difficulty with the operators' union. It is charged by the union that the Vitgraph and other organizations employ non-union operators and pay non-union wages, although, it is said there is no shortage of operators in Boston.

Mr. Smith of Boston, representing the operators' union, stated that "In case of a shortage there are plenty of mechanics in the city, who can easily learn the operation of motion picture machines, and thus safeguard Boston. We are against women being taught the operation of motion picture machines." It is understood that an assistant operator is not needed if the spring-switch is done away with.

It was voted that no action would be taken until the committee conferred with the Vitagraph Company.

Franke Makes New Affiliation.

Boston.—Manager William C. Franke, of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company of this city has resigned and will take a position as a projection engineer, he being an expert in the business. William C. Franke is well known in the motion picture business having been business manager for the Boston operators' union for six years and manager of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company for two years. He will now be with the Boston Motion Picture Appliance Company beginning July 1. He is also editor of a trade publication well known in Boston called "The Bean Pot."

Allied War Films Going Strong.

Patriotism of New England exhibitors is shown by the heavy bookings received by Manager Stanley Hand of the Boston Pathe exchange on the New Allied War films that are to be released for New England distribution July 15. The films show the war activities of the allied countries of Italy, France, England, and the United States. The following theaters have booked them for the first three days of release: Strand of Lowell, Polis of Hartford, Conn., Merrimac of Lowell, Shea of Fitchburg, and the Maine theaters incorporated.

Boston Appliance Company Gets Clark.

Fred. A. Clark, expert projection engineer who has been traveling with George K. Robinson of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation on his visits to New England exhibitors taking Paramount and Artcraft service, has resigned and accepted a position with the Boston Motion Picture Appliance company.

Original "Little Eva" Guest of Honor.

Mrs. Cordelia H. MacDonald, who played the roll of "Little Eva" in the original cast of "Uncle Toms Cabin" in 1852, was a guest of honor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the initial presentation of that picture in Boston, starring Marguerite Clark, to be released July 15. Mrs. MacDonald is the only living member of the original cast and resides at Cambridge, Mass.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" Good for Schools.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" has been considered by the Massachusetts Teachers Federation as a suitable picture for school children and will probably be shown in many of the schools in New England. The Massachusetts Teachers Federation expresses their gratitude of the earnest co-operation the New England exhibitors have given them in their efforts to secure suitable pictures for the school children.

Run of Pershing's Film Extended.

The original run of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Shubert theater was extended owing to the large houses which were attracted daily to this big Boston house. Many big manufacturing plants bought out the entire house for special nights and sent their employes to the show.

Loew Closes the St. James Theater.

The St. James theater, located in the heart of the Back Bay and one of Boston's largest neighborhood houses, has been closed for the summer months. It was under lease to the Loew interests and their lease expires in September. They chose to close the house for the summer and will not renew their lease. The house will return to the management of M. H. Gulesian, the owner of the house. Mr. Loew states that as soon as war conditions permit he intends to build a large house in Boston.

Trimount Theaters, Inc., Gets Charter.

The Trimount Theaters, Inc., of Boston, has received a charter at the State House. The capital stock is $100,000. The company will erect a new theater in this city. The incorporators are: G. A. Giles, Cambridge; J. H. Marson, Brookline, and Mary E. Corrigan, Medford.

Levine Reports Good Business.

Manager Levine of the General Film company, who has been handling Paralta plays for the past four months, reports big business in those productions. The Park theater at Nashua, which opens July 1, has booked a Paralta and an O. Henry for one of their opening features.

Globe Entertains Drafted Men.

Clinton, Mass.—When the manager of the Globe theater in this town discovered that several hundred draftees bound from Taunton to Camp Devens had lost their local train connection and had four hours to wait for the next train, he hastened to the station and invited the men to his playhouse for the afternoon. The men saw a fine program and were loud in their praises for the thoughtfulness and kindness of the Clinton manager.

Keene, N. H.—Manager Baldwin of the Scenic theater in this city has reopened the Majestic theater that he recently bought from Harry Campbell of Boston. He is now running the Majestic one day a week and the Scenic every day.

Rialto-De Luxe Film Draws Crowds.

THE Unchastened Woman," the Rialto-De Luxe production handled by George Kleine System, opened to extra large crowds at the Dayton theater this city Sunday, July 1. This showing was the second pre-release showing in the United States of this feature, the other house to use it being the new Symphony theater, New York City. The picture pleased Daytonians by the score, for although the Dayton seats 2,500 a lockout was in effect all of the Sunday evening. It takes a large crowd to fill the Dayton, and when one considers that hundreds stood in line to see the film it will be understood that this is an unusual happening.

Lew Foster with Fox Film.

L. W. Foster, former manager of the Artcraft-Paramount exchange at Cincinnati, Ohio, and who recently left that concern, is now with the Fox Film Company, acting as special representative for that company and Paul C. Rooney, district manager. Mr. Foster made the announcement of his new connections to the World correspondent at Dayton the day after having accepted the position and stated that he would cover five exchanges in his territory, which is exceptionally large, namely Detroit, Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis and Indianapolis. Lew Foster had made a large circle of friends while in Cincinnati and will continue to do so with the Fox company.

Dayton Brevities.

Martin G. Chandler, author of "Parentage," was in Dayton last week.

Julius Leopold, of the Mecca theater, denies the report that John Lyons has an option on the Mecca.

Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton theater here, was in Cincinnati several days last week booking pictures.

We have it from good authority that Paul Gray, of the Dayton theater, has been appointed vice president of J. Robert Thomas' paper, "The Photoplay Journal."

Protracted Hot Wave Reduces Business

Many Picture Houses in San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys Shut Down for Summer—Those Remaining Open Poorly Patronized—Conditions in San Francisco Below Normal.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Business in the San Francisco territory, taken as a whole, is well below normal, with the most unsatisfactory showing being made in the interior districts. Extremely hot weather has been experienced in the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys, this ranging as high as 112 degrees in some places, and many moving picture houses have been closed for the summer. Others are being opened but two or three days a week, and even then are being but poorly patronized. A prominent film exchange manager who recently visited every theater in the interior makes the estimate that exhibiting days there have been reduced within the past month by not less than thirty-five per cent., with other houses scheduled to close, or to operate on fewer days. In the past many airdomes have been opened, but this year the daylight-saving plan has interfered with the operation of these.

In the San Francisco Bay district conditions are much better than in the interior valleys, since cool weather is always experienced and so much industrial activity is noted. The shipbuilding industry is attracting thousands of workers, and as extremely high wages are the rule, amusements are being well patronized. Some downtown houses are doing the greatest business in their history, and the only complaints are coming from small theaters in the residence districts.

Pathe Sales Manager Visits City.

F. C. Quimby, sales manager for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., arrived here recently for a short stay, coming by the way of Seattle, and planning to return home by the southern route. He declared that as far as the Pathe interests were concerned conditions in this territory were never better, bookings being at a high-water mark. In discussing the new policies of this house he expressed the belief that exhibitors would be more than pleased with the arrangements that have been made for the handling of serials in the future. These will be in a completed form in advance of the release date and exhibitors will not only be privileged to inspect any, or all, episodes, but will also be able to look over the full line of advertising. They will also be able to book more than two reels for a show and to offer these as frequently as they desire. Special salesman will be attached to each office to handle serials exclusively, and this policy will be followed in the other branches of the business.

"Pershing's Crusaders" a Stellar Attraction.

The premier presentation of "Pershing's Crusaders," under the auspices of the State Council of Defense, was made at the Clunie theater, Sacramento, before an audience that included many of the leading State officials, including Governor Stephens. A two-weeks' engagement is under way at the Columbia theater in San Francisco, but this is under the immediate direction of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. Whitaker Tay and W. H. Fullwood, representing this committee, has charge of the local presentation.

Griffith's Picture Doing Big Business.

"Hearts of the World," which recently opened for an indefinite run at the Alcazar theater, has proved the screen sensation of the season in this city, and crowds are being turned away at every performance. It is being offered at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1. This production has been booked for presentation at the Kinema theater in Oakland and will be offered there at the same time it is being shown in San Francisco.

Old Trade Name Abolished.

The California Film Exchange, Inc., 121-125 Golden Gate avenue, which has distributed Universal pictures for years, will be known in the future as the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. No change is being made in policy, and M. L. Markowitz will continue as manager.

Strand Theater Makes Fine Showing.

The Strand theater has taken an active part in the recent Liberty Loan and War Savings Stamp drives and has set up an enviable record for subscriptions on the part of employes. Liberty bonds to the value of $3,950 were taken, while $2,720 were invested in War Savings Stamps. This house recently concluded its fourth week on "A Dog's Life," featuring Charles Chaplin, the entire engagement being a howling success.

Breaks Record With Artcraft Picture.

All records for attendance at the Imperial theater were shattered recently on the opening day of the engagement of Artcraft's "Say, Young Fellow," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, receipts being more than $100 greater than on any previous day in the past six years. May was the best month in the history of the house, and the June record will exceed this by a comfortable margin. What July will bring forth is a question, but Manager J. A. Partington has recently returned from a fishing trip to the Feather River and Lake Tahoe with a new dash of "pep" and will not be content to rest on past laurels.

Rialto Theater News.

C. Sharpe Minor, the famous Rialto organist, is not only an authority on music but takes a keen interest in astronomy as well, and on the occasion of the recent total eclipse of the sun observed the phenomenon at Centralia, Wash., timing his vacation trip to be in the path of totality.

Howard J. Sheehan attended the opening of the new Rialto theater at Eureka, Cal., on June 25, as did also Robert Ryan, chief operator at the local house, who superintended the installation of the projection equipment. The opening attraction was "Revelation," featuring Mme. Nazimova.

Girl ushers are now being used exclusively at the San Francisco Rialto, the head usher being one who has been with the house almost since the opening day.

Finishing Plant Under New Ownership.

The finishing and developing and film title plant formerly conducted at 1112 Market St by Al Williams under the name of the Art Slide Studio, Inc., has been taken over by M. Blache, formerly of Los Angeles. A specialty is being made of title work and Mr. Bache is doing some camera work for other houses.

"Eyes of the World" at Alhambra.

"Eyes of the World," which has been shown in this city only at the Savoy theater, has been booked for presentation at the Alhambra theater on Market St. for the week of July 7. Rights to this production were recently acquired by the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange.

Harry Schwalbe Visits City.

Harry Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, secretary-treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was here recently on a tour of inspection of the exchanges of this organization, coming by way of the northwest. He was much impressed with the facilities of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which is the local unit of the National circuit, and with the manner in which its releases were placed in this territory.

"Parentage" Booked at Rialto.

The Consolidated Film Corporation has booked "Parentage" for a two-weeks' run at the Rialto theater, commencing August 11, and will then take this feature out on the road as a special attraction.

San Francisco Trade Jottings.

Harry A. Harrison, assistant manager for the Western Poster Company, and former owner of the Polk theater, has left for Vancouver, B. C., to take charge of a crew getting out timber for aeroplane construction. He was called in the first draft and started for France, after training at Camp Lewis, but was turned back on account of a bad knee.

The Empress theater on Church street has been re-opened after having been closed for some time.

Walter A. Preddey has installed no-carbon lamp outfits in the theaters of J. H. Nichols at Mendocino, Cal., and the Monarch Company, Lone Pine, Cal.

The Valencia theater, conducted by Ben Levin, has been closed for the summer.

Elmer Benjamin, formerly with the Macdonough theater, Oakland; the Victory theater, San Jose, and the Yosemite theater, Stockton, is now with the film exchange department of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

Henry Bredhoff, of Honolulu, who has been here for several months, has returned to the Islands.

M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., is making an auto trip to Los Angeles, accompanied by his family.

The Liberty theater, at 554 Haight street, has been purchased by Grover George and Howard C. Greene.

Recent visitors have included C. E. Howell, of the Monache theater, Porterville, Cal.; I. D. Stanford, of Chico and Marysville, Cal.; W. G. Warren, Yerrington, Nev.; Nat Lane, Mason, Nev.; G. Kappler, Carlin, Nev., and C. C. Kaufman, Colusa, Cal.

Donald Thompson, who handled "The German Curse in Russia," was here recently on his way to Russia to secure additional pictures.

Northern California Brevities.

Davis Renovates Kozy Theater.

PADUCAH, KY. — Manager Rodney Davis, of the Kozy theater, has reopened that house after a close of some time in which the plant was thoroughly remodeled, repainted, and decorated, and numerous improvements made. A handsome new art glass canopy has been erected over the entrance in place of one that was torn loose last winter by heavy snows. In the interior the walls have been done in tan, the ceiling of ivory, and Corinthian columns installed, while the wainscoting is of marble.

Must Project Censor Title at Each Showing

Police Judge McGannon of Cleveland Rules in Case of Jack Kuhn That Ohio Censorship Leader Must Be Given Each Time Pictures Passed by State Board Are Exhibited.

By M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—Exhibitors must show the censor leader of the Ohio Board of Censors each time a film is projected.

This was the verdict of Police Judge McGannon, of Cleveland, when he ruled that Jack Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman theater, of that city, was guilty of violating technically the censor law by not keeping the censor leader attached to a print of "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark.

Kuhn was assessed $5 and costs. He claimed that he showed the feature the first time with the leader on it, but took if off after that, being under the impression that it was not necessary to show it at every performance.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, chairman of the censor board, came from Columbus to Cleveland to prosecute the case.

J. Hemstreet Buys Yale Theater.

Cleveland.—The Yale Theater building, Cleveland, has been sold by the Yale Realty Company to J. Hemstreet, and back of this deal lies a story with a moral.

The Yale project was a stock proposition, shares being sold to many people of the east end for $10 each. It took a long time to erect the building, and then after it was completed the company decided to operate the theater instead of leasing it out to some experienced exhibitor.

After several months of slow business the company finally leased the theater to Fine, Kramer and Schuman, who ran the Dennison Square theater on the west side. They are having fair success with it.

Authorities Seize Anti-War Picture.

Cleveland.—"Lay Down Your Arms," an anti-war picture made and distributed several years ago, is now reposing in the vaults of the Cleveland Federal building, having been seized from a Cleveland theater, June 29. The picture was shown throughout the country before America entered the war, but was only recently resurrected by some traveling film man.

The prices at the Imperial, St. John, have been reduced to fifteen and ten cents for the summer months. This was immediately taken advantage of as better crowds attended the pictures.

Moncton, N. B.—Fred Winter of Moncton has already closed one of his theaters and declares that if business continues so bad he will close the other and spend the summer fishing.

Carmichael Is to Represent Fox Abroad

Manager of Film Manufacturers' Exchange in Detroit Will Leave Shortly for London—To Cover United Kingdom, France and Italy—Has Been Associated with Organization Since Its Inception—Other Fox Changes.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT.—Moses Field Carmichael, for the past six months in charge of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation, has been promoted to American representative of the Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., of the United Kingdom. This means he will make his headquarters in the near future at the head office of the Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., 74 Old Compton street, London W., England. Mr. Carmichael will cover the United Kingdom, also the territory of France, Italy and Spain. It's a tremendous advancement for Field, but not one which he has not earned.

Mr Carmichael went with the Fox Film Corporation from the time of its inception, opening the Denver office. Then he was transferred to Los Angeles, where he remained for two years. When he was transferred to Detroit, dozens and dozens of his friends in the film business in the California city escorted him to the depot with a brass band, showing that he was very popular. In the short period that he has been in Detroit Mr. Carmichael has tripled the business of the Fox Film Corporation; when Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan of that concern were looking around for the right person to go to Europe, is it any wonder that they selected Mr. Carmichael? He expects to sail sometime between July 15 and August 1.

M. S. Bailey Appointed Fox Manager.

When Paul C Mooney, division manager in the central west for the Fox Film Corporation, was in Detroit recently, he selected Mason S Bailey, for the past two months Detroit manager for the General Film Company, to succeed Mr. Carmichael as Detroit manager for Fox. Mr Bailey was unsolicitedly made a very lucrative offer, which he accepted. He leaves the General on July 11 and takes up his duties with Fox on Monday, July 15. Previous to his connection with the General Mr Bailey was for a number of years Detroit manager for the Universal.

Frank Stuart Succeeds Bailey.

Frank E Stuart, connected with the General Film Company for the past four years in Detroit and recently appointed assistant branch manager, has been appointed manager of the Detroit exchange, succeeding Mr Bailey. Mr Stuart was in New York on July 1, and the appointment was made by E A Tishenor, vice-president of the General Film Company, who gave Frank a "fatherly" talk and wished him every success. We have no doubt in the least that Mr. Stuart will make good. He knows the film business, knows the Michigan exhibitors—knows the General products—and is himself a good salesman.

Activities of Dawn Masterplay Company.

The Dawn Masterplay Company, which owns "Hearts of the World" for Michigan, now operate the Regent theater, Detroit, and the Opera House, Detroit, taking over the latter on July 1. They are running both theaters for the summer months only. Arthur S. Hyman, of this concern, announces the purchase of two more state rights pictures—"The Struggle Everlasting" and "The Accidental Honeymoon."

Horwitz Purchases Two More Pictures.

Joseph Horwitz, Detroit manager for Foursquare Exchange, of which he is half-owner, and who recently bought a half interest in the Cleveland Foursquare Exchange, has just purchased for Michigan "The Mad Lover," with Captain Robert Warwick, and "Today," with Florence Reed.

Salesmen Resign to Await Draft.

Nat Lefkowitz and Jack Osserman, Pathe salesmen, severed their relations with the Detroit exchange on Saturday, June 29, and returned to Cleveland, their home city, where they will await the July draft call. Nat Lefkowitz, better known as "Lefky," was very popular in Michigan through his long career as salesman for Standard and Pathe. As for Jack Osserman, he recently came to Detroit from Cleveland, and during his short stay here built up a large circle of friends.

Lieut. Rathbun Receives Promotion.

We are glad to report that Lieut. Earl H. Rathbun, of Battle Creek, son-in-law of Col. W. S. Butterfield, has been again promoted to transportation quartermaster at Baltimore. Lieut. Rathbun tried to enlist as a private but was turned down for underweight. He then took a course at one of the officers' training camps, passed, and was accepted. He was recently made second lieutenant in the quartermasters corps, and now he is made transportation quartermaster, showing his real business ability.

Film Transportation Company Expands.

In order to give the film exchanges in Baltimore and Washington and the exhibitors in the former city better service for the quick hauling of film between the two cities, the Baltimore and Washington Film Transportation Company is now building an office and garage. The building will be located in the rear of 1349 North Gay street, near the Palace theater. Frank Durkee, who manages the Palace, is also manager of the film hauling company. The building will measure 50 by 100 feet and will have an office and garage space for three trucks, two autos and rental space for five more cars. The company does hauling of film for 12 companies, and Mr Durkee states that in the new office they will be able to give better service and attention to the work.

Shorter Hours at Wilson Theater.

In order to give his employes a little more time to themselves during the hot months of July and August Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, has arranged to have his performances start at 11 o'clock in the morning, instead of 10, and to last until 11 at night.

W. S. S. Drive at Three Theaters.

The war savings stamp drive was aided considerably by three theaters of Baltimore recently by benefit performances. The sum of $1,700 was secured in cash and stamp pledges at the Goodtime theater, 1401 North Milton avenue, through a performance which was given under the auspices of the Women's Section of the Maryland Council of Defense of the Eighth Ward, on Sunday night, June 23. The playhouse was loaned for the occasion by William E Stumpf, the manager.

Through the courtesy of Frank Durkee, the manager of the Palace theater, Gay and Hoffman streets, this same organization of women held another rally in the interests of the war savings stamp drive on Sunday night, June 30.

Manager L. A. DeHoff, of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, courteously arranged a fine program of music and moving pictures for the war savings stamp rally which was held in that theater on Sunday night, June 30. Several prominent Baltimoreans, and Chief Oskomon, of the Yakamo tribe of Washington state, made stirring speeches. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Retail Merchants' Bureau of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

Out-of-Town Theaters Patriotic.

Frostburg, Md.—With the view of making Thrift Day, June 27, one of the days to be remembered in this city, celebrations and entertainments were carried out to their full extent. A. C. Frey, manager of the Lyric theater, entertained the 163 county drafted men at a special performance of music and moving pictures. There were many patriotic speeches, and vaudeville throughout the day.

Annapolis, Md.—A big mass meeting was held in the Colonian theater through the courtesy of Strange Brothers, the proprietors, on Sunday afternoon, June 30, to boost the war savings campaign. The Naval Academy band orchestra rendered fine selections; moving pictures of war scenes were shown and patriotic speeches were made.

Aberdeen, Md.—Through the courtesy of Manager J. H. McPherson, of the Opera House in this city, the Harford County Council of Defense held a meeting at this playhouse on the night of July 1, and a permanent organization of the Aberdeen precinct was effected.

Three Tax Rates.

Frederick, Md.—The County Commissioners fixed the tax rate for Frederick County at $1.25, on Monday, July 1, for 1918. This is an advance of 20 cents over the 1917 rate.

Elkton, Md.—The tax rate for 1918 was fixed by the County Commissioners for Cecil County at $1.12, on Wednesday, June 26. This is a reduction of eight cents from the 1917 rate.

Centerville, Md.—At a meeting of the County Commissioners recently, the tax rate for Queen Anne County was fixed at $1.18 for 1918. This rate is eight cents less than the 1917 rate.

Munition Workers at the Maryland.

On Sunday afternoon about 3,000 members of the Ordnance Department of the United States Army from Edgewood, Md., were entertained at the Maryland theater through the courtesy of F. C. Schanberger, the manager, by a program of vaudeville and moton pictures.

Frederick C. Schanberger, manager of the Maryland theater, has been appointed chairman of the working committee on Commercial Amusements of the War Camp Community Service Committee of Baltimore. This agency is responsible to the War and Navy Departments for promoting activities carried on for the welfare of the men on leave in the city.

Money Raised at Grand Theater.

The sum of $834 was raised at a minstrel performance at the Grand theater in Highlandtown for the benefit of the soldiers. The playhouse was then under the management of Charles S. Anderson, who has since left for Newport News, Va. The committee in charge of the affair has turned the money over to the United States General Hospital No. 2, at Fort McHenry, to be used in buying comforts for the wounded Sammies who return from the front.

Baltimore Brevities.

Miss Ethel M. Heath, who for some time acted as private secretary to L. A. De Hoff, manager of the New theater and assistant treasurer of that company, and has more recently been associated with the Union Trust Company in the stock transfer department, has now become associated with the Universal Film exchange.

Gerard Doerfler, who has been associated with the Parkway Theater Company for nearly two years in the capacity of cashier, has resigned. Mr. Doerfler has now associated himself with the Baltimore Dry Docks and Shipbuilding Company as typist in the storage department.

Leonard B. McLaughlin, manager of the Auditorium theater, has two brothers in the United States service. One, Steven O'Neill McLaughlin, a member of the 15th Infantry, has just reached the other side, while the other, Joseph V. McLaughlin, Jr., is in the navy.

Brady, manager, who has been covering northwestern New York; Fred W. Lange, Rochester; E. N. Arnold, northern New York, and William Schmidt, central New York. The Castle theater at Olcott Beach, N. Y., recently reopened and booked the entire Fox output.

"The Mutt and Jeff comedies are doing a heavy business in this territory, and are playing the largest and smallest towns," said Mr. Sheehan.

Patriotic Stage Setting at Shea's.

"America Comes Across" was the title of a patriotic stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome. It was shown at the overture illumination, and was well received. An English and a French soldier were shown in the foreground, and the American soldier in the background, with his millions of comrades pressing after him. The orchestra was heard in fine effect in music from "The Merry Widow." Musical Director Alfred Moulton was with the original Merry Widow Company for several months.

J. S. Savage Leases the Abbott.

J. S. Savage, Jr., has bought the lease of the Abbott on Abbott road and Bailey avenue. Mr. Savage and his father are the owners of the Como moving picture theater in Triangle street.

The Abbott is a ten-cent house. Mr. Savage has installed two Simplex machines and changed the policy of the house, which is in the heart of a great industrial center on the south side, where the Government is spending millions for ship yards and munitions.

The success of the Como induced Mr. Savage, Jr., to take over the Abbott.

Hickey of Goldwyn Once a Stage Star.

George A. Hickey, Buffalo manager of the Goldwyn, who won second prize of $500 in the recent sales contest conducted by that company, takes delight in showing to his friends old theatrical programs on which his name appeared in big type. For several seasons Mr. Hickey, at the head of his own company, toured the country in repertoire. Mr. Hickey foresook the footlights and entered the film business because, he says, he wanted "to settle down and eat regularly."

Gardiner Handling W. H. Reissues.

Hot Weather Causes Slump in Business of Theaters and Exchanges—Southern Theater Bought by J. S. Woodhouse—Other Items.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Summer Slump Evident in Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS. — Business at moving picture theaters and exchanges continued to fall off last week, and the summer slump has been more noticeable during the last few days than at any other time in several years hereabouts. The weather changed from scorching hot to rain many times during the past week, and theatrical business suffered accordingly. The Minneapolis Strand played George M. Cohan in "Hit-the-Trail Holliday" a week to a good business, and the New Garrick played Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" a week to a good business, but at neither theater was the attendance as great as it should have been or would have been a month ago.

Throughout the Northwest theaters by the score are shutting down for a month, while others are cutting down their showing dates to such an extent that it is safe to say that about ten per cent. of the territory's theaters are now closed and about twenty per cent. have cut down on their presentations.

Woodhouse Purchases Southern Theater

Minneapolis.—J. S. Woodhouse, former publicity manager for Ruben & Finkelstein, and manager of the Lagoon and Calhoun theaters, has purchased the Southern theater at Seven Corners here from John Hedlund, and has opened the show house again, after redecorating it both inside and outside, under the name of "The Sun." Woodhouse is featuring his orchestra, and is starting his new venture off by booking the best pictures to be had on the open market.

Fire Destroys Film at Brown Theater.

Wahpeton.—A fire starting from unknown cause burned up several hundred feet of film in the operating booth at the Brown theater here recently, the operator extinguishing the flames before they got outside of his booth. The theater was well filled at the time of the fire, but the operator's coolheadedness prevented any unrest among the assemblage. Not until the manager made an announcement of the burning up of considerable of the feature film did the audience know anything had gone wrong.

Roberts, who has been manager of the local Pathe exchange for about four months, has resigned his position and returned to Tacoma, Wash., where he will take over some local film office. Phil Ryan, general manager of the Standard Film exchanges, of Kansas City and Minneapolis, stated, while in this city last week, that he will enter the aviation service shortly.

I. E. Chadwick, of New York, visited Manager Michael, of the Kleine exchange, last week, assisting him in mapping out his advertising and publicity campaign on "The Unchastened Woman," which the local Kleine exchange will distribute throughout this territory.

Theodore Karatz, former roadman for the Supreme exchange here, is now stationed at Great Lakes, Ill., where he has been sent following his enlistment in the navy recently.

Benjamin Friedman, president of the Friedman exchange, has announced that due to weather and business conditions during the summer months that "The Whip" will not be booked again until early fall. Mr. Friedman states that he is dickering for several new productions, and will make some announcements regarding them shortly.

Manager Peavey, of the Paramount exchange, was host to a number of local exhibitors and film men at an outing at Forest Lake, Minn., recently. Judging from the talk about the party, Mr. Peavey must be a regular entertainer.

He is making several large towns in Iowa before returning south. The Blank office is besieged with applications on "Pershing's Crusaders" and several additional prints have been secured to handle the large volume of bookings. Eddie Bonns, who has been acting as special representative in Iowa on the Gerard and Pershing features, resigned last week and left for his home in New York, where he will spend several days before joining the service.

Rotary Club Makes Film of Convention

Meeting of International Association Attended by Many Moving Picture Men—Conspicuous for Its Patriotism and Enthusiasm—Of the Ten Prints Made One Each Will Be Sent to England, Canada and Cuba.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Kansas City entertained the International Association of Rotary Clubs during the week of June 24. The war film, "Wake Up America," was exhibited at the Garden theater and Convention Hall by the Dayton, Ohio, delegation with great success. The "pep" and enthusiasm of the audience were first stirred by vari-colored balloons which floated over the crowd. A quartette sang "Keep the Home Fires Burning," the "Star Spangled Banner," and "America," led by a girl cornetist dressed as "Columbia."

In addition to exhibiting motion pictures the Rotarians made 4,000 feet of film of the convention showing the parade, meeting of the delegates, and the inauguration of the incoming officers.

The opening feature is the Rotary wheel motto in clay followed by sunrise Sunday morning, June 23, and the incoming train bearing Dr. E. Leslie Pidgeon, of Winnipeg, Canada, the International president, and Andrew Home-Morton, London, England, president of the United Rotary Clubs of the British Isles.

A modern version of "Feeding the Five Thousand" was recorded in the pictures of the Big Bean Dinner at Electric Park served by the New England delegation. The seventeen trucks which carried the baked beans were snapped on the way, and later the presentation of a mammoth bean pot to M. J. Heim, owner of Electric Park, was filmed. Other features were Thornton Burgess, the bed-time story man, addressing the children of Kansas City at Troost Park; the big band concert night when fifteen bands appeared at Electric Park, and the presentation of the British flag by Andrew Home-Morton to the International Association, and the entwining of the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes. The pictures were taken under the direction of George Wieda, of the Adfilm Company (Rotarian).

Ten prints of the film will be made, and one sent to England, one to Canada, one to Cuba, and the remaining seven distributed to cities in the United States.

Many Visitors During Rotary Meeting.

In the city during the International Convention of Rotary Clubs were the following exhibitors. Mrs Wes Millington, Crystal theater, Ottawa, Kan.; "Bob" Holmes, Royal theater, Emporia, Kan.; J. J. Marshall, Marshall theater, Manhattan, Kan.; Arthur Ford, Marple theater, Wichita; E. Van Hyning, Ottawa, Kan., and Roy Heffner, Nowata, Okla. O K Mason, manager of the Universal branch in Wichita, Kan., and William R. Marshall, of the Mutual Film exchange, of Calgary, Alberta.

J. J. Brown, formerly a camera correspondent for the Pathe News, was in Kansas City at the time of the Rotary convention. Mr. Brown has been on the Pacific coast with the Aviation branch of the service as cameraman for the U. S. A. He left here after a few days' stay for the East, where he will await orders.

Doric Has Novel Outdoor Screen.

A unique feature of the new Doric theater is an outdoor screen across the top of the building. The screen is ten feet square, and will be used for election returns, announcements, slides and pictures, and, if desired, cuts from the film which is appearing at the Doric. A stereopticon and picture machine is located in a small booth on the south side of the building, and a special operator will have charge of the outdoor projection. For daylight advertising a bill board on rollers occupies the space. This can be rolled into the sign and the white screen exposed. This device is Manager G. W. Curtis' own idea, as is the electrically operated velvet curtain at the front of the theater, which can be drawn by the operator whenever he desires.

Petrova Appears for W. S. S. Drive.

Madame Olga Petrova appeared in person at the Twelfth Street theater Sunday night, June 30, to speak for War Savings Stamps. She was accompanied by her manager, Bobby North. The audience packed the theater and the street outside. Her talk resulted in the one thousand persons pledging themselves to buy approximately $5,000 worth of stamps during the year. A wager which was taken up by a woman in the crowd was the offer of Mr. North to turn a hand spring for any one who would buy $75 worth in a year. He apologized for the procedure, but remarked that the Government didn't mind the method so long as the result was "stamps."

Interesting Items.

F. H. Castle, formerly connected with the Rialto theater, Tulsa, has joined the sales staff of the Kansas City branch of the Fox Film Corporation.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Another Fourth Street House Projected.

CINCINNATI.—The success with which all of the downtown theaters are meeting and the high degree of prosperity existing in the city has for some time been responsible for a diligent search for additional locations, and the big Palace theater, now in course of construction, is one result of this. The Palace, however, will probably be devoted largely to popular-priced vaudeville, which makes the announcement of a new house on Fourth street, between Main and Walnut, to show pictures exclusively, all the more interesting. The fact that the property has been purchased for this purpose has been given out by the real estate firm which handled the transaction. Details are for the moment withheld, but that a house is to be built in this busy block is declared to be certain.

Many See Gerard Film at Grand.

Cincinnati.—"My Four Years in Germany" received some substantial benefit during its run at the Grand from the support of patriotic societies and of citizens who believed that the realistic exposure of German methods was a good thing for everybody to see. Not a few business houses made special arrangements with the management to set aside blocks of seats for their employes on certain nights, taking the view that the effect of the picture on employes of foreign extraction would be especially valuable. One concern, a regular advertiser of its own business, devoted one advertisement to advising the public to go see the Gerard picture, "and then buy war savings stamps."

W. S. S. Campaign Aided by Theaters.

Cincinnati.—The theaters, as usual, played a fine part in the week of the war savings stamps campaign, ending on June 29, the downtown houses making a splendid record of sales to audiences where a special effort was made to dispose of stamps or to secure pledges for future purchases. Figures were not kept in all cases, but where records were made of purchases they show that moving picture patrons were ready and eager to help along Uncle Sam's cause by buying his smallest baby bonds. Sales at some of the leading houses were as follows: Grand (all week), $2,109.40; Family (two days), $1,357.59; Lyric (one day), $1,158.15; Strand, $487.90; Keith's (one day), $151.39; Gifts (one day), $78.46; Walnut (one day), $75.53.

Carrel Theater Makes Donation.

Cincinnati.—The management of the Carrel Street theater patriotically donated a substantial share of the receipts of a given day recently to the several war relief organizations in the vicinity, the picture run, "The Remaking of a Nation," being especially suited for the occasion. Representatives of the beneficiary societies were in charge of the event.

Dallas Trade Letter

By Phil Fox, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Mme. Petrova Aids Sales of W. S. S.

DALLAS.—In the latter part of June, Madame Olga Petrova spoke from the stage of the Old Mill theater in the interests of the War Savings campaign. She had immense crowds to hear her at both evening and matinee performances, and Dallas people took $32,725 worth of War Savings Stamps at her solicitation. Over $7,500 worth were sold at the matinee performance—mostly to women buyers. From Dallas the star went to Fort Worth, where she added $20,000 more to her patriotic sales receipts.

Dallas Theaters Observe Italian Victory.

The Italian victory on the Piave was fittingly observed by Dallas theaters. Pictures of General Diaz were thrown on the screen at the Queen theater, and Garibaldi's Battle Hymn thundered on the organ. The audience arose and cheered. Italian flags were in evidence at most of the play houses.

Hippodrome Entertains Orphans.

The Hippodrome theater won general approval last week by inviting all the orphan children of the city resident in various institutions to see Fox's "Jack and the Beanstalk" as guests of the management. The wonderful fairy tale film was much appreciated. The Hippodrome in July has innovated a new price scale. They are showing two pictures each week at 10 and 15 cents admission instead of special features running the entire week at a higher price. This plan is proving popular.

Meet Operators' Union Demand.

Labor trouble was averted in Dallas during the last week in June when the Moving Picture Operators' Union demanded that all film exchanges recognize the Film Inspectors Union—recently organized. The operators said that they would refuse to handle the films of exchanges where the girl inspectors were not permitted to organize. The difficulty was solved, however, and film exchanges and the two unions are now on good terms following the reaching of a practically general agreement.

James B. Kelly ("Smiling Jimmy"), manager of the General, announces that Sol Davis has been promoted to the position of assistant salesmanager of the General. He will also handle the output of the W. The General's "Last Raid of Zeppline L-21" has made a big hit in Texas. It was released July 1, and Dallas people crowded to see it at the Crystal theater.

J. C. Fanning Recuperating Rapidly.

John C. Fanning, of the Crazy theater, Mineral Wells, is out again, and is as cheery as ever after six weeks' serious illness. He walks with a cane, but is getting better rapidly. He received congratulations from James B. Kelly, Douglas Hawley, and other film men when he visited here.

Dallas Film Row Jottings.

Charles Gladstone Buchanan, of Metro, is an enthusiast over "To Hell with the Kaiser." He has circulated little red stickers bearing this prophesy of the ultimate destination of Wilhelm far and wide over Texas. Texans generally seem to warmly approve the sentiment.

L. Bickel, manager of the Dallas Metro branch, returned home the last week in June after making a complete tour of Texas. He reports that exhibitors are in a good humor and doing good business despite the unusually warm weather. They are all hunting for live stuff.

J. W. Allender Purchases Majestic Theater

Acquires Structure from Messrs. Knipe, Coons and Bowman—Will Continue Adding to His Chain of Picture Houses—Files Articles of Incorporation for J. W. Allender, Inc.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Allender Takes Over the Majestic.

SPOKANE.—Manager J. W. Allender, of the Lyric theater, continues to add to his acquisitions, and has just purchased the Majestic theater from J. C. Knipe, H. W. Coons and C. P. Bowman at a reported cost of $9,000 cash. The above trio purchased the Majestic last August from Long and Bungay, who had W. H. McMillan as manager.

Mr. Allender contemplates adding more picture theaters to his chain, and with that in view has filed articles of incorporation for the J. W. Allender. Incorporated for $100,000. He combined the Majestic with the Lyric and sold a minority interest to J. G. Maddux, who has been an operator in the city for years. Mr. Allender is having the Majestic renovated, and is improving the projection. He announces that he will use the Artcraft, Paramount, and De Luxe pictures in the place, and that "Intolerance" will be shown at the Lyric starting July 14. He also reports that "The Little Girl Next Door" is playing to big audiences at the Auditorium. He will run "Hearts of the World" at the Auditorium for three weeks starting July 6.

Would Provide Seats for Every Ticket.

Spokane.—A city ordinance providing that the public may not be admitted to Spokane theaters unless there is a seat for every ticket sold was suggested to the city council by Corporation Counsel J. M. Geraghty.

Discussion of theater seating arrangements arose when E. Clarke Walker, manager of the Pantages theater, which is a vaudeville and moving picture house, appeared before the council to deny that his show house is "bilking the public." Mr. Walker was aroused by a complaint made by Commissioner J. C. Argall that the Pantages management was misleading the public in announcing the price of its seats. The Pantages is loosing money on its shows, and has been since April 1, according to Mr. Walker, who said that the monthly loss had been $500.

The complaint included that patrons purchased tickets for admission on the price charged for first floor seats then were directed to the balcony by ushers inside who told them that there were no seats downstairs.

Coffy to Exploit "Eyes of the World."

Spokane.—E. P. Coffy, who has been manager of the Stilwall Theaters Company for some months, tendered his resignation effective July 1, and has associated himself with H. O. Hauxhurst and W. J. Howell, who have purchased the state rights for Nebraska, Iowa, and Kansas for "The Eyes of the World." He will leave here July 8 for the Coast to exploit the picture there for a time, and on September 1 will go East for his work in the three states above mentioned.

Spokane Film News Notes.

O. Dahl, of Troy, Mont., who manages the Opera House at that place, visited the Universal exchange here for some special pictures this week.

F. C. Quinby, of New York City, general manager of the Pathe exchanges, visited P. L. Carroll, local manager, for several days while on a tour of the Western exchanges.

W. Potter, of the Universal, returned from a trip into Montana and left for Wallace and other Idaho towns.

Liberty Now Has Girl Ushers.

To release the boys and young men ushers for war work in factories and agricultural pursuits, Manager Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty theater, Spokane, has substituted girls as ushers and floor managers. The uniforms are of tan, and the illustration on this page shows the girls in their costumes, which are plain, natty, and not overly expensive, thus carrying out the economy plan.

Cohn Decorates Liberty for Summer.

Manager Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty theater, Spokane, has spent $200 on lobby and interior decorations for the summer, and a picture of the lobby and floral decorations in it is shown below, together with the colored cleaners who keep scraps of paper off the floor, also Manager Cohn at the right, where he was unexpectedly caught by the photographer while trying to keep people from passing in front of the entrance until the picture was taken. The interior decorations include a number of hanging baskets, and a large array of potted flowers greet one upon entering the theater. These are lighted by electric lights shielded by curtains, so as not to interfere with the pictures being shown.

Features Secured Chautauqua's Patronage

Manager Scates of Paramount Theater at Okanogan, Wash., Obtains Business of Traveling Attraction by Presenting Big Productions.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE.—A chautauqua which has traveled all through the northern part of the state this month has played havoc with the motion picture business nearly everywhere that it has stopped, but C. P. Scates, manager of the Paramount theater in Okanogan, did not choose to let it hurt his business. He decided to make it help him, instead. First he persuaded the town authorities, with whom he is quite influential, to have the traveling attraction located next to his theater, then he booked two big productions for that week, viz.: "The Auction Block" and "For the Freedom of the World." When the chautauqua opened with an admission charge of 75 cents the farmers coming in town to attend it with their families saw the alluring front of the Paramount theater next door with 25-cent admission sign up and like the thrifty men they are they took their families to the place that would cost them least. The result was that Mr. Scates did a bigger business than the chautauqua, and much bigger than his usual record.

Heavy Bookings on Anti-Vice Film.

Miss Grace Marbry Sanderson, prominent in San Francisco society and author of "The Finger of Justice," came to Seattle last week and established an exchange at 2916 Third avenue. Miss Sanderson will make this her headquarters until she has booked the entire Northwest territory. If her first two days are to be taken as a sample she will not remain long, for in that time she has booked Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, Bellingham and Anacortes. Nevertheless, she expects to cover the territory very thoroughly and is planning to remain two or three months. Miss Sanderson has full charge of the distribution of the picture on the Pacific coast. She has just finished a successful season with it in California, where she not only attended to the distribution, but also appeared with the picture throughout the larger towns of the state. Her main office is in San Francisco.

Sherry Exchange for Seattle.

William Alexander, special representative for the Wm. Sherry system of exchanges, is in Seattle to open a branch here. He has taken temporary quarters with the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions Company, at 2022 Third avenue. L. A. Todd, former Seattle general manager, is to have charge of the new office.

Film Employes Join Colors.

Seattle film employes are answering the call to the colors so fast that it looks as if the entire office force of all the exchanges would soon consist of girls only. Every week at least one or two names are added to the list, but this week there are more than usual, and the list furnishes a hint that there may be difficulty even in keeping the girls. The hint is given by the appearance of Miss Esther Hervan's name on the list of this week's volunteers for service. Miss Hervin, who is one of the stenographers in the Triangle exchange, has passed her examinations and takes a position next week with the branch of the aviation service at the University of Washington. The other names on this week's list are C. M. Richardson, booker at the Seattle Mutual office, who has been drafted and assigned to Camp Lewis; C. J. Featherstone, Artcraft-Paramount booker, who has been assigned to the U. S. Mechanics' Training School in Oakland, Cal., and R. T. Stone, Artcraft-Paramount shipper, who has joined the merchant marine.

On account of the loss of the last two men to the Artcraft-Paramount office there has been a rearrangement of the personnel in several departments of that office. Keith Beckwith has taken Mr. Featherstone's place as booker and T. L. Thurston, who acted as booker during a short time when Mr. Featherstone was away, is now office manager. H. L. Kenyon has succeeded Mr. Stone. The place of assistant to the manager of publicity—A. J. Kennedy—which was vacated the middle of the month by the marriage of Miss Virginia Keltner to Jack Rantz, of the Dream and Rialto theaters, Bremerton, is being filled by Miss Dorothy Maxwell.

"War's Women" Doing Big Business.

Seattle, Wash.—That an arbitrary removal of a film by a city official cannot permanently kill a picture is being shown in Seattle this week by the good business being done at the Strand with "War's Women." It will possibly be remembered by World readers of two years ago that this film had been passed by the censors and had been playing for two or three days, when Mayor H. C. Gill, accompanied by the chief of police, came down to the theater and confiscated the film right in the middle of the show. It is now thought that this was a wholly political move of the mayor. He stated that certain citizens had reported the film to him as objectionable. These "citizens," it is believed, were Germans, and as the Mayor expected to run for another term of office, he did not wish to offend the large German population of the city by allowing such an anti-German picture to continue its run at a Seattle theater.

By taking the matter to court Miss Josephine Donnelly, who was handling the picture in this territory, recovered the print, but Manager W. H. Smythe did not obtain permission to continue the showing, the court ruling that the censors were only an advisory board for the mayor. When Mr. Gill was defeated in this year's election, however, and Mr. Hanson became mayor, Miss Donnelly took the film to him and was assured that any theater might show it unmolested. In fact the authorities declared that they were anxious for it to appear, and it was booked for the Strand again by Jensen and Von Herberg, who now operate that house.

In presenting "War's Women," the managers have made it a straight propaganda picture by leaving out the dream part and adding several trailers at the end. The first of these makes the statement that this is the way Germany wages war. The next says "This is the way we are going to beat them," and pictures of our soldiers and sailors in training are thrown on the screen; then, "These boys of ours are ready to give their lives to stop such barbarism. What are you giving?" This is followed by an appeal to buy War Savings Stamps and Liberty Bonds and to support the Red Cross.

"Over the Top" Still Draws.

"Over the Top," the patriotic film made from Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's book, is showing that the people are not tired of patriotic pictures by the way it is drawing business to Levy's Orpheum this week. On Sunday the crowd waited for 20 minutes in the hot sun to get into the Orpheum, and the warm weather has not been keeping them away for the rest of the week.

Exchange Personals.

F. C. Quimby, business manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left Seattle this after several weeks' visit. Before going he engaged L. O. Lukan as manager of the Seattle exchange to take the place of W. W. Kofeldt, who resigned to take over the management of a theater in Portland.

C. E. Kells, traveling auditor for General, is spending some time at the Seattle office, having arrived this week.

A. W. Eden, manager of the Seattle Fox office, is back from the conference of Fox managers in New York.

C. H. Code and E. R. Hudson, salesmen out of the Seattle Goldwyn office, are in the city holding a conference with Manager C. F. Hill and discussing the new policies for the coming season.

George P. Endert has resigned as sales manager of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office to become manager of the Seattle Universal office, succeeding John R. Meldrum, who resigned last week.

H. G. Rosebaum and Guy Navarre, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office, returned this week from San Francisco, where they attended a conference of western managers.

Notes on Washington Theaters.

Messrs. Yamada and Kaiti, former owners of the Bison, Seattle, have sold that house and are building a new theater in the same neighborhood which will be known as the Oriental. The building is up-to-date and is to have two Power's 6-B machines and a Minusa Gold Fibre screen.

T. S. Hume has leased the American theater, Arlington, Wash., from F. C. Hausofus, and will open it on July 1.

E. D. Stuller has opened a new theater at Glendale.

T. L. Morgan, who was formerly connected with the Orpheum theaters in the east, has arrived in Seattle to take charge of the theater lighting department at the H. A. Johnson Company Supply store. Ray R. Kelsall, manager of the store, announces that his company is now agent for the Western Electric Company's Mazda and projection lamps. The H. A. Johnson Co. makes a specialty of Power's machines, Minusa screens, and is the western representative of the Wisconsin Chair Company.

F. L. Stannard of the Wenatchee and Gem theaters, Wenatchee, is in Seattle this week, taking part in the northwest trapshooting contest, in which he is holding a very high rank so far.

MORE DALLAS TRADE NOTES.

Oscar Corn, of the Palace theater, Farmersville, was in town last week to book "Pershing's Crusaders."

Charles Kimball, of McKinney, and J. W. Ballinger, of the Alvarado theater, Alvarado, were also visitors along film row.

J. L. McKinney, one of the best known salesmen in Texas, has joined the First National sales force.

Some exhibitors who have been spending a few days in Dallas recently are John Sayeg, of Ennis; A. C. Buchanan, Thurber theater, Thurber; E. M. Lewis, Electric Palace, Tyler; F. D. Fineburg, New theater, Lawton, Okla.; E. J. Lampkin, Colonial theater, Greenville; Charles Kimball, Polk theater, McKinney; O. Gill, Erie theater, Huko, Okla.; William Batsell, King theater, Sherman.

Constance Talmadge in "The Shuttle," a Select picture, drew a big following to the Queen theater during the early part of the first week in July. Mary Pickford followed in Artcraft's "How Could You, Jean?" with the resultant crowded houses.

At Hulsey's Old Mill, Jack Pickford in "Sandy" was followed by Douglas Fairbanks in "Say Young Fellow." At Nevill's Washington, Mary MacLaren in "The Model's Confession" was the feature.

During the last week in June, Eva Tanguay in "The Wild Girl" was featured at the Old Mill, while at the Queen, Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket" proved a most popular attraction. At the Hippodrome, "Jack and the Beanstalk" ran through the week.

Photodrome "Pulls" Street Stunts.

The Photodrome, a downtown Toronto theater, has been making good use of two young walking advertisements in the person of two boys garbed as characters of current attractions. Quite a hit was made recently during the showing of a Chaplin picture when one boy was dressed as Chaplin and the other characterized a policeman. At frequent intervals they were seen in wild chases and other stunts in the vicinity of the theater.

Two Theaters at Training Camp.

Two moving picture theaters are in operation at Valcartier Camp, which is the training cantonment for overseas troops in Quebec. The camp is located about twelve miles from the city of Quebec. The theaters are the Telegraph and the Valcartier Camp theater.

Princess Innovates Strip Tickets.

The Princess theater, Edmonton, Alberta, has made a further development with its policy of selling admission tickets in quantities. Regular cash admissions at the theater are 15c., 20c. and 25c. The theater also sells strips of tickets at the rate of ten for $1.00, which are good at any time. By the use of the strip tickets, the admissions charged are 10c., 15c. and 20c., or five cents less than when regular admission tickets are purchased at the box office.

Several Theaters Close for Summer.

Several Ontario moving picture theaters have closed their doors for the summer. One of these is the Auditorium, a large theater of Sarnia. The Princess theater, Stratford, has also been closed. The Patricia theater, London, Ontario, is to be closed for several weeks, during which time extensive alterations will be made in the structure.

W. P. Covert Honored.

W. P. Covert, business secretary of Moving Picture Operators' Union, Toronto, Local No. 173, has been asked to accept the fifth vice-presidency of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes. Mr. Covert received a wire from President W. P. Shay which intimated his appointment.

Canadian Exchange Personals.

M. Lubin, a well-known film salesman of Montreal and Toronto, has been inducted by the United States Army. He joined the colors in New York.

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors, have announced that they have secured the rights for "The Barrier."

A. H. Fischer, formerly general sales manager of the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, has resigned in order to take charge of the Metro branch in Minneapolis.

Dan Friedman, formerly branch manager of the Regal Films, Limited, at Calgary, Alberta, has joined the Canadian overseas army.

Canadian Theater Notes.

A new moving picture theater has been erected at Sudbury, an important center of Northern Ontario. It is a modern house with a seating capacity of 450.

Sydney Duncan, formerly an operator at the King's theater, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has opened the Victoria theater in the same city. The new theater is a 400-seat house and is located in proximity to the large steel mills.

The Appollo theater, Brantford, Ontario, has decided to close permanently. This is one of the oldest picture houses in Ontario. It had accommodation for four hundred.

The cool appearance of the Regent theater, Toronto, has been enhanced by the adoption of the use of Palm Beach suits for the members of the orchestra. The box office, lobby and foyer have also been "relieved" by displays of flowers and plants.

Expert Projection at Strand in Toronto

Work of Messrs Dentelbeck and Smithers, Two Efficient Operators, Places Screen Results at Big Downtown Theater in Class with Best in City—Manager Clarence Robson Puts House in Summer Dress.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONT.—The real difference that efficient moving picture operators can make in the general attractiveness of a theater has been demonstrated at the Strand, one of Toronto's large downtown theaters. Two projection specialists, President Dentelbeck of the Toronto Moving Picture Operators' Local, and Ernie Smithers were engaged by Manager Clarence Robson on May 15. They immediately cleaned up the battery of Baird machines and found that several parts had become badly worn after two years' usage. These were replaced.

The improvement in screen effectiveness after Dentelbeck and Smithers got on the job was immediate. So marked was the difference that even the most casual of the patrons noticed it. It was even reported that the theater had installed two brand new projection machines. It was the man behind, however, who made a big difference. Flickers and jumping were banished and the flow of the beam was as definite as a sun ray. The projection at the Strand theater now ranks with the best in the city, according to the decision of the experts locally.

The Strand has also made more or less of a change in policy. It had been the custom more or less of a change in policy. It had been the custom of Manager Robson to book on the open market but he has now closed for first run of Select Pictures. The theater is continuing to change program twice weekly.

The Strand recently blossomed forth in summer attire. The whole exterior was painted in appropriate hues and the interior was hung with chintz drapes. The entrance and foyer has also been decorated with many plants and flowers. Business at the Strand shows definite signs of improvement in spite of the summer's influence.

New York Manager Visits Toronto.

Manager Nathan of the Broadway theater, New York, has been visiting Montreal for the purpose of conferring with Manager Pomeroy of the Holman theater, Montreal, which is operated under the direction of the Canadian Universal Film Company. The object of the visit, it was announced, was to arrange for the presentation of special attractions at the Holman after their release in New York. The first of the series, "The City of Tears," had its initial showing at the Holman theater on July 4.

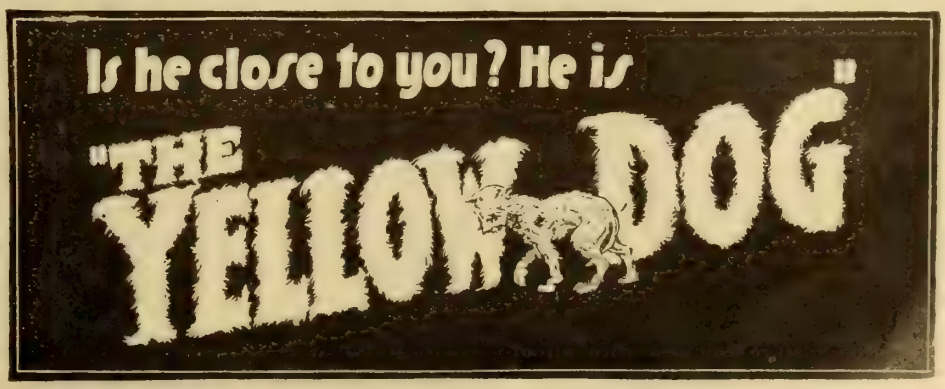
Quimet Reports Bright Outlook in West.

After visiting various cities of the Canadian West, President L. E. Quimet of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, reported, on his return to Montreal, that the outlook in moving picture circles in the West is very bright. At the present time the exhibitors are charging advanced prices for their attractions and they are still getting the crowds. Admission prices in the Canadian West are quite a bit higher than in Eastern cities. Mr. Quimet visited Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and other centres and in each place he found the same prospects.

Grand Theater Celebrates Anniversary.

When the Grand theater, Calgary, was opened six years ago, the first offering was "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson. The anniversary of the theater was celebrated a few days ago by the presentation of the same play and with the same actor but in film form. It was shown twice daily for three days and the evening prices were 25c. and 50c. The general admission for matinees was 25c.

Dominion Films Its Child Patrons.



The Dominion theater, Winnipeg, staged a special stunt for Saturday, June 29, and Saturday, July 6, of particular interest to children. As the young patrons left the theater after a special children's matinee on the first Saturday, a moving picture cameraman was on the job to take their smiling faces. On the following Saturday, the picture was shown on the screen at all performances.

Gerard Film Makes Big Hit.

Gerard's story, "My Four Years In Germany," made such a decisive hit during its regular week's run at the Regent theater, Toronto, that it was repeated by Manager Rol and Roberts for the week of July 1. The picture played to big business during the whole two weeks. It was shown entirely alone.

Theaters Increase Operation Time.

There is a tendency on the part of Toronto exhibitors, generally speaking, to increase the hours of operation for their theaters. His Majesty's theater is now advertising performances daily from 9.30 A. M. to 11 P. M. while the Royal theater, 584 College street, advertised a matinee on Wednesday, July 3. The Mary Pickford theater is also advertising its hours as from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. and the Aster theater, 233 Ossington avenue, is also advertising a daily matinee. Allen's Beaver theater also has been giving a matinee daily. Various downtown theaters, including the Colonial, Rialto, Globe, Red Mill and Photodrome, are also in operation now all day long. The large first run theaters, of course, operate from noon until 11 P. M. as well. The latter include the Regent, Strand and Allen.

Interesting Film News from Philadelphia

M. V. Coll, a Prominent Newspaper Man of Hazelton, Takes Over Management of Campbell Theater—Jack Levy Succeeds Denbow at the Fox Exchange—Manager Flynn of Peerless Exchange Joins the Marine Corps—Other Items.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Pershing's Crusaders" at Forrest.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The wonderful success attending the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders," now being presented at the Forrest theater, is due to the capable management and dignified manner of C. S. Trowbridge. Mr. Trowbridge was formerly connected with the Official British War Pictures, which were shown here some months ago. Since early in the spring he has been in charge of the showing of the United States Official War Films in all the leading cities of the Middle West.

Associated with Mr. Trowbridge in the showing of the pictures is Sergeant L. Shannon Cormack, of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, who went to Canada at the outbreak of hostilities in 1914 and enlisted in the Fifth Royal Canadian Field Artillery, and has served three years, the latter part of the time on General Byng's staff. He has been wounded twice, and is now on convalescent leave pending his return to Canada for duty. His experiences in the trenches and his explanation of the life "over there" have interested all who have heard him.

Coll Managing Campbell Theater.

M. V. Coll, a noted scrib of one of the prominent dailies of Hazelton, has assumed active management of the Campbell theater, and is meeting with considerable success.

Murphy Running Arcadia Temporarily.

Joseph A. Murphy, manager of the Family theater, has been appointed temporary manager of the Arcadia, which is owned by Al Boyd. A few important and significant improvements in the display of lobby advertisements have already been made. Mr. Donjeon, who is the permanent manager of the Arcadia, has gone on a vacation for two weeks, and will undoubtedly be much pleased when he returns and discovers the interest that Mr. Murphy has taken in the theater.

Shindler Appointed Manager of Leader.

Ben Shindler, formerly manager of the Ridge Avenue theater, and who has recently been engaged as film salesman of the Masterpiece, has been appointed manager of the Leader theater by Herbert Effinger, of the Strand, and will begin active duty on Monday, July 8.

Levy to Succeed Denbow at Fox.

Jack Levy, who is credited with having opened the first exchange in Philadelphia for William Fox, has arrived here after an absence of over two years, and will succeed George Denbow, who is getting ready to answer his country's call.

Schwalbe to Return in July.

Harry Schwalbe, of the Electric Theater Supply Company, who left some time ago accompanied by his wife to attend the wedding of their daughter, Dorothy, on June 19 to Lieut. Raymond Connell in California, is expected to return here during the latter part of July.

Armato Now with Philadelphia Press.

The Evening Telegraph, of Philadelphia, the first newspaper with the Associated Press News Service to have installed and maintained a successful motion picture department in addition to its attractive theatrical page, was suspended from further publication on last Saturday, June 29. However, it will be remembered that the Evening Telegraph combined with the Philadelphia Press some six months ago, and in view of the recent events the entire motion picture columns with all of its theater advertising has already been transferred to the Press, a daily and Sunday proposition, through the efforts of its motion picture editor, Frank V. Armato, the pioneer in this field of newspaper work. The first motion picture department was inaugurated in the Philadelphia daily and Sunday Times by Armato in September, 1912, and from August, 1914, to June, 1918, he conducted the photoplay department in the Evening Telegraph. Beginning Monday, July 1, he will be manager and editor of the classified and display motion picture department in the Philadelphia Press.

J. M. Flynn Joins the Marines.

J. M. Flynn, the popular and successful manager of the Peerless exchange here, has joined the Marines. Mr. Flynn goes into the Marine Corps with the best wishes of all his friends bestowed upon him. He is now stationed in Barrack No. 3 at League Island, Philadelphia, Pa.

Rochester Trade Notes

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main St., East, Rochester, N. Y.

Fennyvessey's Ability Recognized.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Paul Fennyvessey, who recently left the Strand theater here as manager to take charge of the Liberty theater at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, has received substantial recognition at the hands of the Government of his ability as a showman. He has been assigned the important job of booking all films used in a large string of Liberty theaters in the South. To relieve him of the extra burdens thus imposed he has been given an assistant manager for his Liberty theater.

Theaters Employing Girl Ushers.

Owing to the ruling which prohibits the use of young able-bodied men as ushers in theaters, Rochester theaters generally are following the lead of a few of the downtown theaters, which for a long time have employed only girls in this capacity. On every hand it appears that girls make the most satisfactory ushers.

Phillips Enlists in Heavy Artillery.

William J. Phillips, operator at the Temple theater in Holley, near Rochester, has resigned and enlisted in the Heavy Artillery at Buffalo. Mr. Phillips is not in the draft, but after running off many war pictures during the last couple of years he felt that he would rather help to make history than to merely view it in film.

Rochester Theater Notes.

The Grand theater is now running on a reduced summer-time schedule, being open only every other day, and Saturdays and Sundays.

"The Unbeliever" held up strong all last week at the Piccadilly theater, although in the first place it had only been booked for the first half of the week.

The Family theater is making good headway in its summer-time contest. Votes count on the ratio of tickets bought during the summer season. The prizes are courses in the Rochester Business Institute.

MORE DETROIT NEWS.

Admit Soldiers and Sailors Free.

Through the splendid efforts of Police Censors of Motion Pictures, Royal A. Baker and Lester Potter, more than fifty Detroit theaters are now admitting soldiers and sailors in uniform absolutely free—exclusive of the government war tax, which everybody must pay. Some of the theaters simply admit them at the door when the tax is paid, while some of the other theaters have placed a certain number of passes with the chairman of the recreation commission for soldiers and sailors, from where they are properly distributed. The movement will likely spread over the entire state in a short while. It's a splendid patriotic movement and one that is worth while.

Majestic Theater Closes for Repairs.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, closed Saturday, July 6, and according to General Manager M. W. McGee, will not reopen until sometime in August—probably the latter part. It is the first time in the history of that house that it has been closed. The auditorium will be redecorated, the stage will be rebuilt and other improvements made in keeping with the Majestic policy, "where we do things bigger."

Employ Women Ticket Takers.

Two Detroit theaters are now employing women ticket takers—the Colonial and the Washington—and the managements of both theaters contend that they are a big improvement over men, being more courteous, polite and interested in their work.

To the Exhibitor

Desiring a change from being on one subject at a time from one to two years, when the story does get slightly monotonous, I look forward, with a great deal of pleasure, to doing some shorter pictures and getting the relaxation of an occasional change of story during the year.

Many years ago, I used to do pictures known by the name of "Biograph." In the last four years, my staff and I have produced "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and recently, "The Hearts of the World." I am very glad to say that the people seem to like "The Hearts of the World" about as well as "The Birth." Nevertheless, according to a promise made some time ago to the Artcraft people, we are going to deliver to you six six-reel subjects done absolutely under our personal direction.

We are very happy to again be with you, and to renew the pleasant relations that existed between us in the days of "Pippa Passes," "Judith of Bethulia," "The Sands of Dee," "The Battle of the Sexes," "The Escape," and "The Avenging Conscience" in the days gone by.

Most sincerely yours,

D W Griffith

A Tense Drama of Human Emotions
A Gusher of Suspense and a Cyclone of Action

This is unquestionably the greatest motion picture produced during the war. It deals with the American viewpoint and dramatizes that awful struggle that is going on within some of our own families where the old generation still leans toward the Kaiser while the hearts of their sons and daughters beat true to the United States.

We pin our faith upon this production.

Entitled

"THE HAUNTED HOUSE"

Made in California

by

FRAZEE FILM PRODUCTIONS

A COMEDY DRAMA, full of original and sensationally funny situations, different from the hackneyed and tiresome misnamed "Comedies" foisted upon theatre managers through false advertisements.

"The Haunted House" contains a love interest, a heart interest and logical thrills of suspense. In addition there are puzzling delusions, mystical illusions and weird magic, together with a screen visualization of theatrical "Black Art" never before accomplished in Motion Pictures. Behind all is a feasible plot that does not insult the intelligence of audiences by inaneness. The production is an interesting entertainment.

Mr. Frazee for many years attained vogue by directing for Keystone Company its most successful comedies. During the past year he has been perfecting his inventions. He wrote and directed "The Haunted House" which will be released on State Rights Plan in July, 1918. All letters of inquiry should be addressed to

"THE EMPTY CAB"

Five-Reel Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in Role of Cub Reporter.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Bluebird number, "The Empty Cab," is a light-running story, rather conventional in its opening scenes, but developing to an amusing close. The plot is hardly strong enough for five reels, but the fact that the close is really worth while makes the number as a whole entertaining. It will pass as an average subject of the light, agreeable type.

Franklyn Farnum appears in the role of Henry Egbert Nerves, the spendthrift son of a wealthy father. The latter is exasperated by Henry's failure to exert himself in any way and sends him a note, saying "For God's sake go to work." The youth decides to act upon this advice being out of funds, and attaches himself to the staff of a newspaper.

The editor of the paper, who had not seemed very enthusiastic about employing him, finally sends Henry out to trail some counterfeiters. Henry observes the mysterious actions of a girl with whom he had been trying to flirt that very morning and follows her. He and a private detective enter the premises of a seemingly deserted house and have a series of knockabout adventures with a gang of men who have apparently made the girl captive. In the end it develops that the girl is society editor of Henry's paper and the men are all members of the staff. His father had planned a little surprise for Henry with the aid of the editor.

Eileen Percy appears as the girl in the case. Others in the case are Harry De More, Frank Brownlee, Harry Lindsey and Fred Kelsey. The story was written by F. McGraw Willis and directed by Douglas Gerrard.

"THE SAFETY CURTAIN"

Select Pictures Presents Norma Talmadge in Strong Six-Reel Release.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A COMPACT, well-built screen production in six reels has been fashioned by S. A. Franklin and Paul West from the novel called "The Safety Curtain," by Ethel M. Dell. It provides an interesting role for Norma Talmadge, a screen performer who neither fears nor skimps the dramatic end of her work for the sake of merely looking pretty. She takes hold of her situations intelligently and is fortunate in this instance, as in many others, in having a part that calls out her best. Eugene O'Brien, the soldier-hero, also does first rate work, playing with fine repression until the dramatic moments come.

The story is one that contains much human feeling convincingly set forth. Miss Talmadge appears as Puck, a dancer of the London music halls. She is married to the "strong man," a brutal fellow named Vulcan, who beats her unmercifully and holds her to a strict social regime while he does not hesitate to make love to other women. There is a realistic fire scene in the theater, during which Captain Merryon, the hero, rescues Puck and takes her to his apartments. Both the captain and the girl are comparatively friendless and naturally fall in love. Vulcan is presumed to have died in the fire and the captain takes Puck with him to the Army Post in India.

The dramatic moments, which are splendidly presented, come when Sylvester, a former habitué of the dance halls, recognizes Puck. The girl will not yield to his advances and Sylvester communicates with Vulcan, who has also appeared on the scene. The latter eventually succumbs to the plague and Puck and Merryon are happily wed.

Gladden James has the part of Sylvester and Anders Randolf appears as Vulcan.

"THE CLEMENCEAU CASE."

Reissue of Five-Part Adaptation of the Dumas Novel Featuring Theda Bara.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE reissue of "The Clemenceau Case," in which William Fox featured Theda Bara, will no doubt meet with its former success with the type of audiences who appreciate the Bara style of interpretation and the super-melodramatic flavor given the production in its development. The star's ability to "vamp" is played up as the central pivot of the story to an extent that will be offensive to some, for the reason that it prevents a normal analysis of the characterization and purpose of the story.

The story tells of the wicked manipulations of an artist's model when her lot lies between money and position and love. Discovering that a certain rich nobleman whom she has hoped to marry has decided to follow the advice of his mother and forego a union with the model on account of their difference in station, she marries a sculptor for whom she appeared to have had an affection. Finally a criss-crossing of love affairs, all of which prove the fickleness of the woman's affections, leads up to the climax, where the husband stabs his wife to death.

As told in the film the story has only the charm of melodrama and fails to establish a more serious objective.

"THE WHIRLPOOL."

Select Picture Starring Alice Brady Contains Numerous Dramatic Moments.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

VICTORIA MORTON'S novel "The Whirlpool" has been put into picture form by Eve Unsell and produced by Select with Alice Brady as the star and Alan Crosland the director. William Marshall was the cameraman. The story is dramatic in the extreme, the heroine, Bella Cavello, being the decoy for her stepfather's gambling house. It belongs to the class of fiction that will not stand the test of plausibility, but has sufficient feverish excitement to keep the spectator from bothering with that fact.

Several of the characters belong to the higher circles of the underworld, and the inside of a well patronized gambling house is shown in full blast, although New York is supposed to have shut the doors of all such places long before Mayor Hyland started his reform administration. On its artistic side there is much to recommend the picture. Director Crosland knows how to treat his subject, and the entire production is in keeping with the theme. Alice Brady is sufficiently attractive as the decoy, and acts with force and skill.

Bella Cavello is the creature of circumstances. Her instincts are those of a refined and high-minded woman; but she is without the will power to prevent her stepfather from using her "to lure men's souls to the shores of sin," as George R. Sims once expressed it. Judge Reverton, who suspends sentence on Richard Brettner, an admirer of Bella's who has been buying her costly presents with stolen money, is wrongly suspected of murder, and Bella undertakes to free him. The murdered man's nephew is the real culprit. He and Judge Reverton are at the same sanatorium when Bella gets on Hallan's track. Both men propose to her, and she accepts the judge. Her efforts to free Brettner almost wreck her married life, but she succeeds in convicting the real criminal and proving to her husband she is worthy of his love.

The cast is a long and able one. H. E. Herbert as the Judge, J. H. Gillmore as Ferris, William Davidson as Arthur Hallam, Robert Walker as Richard Brettner and W. E. Williams as Dr. Comyns have the principal supporting roles.

"ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS."

Vitagraph Production of O. Henry Story Featuring Edward Earle Will Entertain.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALTHOUGH the ancient and honorable will motive pops up at the beginning of "One Thousand Dollars," this five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, taken from a story by O. Henry, is generally entertaining. Directed by Kenneth Webb and featuring Edward Earle, the picture has the benefit of a well chosen cast and expert supervision. The story is only mildly exciting, but it has the usual odd twists of plot that the man who invented the expression "little old New York" always managed to get into his work, and the characters never lose their humanity no matter what the situation.

"One Thousand Dollars" is not a tale of Wall Street, but Greenwich Village and one of New York's famous squares. Eddie Gillian, a young chap who would be classed among the idle rich and notified to find a real job at the present time, has been living the life of a reckless spender when his wealthy uncle dies. Eddie has always looked upon himself as old Gillian's heir, and receives an unpleasant shock when the will is read. Not approving of his nephew's record along Broadway, the old man leaves him only one thousand dollars, and this small amount must be strictly accounted for to Gillian's lawyer. The disappointed heir has been supplying a musical comedy queen with costly bribes to her favor and his first impulse is to spend the entire legacy on a diamond necklace for the lady, whose name is Lotta Laurierl. The actress knows the terms of the will and turns him off before he can separate himself from his money.

Margaret Hayden, a ward of old Gillian's, is the good influence in Eddie's life. She has been left ten dollars and a piece of bric-a-brac, but the crafty old gentleman has so arranged matters that when his nephew reforms and proves that he honestly loves Margaret the pair come in to all his money.

Edward Earle is the hero, Agnes Ayres as Margaret, Florence Deshon as the actress, Templar Saxe as old Bryson and Anne Brody as Mrs. Murphy are the leading players.

"THAT GEEZER OF BERLIN."

Jewel Releases Two-Reel Century Production Satirizing "The Kaiser."

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE success of the Jewel production known as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," inspired Frank Howard Clark to write a scenario called "That Geezer of Berlin." This satirizes the original offering and is also to be released by the Jewel company. It was directed by Arthur A. Hotaling.

"That Geezer of Berlin" is travesty all the way through. It makes all manner of sport of the Berlin court and winds up with the Kaiser being carried through the air on a rope attached to an aeroplane. In the opening scenes the Kaiser, the "Clown Quince," Von Turpentine, von Bethman Bowlegs and their followers are seen about the council table. In costumes and settings this is more elaborately staged than the average production of the kind. Ray Hanford appears as the Kaiser, and accomplishes a sufficient likeness to that individual. The "Clown Quince" and others are easily recognizable.

The reception of such a travesty with the public mind in its present tense state is problematical. It would certainly seem a great deal funnier after the Kaiser and his gang have been properly brought to justice. There is always the danger of treating too lightly the serious side of this tremendous conflict. This production, we think, avoids that in its general intention and in most particulars, except in certain scenes picturing the invasion; these scenes, we understand, will be cut. As to caricaturing the Kaiser and his bloodthirsty crew there can certainly be no objection to that, except that it lets them off too easily.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN"

Marguerite Clark as Little Eva and Topsy in Paramount Production of Famous Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE most popular play of the American stage, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" can hardly expect to make a like record on the screen. Conditions that gave the story its remarkable success when it first appeared no longer exist. The version produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with Marguerite Clark as Little Eva and Topsy, presents the story very attractively, however, and screen patrons will find it worth their while to view the old classic in a new form. Directed by J. Searle Dawley, and all the celebrated scenes reproduced with commendable realism, the Harriet Elizabeth Beecher Stowe book, which contains such a powerful sermon against slavery, is bound to prove entertaining to the public even at this late day.

It is also interesting to note that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is an excellent example of a well made play, outside of the timeliness of its theme when it was first brought out. It was written to arouse the entire nation, and the different elements of suspense, pathos, humor, and strongly drawn characters are handled with great skill in both the stage and the screen versions.

There is no necessity for retelling the familiar story. The histories of Little Eva, Topsy, Uncle Tom, Eliza, Simon Legree, and the rest of the characters are known the world over. Marguerite Clark's double of the little white embodiment of goodness and the small black shadow of mischief is among the most interesting of her screen impersonations. The range demanded is a wide one. The death of Little Eva might have been more impressive, but the admirers of this clever artist will be quick to recognize the sincerity and skill that are to be found in her work.

Frank Losee as Uncle Tom, Henry Stamford as St. Clair, Walter Lewis as Simon Legree, Mrs. Priestley Morrison as Ophelia, and Florence Carpenter as Eliza stand out prominently in the well chosen cast.

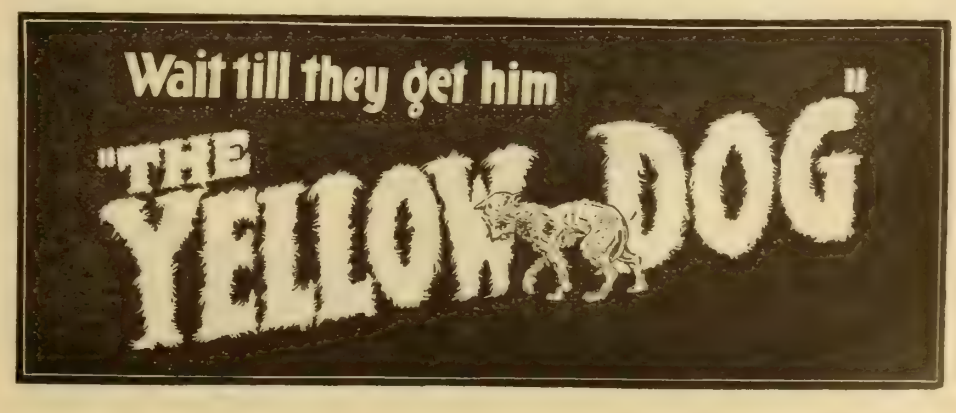
"CAPITOL COMEDIES."

"Smiling Bill" Parsons Featured in Two Subjects of Two Reels Each.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THESE two-reel comedy numbers, released by Goldwyn, prove but moderately successful. They do little more than make the observer wish he could see the hero, "Smiling Bill" Parsons, in stories with a better comedy swing to them. He has an engaging personality and would certainly prove highly successful in the right mediums. The events in these two offerings would be very funny if they happened in real life, but on the screen they are only mildly amusing.

"Dad's Knockout" features Mr. Parsons as the widowed father of a gay youth named Jimmy. The son loves an actress and the father decides to put an end to the affair. He attends the theater and promptly falls in love with the actress himself. The later events concern the rivalry between father and son for the hand of the actress. Teddy Sampson is attractive in the latter role and Neal Burns is agreeable in the role of Jimmy. But the plot does not develop much humor.



"Widow's Mite," the second subject, features Mr. Parsons as salesman for a corset house. He wants to be manager of the house and finds himself in competition for the job with the star salesman. The place is promised to the man who gets the first order. Smiling Bill is already in love with Molly, a pretty miss portrayed by Molly Malone, but he makes love to a Mrs. Stacey, who owns a department store, so that he will get an order from her. The widow becomes wise to his game, but he finally gets both the girl and the job as manager.

"THE CLAWS OF THE HUN."

Charles Ray Gives Sympathetic Characterization in Paramount Story of German Spies.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE more screen drive at the Kaiser! "The Claws of the Hun" is a contribution of the Paramount to the list of photoplays that are engaged in showing the American people the kind of foes the Allies are fighting abroad and the choice collection of German spies that are overrunning our own country. All the scenes of the picture take place in the United States; but John Stanton, the hero, goes through enough danger to satisfy the most ardent lover of melodramatic situations. The plot is constructed after the accepted formula and the material has seen much honorable service in the cause of the drama. Skilful handling of the entire five parts, by both the dramatist and the director, and Charles Ray's sympathetic acting of the young American who proves his courage and ready wit before joining the ranks places "The Claws of the Hun" among the best of the Paramount releases in which Ray has appeared. John Stanton is the son of a wealthy manufacturer of munitions, and has been brought up as an idler. He nevertheless hears his country's call and is determined to enlist, until his invalid mother begs him not to do so. Her plea that his going will cause her death wins him over. That night he discovers that Alfred Werner, his father's most trusted assistant in the factory, is a German spy.

The elder Stanton and Werner are at the office of the works, going over some important papers. John learns that the factory has been secretly wired and that the spy intends to blow it up and his father with it unless he gives up papers belonging to the United States. The young fellow is caught by Werner's accomplices and is tortured, in a effort to make him tell the combination of his father's safe. Neither of the Stantons, father nor son, will betray his country.

John escapes from his captors and rescues his father in a hugely sensational manner. The last seen of him he is marching away to war with his mother's blessing and his father and his sweetheart cheering him on.

Jane Novak, Robert McKim, Dorcas Matthews and Melbourne MacDowell have the leading parts in the Ray support. All are excellent.

"EVERYWOMAN'S HUSBAND."

Gloria Swanson Effective in Triangle Picture of Modern Life.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SOMETHING over forty years ago the writer went to the theater one night. One speech in the play is still remembered: "I pity the man who has you for a mother-in-law!" Judging from "Everywoman's Husband," a certain brand of mother-in-law is still up to her old tricks. The Triangle picture, written by John Clymer and G. Logue and starring Gloria Swanson, is not a morality play, but it contains a terrible example of what happens to a man when he isn't enough of a man to boss his own house. Fortunately, for the peace of the world woman of the Mrs. Jonathan Rhodes class are not in the majority but there are enough of them to make the warning conveyed in the story impressive. Spectators with a well developed sense of humor will get considerable amusement out of the situations, and everyone will be able to recall prototypes of all the characters in real life. Gilbert P. Hamilton has directed the picture expertly, and Tom Buckingham, the photographer, has kept his share of the work up to the mark.

The plot of "Everywoman's Husband" is not at all complicated. Six people practically tell the story: Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes, their daughter, their son-in-law, the son-in-law's partner, and one of his friends of the opposite sex. Mrs. Rhodes is the ruler of her home. Before her daughter marries she instructs her in the proper method of subduing a husband. Daughter tries it on when she becomes Mrs. Frank Emerson and succeeds in driving a perfectly good brand of husband to another woman for peace and comfort. About this time her father commits suicide and the unpleasant fact is revealed that he also had been driven to seek for peace and comfort outside of his own home. A great light breaks in on daughter concerning the brilliant failure of her mother's strong tongue method, and young Mrs. Emerson makes haste to mend her own mistake. Father Rhodes had a wishbone where his backbone should have been, but his son-in-law is made of better stuff and is entitled to the happy future awarded him.

Gloria Swanson follows the author's conception of Edith Emerson faithfully, and it is not difficult to understand Frank Emerson's eagerness to become reconciled with his wife. Joe King as Emerson, Lillian Langdon as Mrs. Rhodes, George Pearce as Jonathan Rhodes, Lillian West as Delia Marshall and Jack Livingston as Reginald Dunstan complete a satisfactory cast.

"NO MAN'S LAND."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OPENING deliberately, "No Man's Land" develops into a vigorous melodrama with a patriotic finish and a company of United States sailors rounding up a band of the Kaiser's friends. Louis Joseph Vance is the author of this five-part Metro production, directed by William S. Davis and starring Bert Lytell. It is not so original in plot and incident as many of the Vance stories, but the material chosen is along the lines that entertain most moving picture patrons and the story's Americanism is always sound. Bert Lytell and A. S. LeVino adapted the novel to the screen.

Garrett Cope, the young American hero of the story is a happy-go-lucky chap with plenty of money, who gets mixed up with a German spy named Henry Miller. Both men love the same woman, an heiress, Katherine Gresham. Miller contrives to get Cope convicted of murdering Katherine's cousin, after the spy himself kills the young man. During the time Garrett is serving his sentence the war with Germany is declared and Miller is one of a party of alien enemies to start sitting out a boat to prey on commerce on the Pacific Ocean, an island known as "No Man's Land" being the headquarters of the gang.

Once Cope is behind the prison bars Miller has little difficulty in pursuading Katherine to marry him. She is soon given excellent reason for regretting her act, when she finds herself on the island with her husband. The confession of one of Miller's confederates frees Garrett and chance takes him to the island where the German and his wife are staying. A series of melodramatic incidents lead up to the time when Cope blows up the German raider and Miller is killed by mistake by his own men.

The picture is capably directed, and the island scenes afford Cameraman Robert B. Kurrle a number of characteristic shots. Bert Lytell has the right personality for Cope and always acts with earnestness and skill. Anna Q. Nilsson is attractive as the heroine, and Charles Arling, Mollie McConnell, Eugene Pallette and Edward Alexander give a good account of themselves in the other supporting roles.

"THE LOCKED DOOR."

General Film Presents Little Gloria Joy in First Oakdale Production.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE first of the Oakdale Productions, made by Balboa and featuring the child actress Gloria Joy, is "The Locked Heart" in five reels. This picture, which is being released by General Film Company, tells a pathetic story of a little girl who is denied her father's love as he feels she is responsible for the death of her mother, which occurred at the child's birth. There is considerable matter introduced that is not of vital consequence to the story; however, much of the humor, and several of the interesting bits of child life are in these scenes.

Henry Mason, called home by wire, finds his wife has died, leaving a baby girl. He refuses to look at the child, locks the door of the nursery which has been prepared for the baby's coming, and goes abroad to forget his grief, but it will not down. Scenes in foreign lands continually reminds him of his bereavement, and he finally returns home, arriving just as a stranger is about to chastise the little girl for a childish prank. Mason rescues his daughter, and the child's affection coupled with her insistence that she often sees her mother in her dreams, and she wants her to go into the locked room, finally leads him to open the door, when he finds a note that his wife had written before her death, saying she made a bargain with death to take her instead of the baby, and begging Mason to give the child the love he meant for the two. He then realizes how blind he has been, and takes the child in his arms.

The little star, Gloria Joy, is an attractive and clever child, and this picture will appeal particularly to children. There is also a bright little negro boy who appears in a number of the scenes.

The production was directed by Henry King, who deserves credit for his choice of scenes and the manner in which he has handled his youthful proteges. Vola Vale as the mother, and Daniel Gilfeather as the grandfather, gave fine performances. Henry King, in addition to directing the picture, also appeared as the father, and handled the role well, although in a few of the scenes he was inclined to overact.

"JOAN OF THE WOODS."

Five-Reel World-Picture Features June Elvidge in Story of Three Generations.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT is difficult to devise a plot running over from one generation to another, in which the heroine plays two roles such as does June Elvidge in this number, without bringing in much that is conventional. This story, written by Louise Vale, has a great deal of plot, but so many tales have been built up in practically the same way that it has but little freshness.

The story begins with a lawyer, Philip Wentworth, spending his vacation in the mountains at a cabin owned by Old Man Travers and his daughter, Joan. Old Travers is about to turn his daughter over, for monetary consideration, to be the wife of a mountaineer. In the opening scenes Philip fights with the mountaineer and saves the girl from the sad fate prepared for her. Philip then marries her himself and takes her to the city. There are some pleasing comedy scenes in connection with Joan's first experiences with city clothes and the fashionable life in general. These scenes are really amusing and perhaps the best in the offering.

The plot then goes on to a less pleasant series of complications, some of which are not entirely convincing. Philip neglects his mountain-girl wife, after their girl baby is born. She dies on his own doorstep. The child has been taken by an old Jew pawnbroker and when it grows up June Elvidge appears once more as the daughter. Philip meanwhile has married a widow with a son named Norman. Joan marries Norman secretly and they have a baby, which dies shortly after its birth. Joan puts the child's body in a park lake and is charged with murder. The trial occurs before her own father, now a judge on the bench. She is eventually cleared, and when all of the facts become known she is recognized by her repentant father and also claimed by Norman as his wife.

The cast includes Walter Pratt Lewis, Albert Hart, George MacQuarrie, Marguerite Gale and John Bowers. Travers Vale directed the production.

"CUPID BY PROXY."

Five-Reel Pathe-Diando Subject Tells Delightful Story of Home Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Pathe-Diando offering features Baby Marie Osborne in a pleasing little story of two neighboring families. The plot is a slight one, but the story gains rather than loses from this fact. It gets its chief effects from the natural swing of the events pictured and its faithful reflection of real life.

The Stewarts and the Browns are next-door neighbors in the suburbs of a city. Between them they own a Ford car and one of the early incidents shown is a picnic which all attend in this car. The picnic is a joyous event, abounding in small humorous happenings. Ralph Brown is very much in love with Jane Stewart, and Marie Stewart and Tommy Brown are very good friends.

As time goes on Mr. Stewart begins manufacturing clothespins in partnership with a man named Woods. Mr. Stewart becomes rich and his family begins to draw away from the plebeian Browns. Mr. Woods wants to marry Jane and her parents encourage the match. But Ralph Brown, who is now employed in the clothespin factory, refuses to give up the girl. In the end, after an exciting fire and certain office difficulties, he wins Jane. Little Marie plays an important part in bringing the two together.

Others in the cast of this offering, which will appeal to a family audience strongly, are John Steppling, J. N. McDowell, Mildred Harris, Mary Talbot, Antrim Short and Kenneth Nordyke. William Bertram directed.

"WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING."

Interesting Story of Marriage Revolt Released by Artcraft.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LIVE issue, that of "Marriage Revolt," probably second only to the great European War in general public interest, and Mr. De Mille has pictured the Hughes story with keen realization that any good comprehensive survey of the aspects of modern marriage and divorce cannot fail to interest a very large proportion of the average audience. Considering the supreme importance of marriage to society as now constituted it is a matter of wonder that more plays of this kind have not been made.

Mr. De Mille is certainly on the right track to bring out this kind of story, enlightening people who are content to regard the whole subject rather superficially, as he is in typing the story with interesting people, rather than producing dull vehicles to explain some exacting star of limited histrionic ability. His visualizations have an added charm in their beautiful appeal to the senses—they reach thought and judgment through sentiment. He has taken a group of selfish and self-indulgent people in easy circumstances and clearly set forth their lack of fine sentiment and higher morality by methods so subtle that the motive is felt rather than seen. They are Charity Cheever, society woman, (Kathlyn Williams); James Dickman, a millionaire (Elliot Dexter); Kedzie Thropp, an actress, (Wanda Hawley); Zada L'Etoile, a dancer, (Peter Cheever); Charity's wealthy husband (Thurston Hall), and Marquis of Strathdane, an aviator (Raymond Hatton). Mr. De Mille has "mixed those children up" by carrying them through many and varied phases of conventional matrimony, conventional divorce and conventional morality to a complicated result which silently asks the question "What shall be the attitude of society toward this whole question?"

The work of author and producer is apparently frictionless in every scene of development except the concluding ones, which seem irrelevant and such a serious drift from the main subject into a phase of the war as to constitute almost an anti-climax. This descent from the more important main issue to one not entirely pertinent, particularly at the conclusion, is a serious fault, though one appearing in a very large proportion of plays produced on the screen. Not at all irrelevant, wholly logical and well-placed, is a little sideshow picturing a burning motion picture studio. Not only is it highly realistic and entirely appropriate, but it affords a flash of Keystone Comedy, in which Tully Marshall as director and Raymond Hatton as an actor in costume distinguish themselves. The whole effect during five reels is animated, sensuous and so attractive that its sum of values is very high.

Comments

General Film Company.

SISTERS OF THE GOLDEN CIRCLE.—One of the best of the two-reel O. Henry adaptations. Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle appear in the leading roles. The story deals with two brides, and most of the scenes are on top of a Fifth Avenue "bus" in New York. This story affords an excellent combination of human interest, pathos, humor and action.

THE BRIEF DEBUT OF TILDY.—This two-reel picture is an adaptation of a story by O. Henry. It is a pathetic tale of a poor waitress who is unattractive to men. One, while under the influence of intoxicants, kisses her, then spoils her dreams by apologizing. Alice Terry is well cast in the leading role, while Betty Blythe appears as a rather flashy waitress in the same restaurant.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE EMPTY CAB (Bluebird).—A five-reel number, written by F. McGrew Willis and directed by Douglas Gerrard. This features Franklyn Farnum as a cub reporter, who is sent out by his paper to capture some counterfeiters. It develops that the assignment was a hoax and this leads to an amusing close. The story is too slight in plot for five reels, but will average up quite well for a number of the light, agreeable type. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Famous Players-Lasky.

THE CLAWS OF THE HUN (Paramount), July 8.—Charles Ray is the star of this five-part photoplay which has an engrossing plot and is capitally acted by the entire cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN (Paramount), July 15.—Marguerite Clarke doubles Topsy and Little Eva in this five-part screen version of the celebrated story. The production is elaborate, the river scenes being especially realistic. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

OTHER MEN'S DAUGHTERS (Fox), July 7.—A five-part production featuring Peggy Hyland and a competent cast. The picture draws attention melodramatically to the indifference with which men of loose morals handle the careers of other men's daughters. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

DAD'S KNOCKOUT (Capitol Comedy).—This is a fairly good comedy number which features "Smiling Bill" Parsons as the father of a youth who loves an actress. The father attempts to check the romance, but falls in love with the actress himself. The characterizations and settings are very good, but this does not develop much humor. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

WIDOW'S MIGHT (Capitol Comedy).—A two-reel number, featuring "Smiling Bill" Parsons as salesman for a corset house. He makes love to a widow who owns a department store for the purpose of getting a large order from her. She finds him out, but he wins the promotion he was seeking. This is only fairly strong. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS (Vitagraph), July 8.—O. Henry is the author of this five-part picture featuring Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres and directed by Kenneth Webb. The scenes are laid in New York and the story is full of whimsical humor. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

THAT GEEZER OF BERLIN (Century-Jewel).—A two-reel burlesque on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," written by Frank Howard Clark and directed by Arthur Hotaling. This caricatures the German court and burlesques numerous events pictured in the first "Kaiser" offering. It winds up with the captured war lord hanging to a rope from an aeroplane. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

NO MAN'S LAND (Metro), July 8.—A five-part screen version of a Louis Joseph Vance story, Bert Lytell is excellent as the hero. The subject deals with the big war in an interesting manner. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

TO HELL WITH THE KAISER (Metro-Screen Classic).—A seven-act production, written by June Mathis and directed by George Irving. This is a story of the war, picturing scenes in the German court since 1888, the Belgian atrocities, the entrance of America into the conflict and the entrance of the Kaiser into hell. It is a strong combination of grim war and humor, with an abundance of patriotism intermingled. Laurence Grant and Olive Tell have the leading roles and are assisted by a fine cast. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 36 (Mutual).—One of the choice morsels of this issue shows interned Germans building and repairing Georgia roads. Other items include scenes at the Hog Island shipbuilding yards, a visit of a number of newspaper editors to one of the cantonments, and a new device by which a girl's cape can be turned into tent at the bathing beach.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

ROSEAU, DOMINICA (Post Film-Pathe), July 7.—A descriptive reel, picturing a town in the British West Indies and its environments. The native life is shown, as in other numbers taken in this same region, called the American Mediterranean by many. The island was originally owned by the French, but passed into British hands and is one of the group desired by America at the present time.

AT THE PISTOL'S POINT (Pathe), July 7.—Episode No. 18 of "The House of Hate." Pearl has some further adventures in the part of Nan Fields in the opening of this instalment. For a while she misleads the Terror and his gang, who believe Pearl herself was electrocuted. But later they get wise and both she and Gresham are endangered. A characteristic number, which carries the interest well.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, No. 10 (Pathe), July 14.—One of the best of the series, picturing a personal visit of King George to the Grand Fleet. This gives a fine idea of the fleet itself, lying ready for action and shows the British monarch meeting the officers and men.

FIRE THE COOK (Pathe), July 14.—A one-reel knockabout number, featuring Toto as a chef in a millionaire's residence. The kitchen scenes contain a fair amount of amusement, though there is not enough of a plot to make this a strong number. It depends mainly upon Toto's funny antics.

Select Pictures Corporation.

THE SAFETY CURTAIN (Select Pictures).—A strong six-reel subject, adapted by S. A. Franklin and Paul West from a novel by Ethel M. Dell. Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien have the leading roles, which are splendidly handled. The story is one of heart interest and drama. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE WHIRLPOOL (Select).—Taken from a novel by Victoria Morton, this five-part picture deals with the underworld and the heroine is played by Alice Brady. The plot is dramatic and the cast has been ably directed by Alan Crosland. The picture is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

EVERYWOMAN'S HUSBAND (Triangle), July 7.—Gloria Swanson heads the cast of this five-part story written by John Clymer and G. Logue. The picture is fairly interesting and was directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

FATTY AND MABEL ADRIFT (Triangle).—This three-part farce is one of the best Keystone comedies ever made. The finish is a loud yell of amusement. Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand are immense. This reissue is now on the Triangle program.

Universal Film Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 30 (Universal), June 26.—The War Stamp campaign, "Doughboys" collecting garments for Belgians, a prize Holstein bull, the "Human Spider" climbing a building, French guns silencing supercannon, and other features are included in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS, No. 60 (Universal), June 29.—This opens with scenes showing the training of Naval rookies and includes many other war subjects of interest. It closes with a timely hint to vacationists to help with farm work.

HELL LET LOOSE (Universal), July 6.—Episode No. 14 of "The Lion's Claws." Another sensational instalment. Beth no sooner escapes from the orang-outang than she is carried into the jungle by the mysterious natives. The tropical hurricane is realistically staged and the whole number contains good suspense.

THE BRIDGE OF TERROR (Universal), July 14.—Episode No. 15 of "The Lion's Claws." This continues the exciting events begun in the last number during the hurricane. The mysterious natives desire to make Beth queen of their tribe, but she refuses the honor. She flees and finds herself on a hanging bridge with Rej Hari on one side and some wild beasts on the other. Rej sets fire to the bridge and Beth falls into the stream.

THE PURSUING PACKAGE (Nestor), July 15.—Just a one-reel burlesque, in which a detective shadows a pair who have stolen some pearls. The action, which occurs principally on shipboard, is quite laughable at times, though there is not much of a plot. A fair subject.

ALMOST WELCOME (Lyons & Moran), July 20.—A domestic comedy of the realistic type, and very funny. Lee, who is married, brings Eddie home for the night unexpectedly. There is nothing to eat in the house. Later, during the night, it rains and the roof leaks. The experiences are laughable and true to life.

THE SHOOTING PARTY (Western), July 20.—A two-reel story of range warfare between sheepman and cattlemen, by T. Stanley Hutton. Mignon Anderson, Dick La Reno, Val Paul and Joe Rickson play the leads. The plot is reminiscent of "The Virginian," but moves swiftly and will hold the interest well.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE GOLDEN WALL (World-Picture), June 15.—A pleasant five-reel love story of the old-fashioned type, adapted from a French novel. It concerns a young French nobleman who wins the love of a wealthy American girl, but not as a fortune hunter. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley have the leading roles. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

"The Geezer of Berlin" Will Be Released Soon

THE Geezer of Berlin," which was produced by the Century Comedy Company, is a travesty on Jewel's successful dramatic production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." It will be released during the summer.

According to Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel, and Julius Stern, president of the Century Comedy Company, it was directly due to the former organization's success in handling "The Kaiser" that negotiations for the filming of a travesty upon that feature were entered into with the Century company. It was believed—and a questionnaire submitted to some of the leading exhibitors who had run the dramatic production tended to bear out this opinion—that virtually every theater owner who ran "The Kaiser" would want to show "The Geezer of Berlin."

The Jewel official is also authority for the statement that final arrangements were not completed until the travesty had been shown to the executive members of his company and had thoroughly satisfied them as to its merit. The film was projected for the Jewel Committee last week, with the result that immediate steps were taken to announce its addition to the list of films being handled by that organization.

"The Geezer of Berlin," which is in three reels, is said closely to parallel the action of "The Kaiser." Where, however, the latter production sounds the dramatic note throughout, the former is burlesque practically unrestrained.

According to Julius Stern, the newest Jewel release is the most ambitious undertaking ever attempted by the Century Company and without doubt one of the most expensive comedies produced.

W. S. S. Thriftette Trailers Issued for Exhibitors

W. S. S. THRIFTETTES, consisting of short animated cartoon trailers, will be attached to features released during the ensuing three months. These trailers will have an elaborate title design and each of the thirteen releases will be a different subject. A synopsis of the first four subjects is appended.

To encourage thrift and the buying of War Saving Stamps, the National War Savings Committee ask motion picture theaters to run these trailers with features as they appear and to announce their appearance from time to time on the screen, in the lobby, in programs and in the newspapers. Expecting their appearance, theater patrons will be better able to appreciate them.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through its committee consisting of Messrs. Adolph Zukor (chairman), Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, Walter W. Irwin and George K. Spoor, co-operating with the Treasury Department have arranged with the National distributors to attach these trailers to features as released. This plan of increasing War Saving Stamp sales will enable exhibitors to add to the valuable war service already rendered by their theater and at the same time furnish a change in the method of placing war work propaganda before their audiences.

SYNOPSES OF THRIFTETTES.

For Weeks Beginning June 30 and July 7.

No. 1—The Kaiser and the Bees.

The Kaiser with field glasses is viewing the battlefield from a hill on the "Western Front." From the beehive (U. S. Treasury) comes a swarm of W. S. S. bees, who attack the Kaiser and sting him into Berlin, where he surrenders.

No. 2—Our Two Greatest Enemies.

Opens with parallel scene of the "Kaiser and His Horde" and the "Miser and His Hoard." On the left is the Kaiser inspecting his troops in a trench and ordering them forward. On the right, the Miser counting his gold, sees the troops of the Kaiser approaching and becomes frightened. The scene that follows shows a line of buyers of War Savings Stamps in front of a post office window, with the Miser hurrying to get in the line and exchange his gold for War Saving Stamps.

For Weeks Beginning July 14 and 21.

No. 3—Sinking the Submarines.

A convoy of U. S. transports accompanied by aeroplanes are shown en route to France. Three U-Boats are discovered by the aeroplanes, which drop bombs and sink them. Out of the explosion appears "Buy War Savings Stamps."

No. 4—The Capture of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince.

Four dollars and eighteen cents fades into a War Savings Stamp through which bursts a shell. Dreadnaught Pete, who is in the shell is ordered by Uncle Sam to capture the Kaiser. The shell with Pete inside is camouflaged with War Savings Stamps, loaded into a cannon and fired to Germany, where it lands in front of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince, at German headquarters. The shell opens, Pete appears, shoots the Kaiser and the Crown Prince, lassos them and with the shell returns to Uncle Sam. The shell explodes into a War Saving Stamp, which in turn fades into $5.00.

script for the Jewel Comedy, while Arthur Hotaling directed the picture.

The cast is a notable one, the following players enacting the principal roles: Ray Hanford, as "The Kaiser, Little Willie A'Mighty"; Jack Stewart, as "The Clown Quince"; Marvin Loback as "Von Hindenbug"; Walter Bytell, as "Von Turpentine"; Richard Pennell as "Chancellor Von Bethmann-Bowlegs"; Earl Lynn, as the "Official Palace Cop"; Hughie Mack, as the "Buxom Village Baker"; Bartine Burkette, as his daughter; Monte Banks, as the Baker's Assistant, and Bert Roach, as the "German Germ."

"The Geezer of Berlin" is the second short subject to find a place on the list of the Jewel releases. The first was "The Sinking of the Lusitania."

Affiliated Extends Scope to Include all Exhibttors

THAT the cooperative booking plan of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation is to be representative was made plain last week, according to an official of the concern, when the executives of that organization arranged to extend the scope of the movement so that it could include every exhibitor desirous of associating with it.

"Originally it was intended to limit the benefits accruing from co-operative booking to the number of exhibitors necessary to complete a quota of 2,500 days on each picture for the country," said this official. "This quota was to be divided among twenty-five exhibitors booking corporations, each of which were to guarantee, by a trust fund, an average of one hundred days a picture.

"Exhibitors guaranteeing these trust funds were to have participated exclusively in the low rentals effected and the excess profits derived. Exhibitors not members of the booking associations allied with the Affiliated were to pay the regular rentals.

"The manner in which exhibitors all over the country have rallied to the Affiliated, however, has caused its sponsors to let down the bars to some extent. With the quota for the entire country now practically completed, after only two months' organization work, it has become patent that any restrictions as to the scope of the Affiliated plan would be unfair to the many exhibitors who have been dilatory in taking advantage of it, and would nullify the purpose of its organizers to make the co-operative movement representative of all exhibitors.

"Accordingly, the directors of the Affiliated at their recent meeting approved a form of participating certificates which will enable exhibitors who have not joined their territorial booking corporations to gain the same low rentals enjoyed by the original subscribers to the units' trust fund.

"Whether exhibitors holding these participating certificates will be extended a share in the excess profits of the booking corporation is a matter which has been left to each unit to decide as it sees fit.

"It is expected that this expansion of the Affiliated will give it a booking strength greatly in excess of the usual number of days for which the average picture is booked. This, naturally, will further lower prices and encourage increased quality of production, as the producer shares with the exhibitors in excess profits."

"Waifs" a Summer Feature.

"Waifs," which will be released by Pathe on the program of August 4, should prove an ideal summer attraction, for Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale have a very smart vehicle in this play. Hale has a very likable role in that he is a poor newspaper reporter who throws his protection over the runaway daughter of a wealthy man and quite without knowing her circumstances falls in love with her.

Later, when Jack and Mary are doing Red Cross work in the district, a realization of their happiness when they were children comes to them when they see the youngsters playing in the streets. When on a steamboat on the Mississippi he saves the life of Eva St. Clair, whose father purchases him as a reward for his bravery. St. Clair purposes to set him free, but the former's death, which occurs soon after Eva's demise, prevents this, and Uncle Tom is sold to Simon Legree, a brutal planter, who maltreats him so severely that he dies from his injuries just as the son of his former owner arrives to repurchase him and to give him a comfortable home for the rest of his days.

Feature Marguerite Clark as Little Eva and Frank Losee as Uncle Tom.

The Most Widely Read Book and Most Popular Play Now Screened in Sumptuous Revival.
Story of the First War for the Safety of Democracy.

Stunt Suggestions: There is just one way to get the money on this. Handle it precisely as you would a road Tom show. Get up as many threes and twenty-fours as you can post to advantage, and go into the nearby towns along the trolley. Use plenty of newspaper displays, but avoid the company mats, which are not convincing. See if you can dig up some old Tom cuts in the newspaper office or use straight type and large letters. If you can, swing a street parade with a brass band and real blood hounds, and if you can possibly get a negro quartette add this feature to your show and use them in the lobby for a ballyhoo, singing the old plantation songs and spirituals. The more noise you make the more money you get. And in all your work play up the fact that Miss Clark plays two roles. Capitalize her popularity for all it is worth.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Frances gave Alan a glove as a token, and in a fight on the way home he lost the glove, which was discovered by the major. Chadron bribed a man to kill Alan, but he kidnapped Nola instead. Alan rescued Nola, whereupon Frances refused to leave him. The major secured soldiers, and, with Chadron, attacked Alan. Frances explained that Alan was in the right. Speedy Entertainment With Refreshing Breezes from the Plains.

Stunt Suggestions: Try "Do you value your life above a woman's love?" as the attractor for your advertising work, but go on to explain that the story is one of vivid action. "$500 to kill a man" will also serve to gain attention. For the lobby paint a card, "There are two things that raise the price of beef—sheep herders and homesteaders. Alan MacDonald was a 'homesteader' in a cattle country, and $500 was offered for his head. See 'Winner Takes All' (date) and you'll see who won, and what he won. Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter

Patented Feb. 18, 1918
Exterior View of All Models

ARGUS-SHECK UNIVERSAL ADAPTER

when properly installed, will adapt any make of carbon-arc projection machine to use any type of Mazda Projector Lamp.

This adapter is a complete lamp house in itself and fits on the front of any make of carbon-arc machine, and any type of Mazda Projector Lamp may be properly focused in it for successfully projecting motion pictures in place of the carbon-arc, within the limitations of the different types of Mazda Projector Lamps, as recommended.

Briefly, the advantages of motion-picture projection with the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter and Mazda Projector Lamps, over carbon-arc lamps, are as follows:

Better illumination on the screen.
Eliminates color bands and "ghosts."
Eliminates arc "flicker"—no eye strain.
No poisonous carbon fumes and dust to injure health of operator, and wear working parts of projection machine.
People prefer Mazda Lamp Projection.
Less fire hazard—no open flame.
No noise or hum as with carbon-arcs.
No warming-up process needed at the end of each reel.
Simplicity of operation enables operator to give closest attention to projection on the screen.

LIGHTING PROGRESS.

IN recent years there has been rapid progress and many new ideas advanced that have increased lighting efficiency generally. The invention of new incandescent lamps and improvements in older styles have been responsible for much of this progress.

An example of this which you will appreciate is in the matter of store lighting. It is only a few years since carbon-arc lamps were used almost exclusively—now they are almost obsolete in that field and incandescent lamps have replaced them. The result is better lighting, at less cost and with less attention.

Similarly, Mazda Projector Lamps will replace carbon-arcs for motion picture projection in the great majority of theatres. And the results will be just as great as the savings and improvements in store lighting.

The adoption of Mazda Projection by the use of Argus Equipment greatly simplifies operating—all the operator's attention may be directed to the head of the machine and to improving projection.

the climax. Tell just enough in press work and advertising to pique curiosity and give a hint of the sensational developments. If you can get the dry-goods stores to display Oriental wares in connection with your stills you can get good displays. Decorate the lobby with lanterns and other properties to suggest, if you can, the tea shop. Put the ticket seller into a kimona, and have her dress her hair Chinese fashion. Burn incense in the lobby just before show time. Use plenty to let the smoke get out into the street.

"MORE TROUBLE"

Pathe Presents Frank Keenan in a Tragi-Farce of Two Men of the Same Name But Different Tastes.

Cast.

Lamuel Deering.....Frank Keenan
Harvey Deering.....John Gilbert
Mrs Deering.....Ida Lewis
Miriam Deering.....Roberta Wilson
Cecil Morrowton.....Joseph J. Dowling
Harold Morrowton.....Jack Rollins
Mrs Morton Wells.....Helen Dunbar
Jack Wells.....Al Ray
Barnabas Bandwig.....Clyde Benson
Mary.....Aggie Herring

Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

The Story: Lemuel Deering, a wealthy iron manufacturer, is surprised to learn from his son, Harvey, who has just graduated from college that he neither drinks nor smokes, and that he wishes to follow a serious life. The father, thereupon, takes him into the business, but is suddenly swamped with bills from liquor dealers, taxi companies, tobacconists, etc., charged to Deering, Jr. Harvey denies that he ever contracted them. When a note which comes from the bank and which Harvey says he did not sign is repudiated by Mr. Deering it results in driving the iron man to the point of bankruptcy. More trouble comes to the father when Harvey on a trumped up charge of murder lands in jail. Then there appears the son of a plutocrat and roommate of Harvey, who, after getting Harvey out of jail, confesses that it was he who signed Harvey's name to tabs and the note because his father refuses him spending money. Mr Deering, to save his business, gets the plutocrat to lend him money, and then he puts Harvey and his college chum to work at hard labor in the iron works.

Feature Frank Keenan as Lemuel Deering.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Baffling Plot in Comic Tragedy Tells Story of College Boy Too Good to Be True.
Wild Youth in College Atmosphere Ruins Father by His Morality.
Tragic Farce of College Life Carries Gripping Mystery Plot.
College Life Fount of Trouble for Over Indulgent Father.
Sustained Element of Mystery Baffling to Plot Detectives.
Criminal Conspiracy Casts Shadow Over Life of College Saint.

Stunt Suggestions: In your press work and advertising play up the story, but withholding the explanatory climax. Rouse curiosity by reciting the string of woes that came to the Deerings, but do not explain how it is all cleared up. For distributed matter use manila envelopes printed up with a big "More Trouble" and with a dodger or herald inside. Seal the envelopes, and the contents will be more apt to be read.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

"ONE DOLLAR BID"

Paralta Plays Presents J. Warren Kerrigan in a Story Dealing with a Unique Phase of the Kentucky Law and the Regeneration of a Man.

Cast:

Toby.....J. Warren Kerrigan
Virginia Dare.....Lois Wilson
Colonel Dare.....Joseph J. Dowling
Emily Dare.....Leatrice Joy
Ralph Patterson.....Arthur Allardt
Dink Wallerby.....Jess Herring
Nell Wallerby.....Elvira Weil
Bob Clark.....Clifford Alexander

Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

The Story: Toby, an eccentric village character addicted to drink, is arraigned under an ancient law and auctioned off into servitude for one year. Virginia Dare, out of pity, bids one dollar for him and takes him to her father's farm. Toby overcomes the curse of drink, and Virginia realizes she loves him. A messenger comes for him to go back to the moonshine country, for a child of one of his friends is sick and calling for him. On the way his companion kills a revenue officer with Toby's knife. Toby is tried for murder, but the guilty man confesses. Later a judge, who is visiting the Dares, meets Toby, and proclaims him as his son. Virginia creeps into his arms, and both find happiness in his regeneration.

Feature J. Warren Kerrigan as Toby and Lois Wilson as Virginia Dare.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Old Kentucky Law Furnishes Basis of Clever Photoplay Founded on Human Slavery.
Girl Buys for One Dollar the Husband of Her Choice.
First-class Husband Sometimes Sell for a Dollar in Kentucky.
Brave Girl Inspires Young Man's Complete Victory Over Selfishness.
John Barleycorn Routed in Defeat by Brave Girl's Inspiration.
Famous Best Seller Brought to Full Utility by the Screen.

Stunt Suggestions: Attach dollar bills to window cards with a picture of the star and ask if the reader will bid more than one dollar for Kerrigan's services for a year, adding that One Dollar Bid shows him in one of the most unique stories in which he has ever been seen. Work the same idea for the lobby with "For sale, J. Warren Kerrigan. Come in and bid for his services for one year." Draw a contrast between the money offered for his services in the play and his probable annual salary. A paraphrase on an auction bill would make good distribution matter.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three-column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

But Paul wants Ruth and no one else, and they become engaged, but the mother's opposition is still further strengthened by the fact that Clarissa, Ruth's sister, outshines her own little daughter. Clarissa gets the better of innumerable affairs, but when she saves the Harding child from death even the mother relents and Paul and Ruth are married.

Feature Madge Evans as Clarissa Leigh and John Hines as Paul Harding.

Stunt Suggestions: If you have the film for a holiday, duplicate the offer of a doll for the most original costume and judge the entrants in front of the theater just before the matinee or first evening show. This is about the only stunt you can work with this story. Offer the star as the drawing card in your newspaper work and lay stress upon the charm of the simple story, but do not brag too much about it.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"THE DECIDING KISS"

Bluebird Presents a Charming Film Version of the Novel of the Same Title by Ethel M. Kelly.

Cast.

Eleanor Hamlin.....Edith Roberts
Beulah Page.....Winifred Greenwood
Jimmy Sears.....Hal Cooley
Peter Bolling.....Thornton Church

Directed by Ted Browning.

The Story: Beulah Page, a wealthy New York woman, to break the monotony of her existence, takes Eleanor Hamlin, an orphan, living with her grandparents in the sordid surroundings of a little Cape Cod village, into her home. But Beulah soon tires of her little charge, and sends her to a finishing school, from which she emerges a few years later a radiant and cultured young woman. Eleanor captivates Peter Bolling, whom Beulah has decided to capture herself. Beulah, vengeful, informs Eleanor that Peter and she are as good as engaged, so Eleanor goes back to her grandparents. Peter follows, but, according to instructions from their grandchild, the old folks tell him that Eleanor has not come home. Returning to New York, Peter hears that his beloved has been tricked, but on Christmas day, when Eleanor arrives, the matter is straightened out, and a happy reconciliation between the two young people is effected.

Feature Edith Roberts as Eleanor Hamlin and Hal Cooley as Jimmy Sears.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Romance of a Forlorn Orphan Who Found Love and Happiness in a Great City.
How a Cape Cod Orphan Made New York Folk Take Notice.
Good Old New England Stock Wins a Sturdy Battle Against Adversity.
Love Comes to a Little Foundling Under Strange Circumstances.
Newest Bluebird Photoplay Tells Fascinating Story of Requited Love.
Edith Roberts, Daintiest of Screen Queens, in Prettiest of Photoplays.

Stunt Suggestions: The best selling angle of this story is the fact that the little orphan from Cape Cod not only cuts out her selfishly posing benefactor in her original guise, but when sent to finishing school for seclusion emerges more radiant than ever and again turns the tables on her pseudo benefactress. Play up this angle in newspapers and other publicity. Use such lines as "This ugly duckling was not ugly at all." Try and get the booksellers to display the novel if they have it in stock. Little can be done in the way of special stunts.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

The Story: Carey Wethersbee, who lives in seclusion with her spinster aunt in an old southern mansion, becomes imbued with a desire to see the world upon the death of her relative. Arriving in a small town at night she seeks shelter in the home of Hiram A. Ward, a wealthy mill-owner. The capitalist permits her to stay, and Carey does not realize that she is defying convention in remaining at the house of Ward, who is a bachelor. Visiting the mills she is shocked at the conditions and reproaches Ward for his neglect of his employes. She sells Ward an old coin which he had long desired for his collection and distributes the money thus realized among the mill-workers, thinking that she may thereby relieve their plight somewhat. But, instead, her generosity incites a strike, and Ward's mills are wrecked. Ward accuses a certain man, but Carey learns upon investigation that he is innocent, and appeals to the mill-

Later, Dyckman's wife becomes infatuated with a British aviator, and securing a divorce from her husband, marries him. Charity is involved in the divorce proceeding, but her reputation is saved by Jim. The United States enters the war. Jim becomes a captain and Charity a nurse, and at a base hospital in France they are married. Stunt Suggestions: Use "We can't have everything but——" in large letters, following up with the announcement that you have got the latest production of Cecil De Mille's. Also try "Are you going to get married? divorced?" Using a 24-point type for the line save that "married" and "divorced" are set in 12-point, one above the other. Then go on to tell that this play is a study of marriage and divorce and should be studied by bachelor and Benedict alike. Lay stress upon the fact that this is one of the pictures so carefully done that the director instead of the numerous stars is featured above the players. Also play up the fact that it throws a light on a certain side of the motion picture business.

"HER MOMENT"

The General Film Company Presents Anna Luther in a Love Story That Starts in the Balkans, Moves to Arizona and Winds Up in New York.

Cast:

Katinka.....Anna Luther
Jan.....William Garwood

Directed by Frank Beal.

The Story: Jan leaves his childhood sweetheart, Katinka, and emigrates to America, where he expects to become a civil engineer. Soon after Jan's departure Katinka falls into the clutches of Dravich, a despicable character, who promises to let her go home at the end of two years, but a volcanic eruption occurs and obliterates the little village. Dravich takes her to America, and in Lone Gulch, Arizona, she sees Jan, but feeling that she is not fit for him, refrains from revealing herself. Later Dravich is killed by Boris, a violinist whom Katinka had met in Europe. In New York, where Katinka has gone, she meets and is reconciled to her lover after some difficulty.

Mystery Plot Lends Tenseness to Outcome of Thrilling Story.

Stunt Suggestions: This story will best be advertised through the newspapers. Dwell on the changing scenes and tell that it reveals life in that much-tortured section of Europe. Not much can be done in the way of stunts, but there are plenty of talking points for the newspapers and program work.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six sheets. One style twenty-four sheet. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts. Press sheets.

In the Battle for Business You Must Have Good Fighters

In your battle for business the most important engagement is in the projection room.
To win, you must have the right guns at the port-holes, in order that your ammunition may hit the mark.

"LET THE Simplex TWINS FIGHT YOUR BATTLES"

Everybody drags in the war nowadays.
For once, we've done it, too.
But we believe we have shot home a point you will appreciate.

Another gain: It also costs less to keep the Simplex Twins in fighting trim.

4500 What?—4500 Monthly Readers —and Growing Ever

Such is the circulation achievement as it stands on our books this July 1, 1918. For three years our total of readers has mounted upward, ever upward, and just now new plans are being worked out which will literally add new thousands to the list.

At times last year we printed a total monthly run of over 7,000 copies (including those sent gratis for missionary purposes) and on one occasion more than 8,000.

Unless all signs fail to materialize these circulation records will be surpassed in 1918

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Projection Lenses

have long been considered standard equipment by the leading motion picture machine manufacturers. The product of America's greatest lens specialists, who have been producing high grade lenses of one type or another for 65 years, they are unexcelled in the clear-cut, evenly illuminated pictures they produce on the screen.

Because of the demand made upon our resources for some of the Government's most important military needs, we are unable to make projection lens deliveries for the present. While proud to be of such service in this world crisis, we shall expect to serve our other patrons even more efficiently than before, when the world is again at peace.

SILVERTIP

THE STANDARD DIRECT CURRENT MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The Silvertip carbon used with a Columbia upper gives a light source that is hard to beat. The Silvertip is a quality product that has received the stamp of approval of the best operators in the country.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives:

1. Absolutely steady screen illumination free from flickering shadows. The small diameter of the Silvertip causes it to burn with a sharp point which keeps the arc steady, and also eliminates the shadows on the screen.

2. A powerful, flexible light source. The arc can be varied at the will of the operator, according to the density of the film, within a reasonable limit of the rated amperage of the combination used.

NOTE: Silvertips are for direct current only.

John Barrymore's first new Paramount Picture is going to be funnier than anything he ever did before. It is "On the Quiet" (played on the stage by William Collier), a riotous side-splitter that will start off John Barrymore's new series with a whoop and a roar. Imitations fall flat

KNOWING the overwhelming financial success of the original JEWEL Production, "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," producers are rushing madly to the front with all sorts of junk imitations of "The KAISER" in their wild scramble to steal some of the money and glory of the original picture. Some of these producers are publishing criticisms (the direct result of paid advertising) while carefully hiding the ridicule of recognized authorities, trade press and newspapers. It's an attempt to "put over" rank imitations by means of frenzied advertising mis-statement. JEWEL warns all Exhibitors to beware of these spurious imitations. JEWEL advises all Exhibitors to see "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," and make their own comparisons. The result will instantly expose the imitator.

"The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," is still cleaning up for Exhibitors. It has played as high as four return dates and has each time packed them in. Beware of imitators. Take our tip—

First U. S. Official War Feature

EVERY MAN, woman and child in the country wants to see pictures that show what Uncle Sam is doing to help win the war. "Pershing's Crusaders" tells the story fully of the first months of activity, and finally shows the welcome of our own boys to the shores of France, with General Pershing at their head.

Fathers and mothers, sweethearts and wives, big sisters and little brothers want to know what their boy is doing, how he is being cared for, and how their money is being spent.

Show "Pershing's Crusaders" at your theatre and so answer these questions—answer them with pictures that tell the truth—that give accurate information.

Many exhibitors have already booked "Pershing's Crusaders" for an early showing. Numbers of requests are coming in daily. Is yours among them? If not, get behind the Government and announce to your patrons they will have the privilege of seeing this great patriotic film in your theatre.

ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW

"And so as we two old people sat in the darkened theatre, suddenly there flashed upon the screen pictures of muddy men marching, clad in the uniform that marked them as British 'Tommies,' fresh from the shock of battle and scenes of carnage, yet smiling as only brave men can smile; then came more pictures, this time of the men who said and made good their words 'they shall not pass', the heroic French who for four years have borne a terrible burden and borne it well; then more pictures of other great fighting men, the Italians, proving their mettle on the Piave; and then, with the audience rising and cheering, down a dusty road in a never ending line, our own boys with the sun of France glittering on their helmets, on their way to the trenches to take up Civilization's burden. Our eyes were wet, for among them, probably, was our own boy who is 'Over There'! We have the Allied Governments and Pathé to thank for the thrills we got from the 'Allies' Official War Review.'"

3. Suggestive and misleading titles.
4. Fake advertising.
5. Extreme sex pictures, camouflaged with alleged scientific and hygienic excuses.

A LATE picture paved the way to its filth with a sub-title reading, "To the Pure Mind All Things Are Pure."

Then followed a full description of how to sniff cocaine from the thumb-nail. Possibly the "coke was pure.

Why hang out signs in cities where we do not have censorship reading "Children under fourteen years not admitted today?" If, by these "exhibitors" own admissions, the productions are unfit for children—then they are unfit for adults.

We have been proclaiming to the skies that this industry has become a potent factor in the educational world, and that we are teachers. This is generally true—but—there is room for improvement. If we are moulding character for this and the next generation, are we doing a truly wholesome work in depicting the underworld, hypodermic needles, gauze-draped vampires, assaults of women and other depths of depravity?

Producers Please Note:

Prohibition is here. Professional reformers will seek new fields. The exhibitor is going to have something to say about the making of the productions to be shown on his screen. Keep these few thoughts in mind when you are preparing a production for the Affiliated Distributors Corporation and the Exhibitor Booking Corporations affiliated with it.

We have taken a decided stand for clean pictures because it is the surest way to wipe out censorship.

Nothing but clean pictures for the next twelve months would put all censor boards out of business, because the picture public will not stand for idiotic and senseless rules and regulations which now in most instances operate as a persecution of one of America's most useful industries.

The "Works" of the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan

1—It is a going, profitable business.

2—Fifteen Paralta plays have been released to date.

3—Twenty-eight offices actively engaged in selling Hodkinson Service.

4—Sales totalling over One and one half Million Dollars ($1,500,000).

5—Douglas Natural Color Pictures being released in first run houses.

6—Plaza Pictures ready for the market.

7—Additional product from well-known producers coming in the Fall.

8—Big exhibitors of Roth and Kehrlein type tied in.

9—Smaller exhibitors joining in all parts of the country.

These are the facts—the "works" that assure you that the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan has something besides a "face."

Remember—

The "face" may look all right but it is the "works" that count.

When considering the so-called cooperative plans now in the market, disregard the face and look behind for the works. Are they "going" businesses or are they only on paper? Are the big exhibitors allied with them?

Have they product—leadership—prestige or profits?

Have they any of these qualifications that stamp the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan as practical—efficient and sincere?

In analyzing the established organizations in the field, ask yourself whether they are geared to protect and help the exhibitors to bigger and better business, or whether they are built to dispose of the producer's product at a profit to him regardless of whether the exhibitor makes money or not.

Results count and you cannot expect results without "works."

Kill Obnoxious Law by Enforcement

When Lexington's Churchmen Invoke Blue Laws to Close Sunday Theaters, City's Mayor Favors Shutting Down Everything

THE fight at Lexington, Ky., relative to closing the moving picture theaters on Sunday is taking on a most serious aspect, and it is beginning to look as though the theaters may be forced to close on the Sabbath. The trouble started on July 1, when members of the Ministerial Union, backer by the Layman's Committee and other church workers, started a movement to close the Sunday theaters, on the grounds that they were interfering with church services, and were in violation of the state law, namely, the old blue laws which were upheld by the Court of Appeals last winter in the case of the Capital Theater, at Frankfort. Under this law it is illegal to operate theaters on Sunday.

Since July 1 the churchmen have been very busy. A delegation was sent to Mayor Rogers, and made a strong plea for the officials to enforce the state law without the necessity of the churchmen entering the courts, and having warrants issued. Mayor Rogers frankly told the committee that he was opposed to closing the Sunday theaters, and that he believed public sentiment backed him in this stand. The other commissioners gave no public expression and took no action on the matter. Chairman Combs then stated that the matter would be taken into the courts.

The exhibitors immediately started issuing coupons to be used in a ballot to be taken throughout the city in an effort to learn just how the majority felt on the subject, and calmly stated that they would see the thing to a finish.

A committee from the Layman's League was pressed into service to attend the shows at every picture theater in the city on Sunday, July 6. Ministers fired broadside protests against pictures on Sunday from every pulpit in the city. On Monday a mass meeting was held at the Y. M. C. A. hall, and at this meeting the collected evidence was submitted and arrangements made to push the fight. It was reported that the committee had sufficient evidence to handle the prosecution. The city attorneys and commonwealth's attorney have expressed a willingness to cooperate with the churchmen, and the entire membership of all of the churches reporting is behind the movement.

On July 9, the churchmen went before Magistrate Orville C. Boone, and swore to warrants against the management of the Ben Ali Theater Company, the Phoenix Amusement Company, and J. H. Stamper, operating the Orpheum, charging that these concerns had violated the state laws in running their houses on Sunday. It was stated at the same time that warrants would probably be sworn to as against the employees and machine operators of the houses.

This action was followed by a counter-blow on the part of Mayor Rogers, who caused somewhat of a stir when he directed Corporation Counsel Denny to draft an opinion as to the legality of other Sunday businesses. It was intimated by Mayor Rogers that if the law was enforced regarding picture theaters, which are alleged to interfere with the church, that the law will be enforced to close up every classification of business to a point where the drug stores will be open to sell drugs only, and newspapers, confections, cigars, shines, etc., will be unobtainable on Sunday. In other words, the old blue laws are to be enforced to a point where the citizens will become so bored that they will go before the next legislature and endeavor to have the law changed. An effort along this line was made during the last session of the legislature, but was defeated.

Lieut. W. B. Marxsen, adjutant, at Camp Buell, as a representative of the officers and men at that camp, both those there at the present time and those to be trained there in the future, stated to the press that he hoped the Churchmen would consider the matter carefully before steps were taken to close the amusements.

The city is fairly well divided on the subject, but from all indications and returns in the balloting indications are that the majority are in favor of the Sunday shows. The movement of the Mayor to either let the shows run or close everything also will have considerable influence.

The worst feature of the controversy is that in event Lexington closes on Sunday many other towns in the state will follow the lead of Lexington, which is one of the largest and best cities of the commonwealth.

Screen "Coming Back" in Mexico

Many Picture Theaters Being Constructed on Border—General Castillo of Mexico City Tells of Improving Conditions.

WITH Mexico finally eliminated from the first page of the metropolitan dailies as the home of banditry, revolutions, murder and sudden death the attention of the film men and exhibitors of the Southwest has been turned to the land of the Aztecs as an almost virgin field for unlimited business. Mexican exhibitors are coming more and more frequently to Texas and a good trans-border trade is being rapidly built up with the advent of stable conditions under Carranza and the peace which reigns from Matamoras to Juarez along the Rio Grande border line.

Texas motion picture exhibitors are putting up theaters on the American side of the border and they are patronized not only by the United States troops in isolated stations but by Mexicans from the other side of the line as well.

All sorts of inquiries are being made regarding the Mexican situation, and pioneers are already in the field establishing Mexican motion picture theaters. William Epstein and Walter McCombs have sold out their interests in San Antonia and are planning to cross the river after business in a foreign field. Others are working along similar lines.

Mexican film men and exhibitors are now becoming common visitors along the film rows of Dallas and San Antonio. One typical Mexican movie pioneer was in Dallas to visit J. B. Dugger of the Vitagraph a few days ago.

He was General R. J. Castillo of the Imperial Cinema Company of Mexico City, for two years an exile from his native land, but now owner of half a dozen playhouses in the Mexican capital and adjoining towns and villages. General Castillo, who owns vast tracts of ranch land in Northern Mexico, is a millionaire who believes there is a great future in his country for the screen. On his visit here he gave away twenty pesos gold pieces of the new Carranza 1918 currency as souvenirs to his friends in local film branches.

"Business conditions in Mexico are rapidly adjusting themselves with the advent of peace," General Castillo says. "In six months they will be better even than they were five or six years ago. There is a big field in the motion picture business developing in Mexico, since for years Mexicans have seen practically no picture of a high class owing to the paralysis of the railways and express companies due to revolutionary conditions. Now films are coming in and the amusement is more popular than ever.

"We charge from $3 to 75 cents for admission to our motion picture houses. Until some months ago patrons would literally stack the box offices with Mexican paper money which piled up like bales of hay. Carranza, however, has adjusted the currency situation and the new gold and silver coinage has taken the place of paper money. We accept only gold and silver now for theater tickets. On a given date all the Mexican paper was called in. It was worth 20 cents on the dollar and patriotic Mexicans were called upon to burn or destroy all they could of it rather than force the government to cash it in. Rich people burned all their paper money. Poor people burned only a portion of it. Millions were saved the government by this campaign. I burned about a bushel basket of paper, as did many others. This did much to put business on a firm basis on our side of the border.

Castillo won his title of "general" while opposing Huerta's régime. His ranch property and his Mexico city property were confiscated and his picture shows were closed up.

"I quit the picture show business and went into the revolution business with about 3,000 men," continued Castillo. "I elected myself a general because I had to pay off the troops. A cameraman could have made some great pictures of my army."

General Castillo's troops got in action, all right. They were marching in Mexico City during the fighting under General Reyes when some one turned a machine gun on them. About 100 were killed or wounded and the general got a machine gun bullet through his leg.

However, everything ended happily. Carranza gave back the Chihuahua ranch lands and the Mexico city motion picture houses and the general is on the job boosting Mexico as a motion picture field.

Under present conditions Castillo says all pictures shown in Mexico are strictly censored by the government. Not so much for the sake of safeguarding the morals of the Mexican public, but to prevent the display of any picture which might hurt the feelings of any foreign nation. There are hundreds of Americans and English in Mexico city who would rejoice to see war films showing Germany in its true light, but all films bearing on the war are taboo. The general says that Carranza is hewing to the line in the determination to keep Mexico neutral and out of the war. He says that every well informed Mexican favors the Allies as a matter of course, despite scientific German propaganda.

Kansas City Exchanges Will Aid Buyers

Will Do What They Can to Protect Prospective Theater Purchasers from Being Swindled.

AN article appeared in the Kansas City Times of July 5 referring to the fact that moving picture houses had in a number of instances in this city entered the old game of "salting" the theater prior to selling it. This is an old story for restaurants and cigar stands and is carried on in the same old way by some moving picture exhibitors. The proprietor packs his house for several weeks by means of passes and then it changes hands. The patrons seem to lose interest in photoplays, prefer the theater several blocks away or choose to remain at home. It is not only the small town man who is impressed with the great crowds and wonderful profits in the "movie" game, but the city man that does not know the business who may be "sold" as well, according to one of the exchange men. Exhibitors and would-be exhibitors are not protected from the practice by any real organization of the Kansas City exchanges, but any prospective picture show buyer who takes the trouble to investigate can find out if he is being passed a "lemon." Several of the exchange men in speaking of the evil remarked that it was an easy matter to spot any exhibitor or broker who made a practice of playing the game. The exchanges are in a position to know about what most houses are doing and will furnish the facts to any one who contemplates investing in a moving picture theater and comes to them for information.

Government's Picture Activities Described

Secretary of War Baker Makes Report to Congress, Explaining How Motion Pictures of the War Are Taken and What Is Done With Them.

IN connection with the recent investigation of George Creel's work as chairman of the Committee on Public Information in collecting and distributing motion pictures of the activities of the United States in preparing for and prosecuting the war, Congressman Treadway asked for a report on the Government's film operations. In reply to this request Secretary Baker reported that each corps and division headquarters is provided with a Signal Corps photographic unit, consisting of one officer and three men, who do special work ordered by the commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Force. All such negative that is sent to this country goes to the War Plans Division of the General Staff for the purpose of historical record and propaganda and such part thereof as is suitable is turned over to the Committee on Public Information for general distribution.

Mr. Baker explained the manner of distribution to the public as follows: In the case of feature films, such as "Pershing's Crusaders," the material collected was formed into a seven-reel picture and released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on a percentage basis, 70 per cent. going to the Committee on Public Information. The "Inter-Allied War Review" is composed of material remaining after the feature film is made up, subject to an agreement with the representatives of Great Britain, France and Italy. This subject consists of 2,000 feet. This was let by competitive bidding, in which Pathe, Universal, Mutual and Gaumont participated. Pathe made the highest bid and got the contract. Eighty per cent. of the proceeds goes to the committee.

After the feature film and the Inter-Allied War Review have been formed there is taken from the remaining available film such as is suitable for distribution, which is sold to the news weeklies at $1 a foot.

Mr. Baker said that permits had been given by General Pershing to individual civilians both here and abroad—how many and to whom he did not know—but that these negatives, either still or motion pictures, came under the control of the committee or the General Staff.

BOSTON EXCHANGES HIT BY OPERATORS' FIAT.

The operators' union of Boston has issued an order forbidding any exchange using non-union operators. If they do use a non-union operator their film is put on a blacklist and no union operator will touch the film or run it off again.

The order hits many of the exchanges in Boston, as very often they have little work for an operator to do and to employ a union operator by the week costs $33. Formerly they paid operators from twenty to twenty-five dollars a week, and when the operator was not showing pictures he was assisting the shipper or was engaged in some useful work about the exchange. If the exchange wants to hire the operator by the day it will cost 50 cents a reel, and the operator will only work a six hour day.

JULIAN LA MOTHE AT CAMP DIX.

For the last five months Julian La Mothe, the scenario writer and author of Bessie Barriscale's last Paralta picture, "Patriotism," has been at Camp Dix, New Jersey. He is a sergeant of the first class and a member of Evacuation Hospital, Number 10. Sergeant La Mothe was born in New Orleans and started writing for the screen immediately after leaving college. During that time he lived in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, and had never been north until he came on to enlist in the Medical Corps. He expects to leave for the other side very soon. His last scenario work was a picture for Bessie Barriscale.

SHERMAN AND FARNUM GOING TO BOSTON.

Harry A. Sherman and Dustin Farnum are en route from Los Angeles to Boston to attend the Motion Picture Exhibitors' convention. Sherman will most likely show his new production, "The Lights of the Western Stars," while in Boston. E. J. O'Donnell advises that the showing will take place in the ballroom of the Touraine Hotel, Boston.

Universal Branch Managers Meet in Chicago

By James S. McQuade

Convention at Hotel Sherman Bristles with Topics of General Interest to the Trade--Demand Reported for Good Two-Reelers

A CONVENTION of branch managers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, July 8, 9 and 10. It was practically a meeting of all the branch managers of the organization, as the far West and Canada were represented by telegrams and correspondence which showed the prevailing conditions in those territories.

Among the officials present were Carl Laemmle, president, and Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer, of Universal; Harry Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, and Julius Stern, president of the Century and L-KO Comedy companies.

Sunday's Proceedings.

The convention was opened Sunday afternoon by Mr. Laemmle, who extended a welcome to the exchange managers present, and in a short speech outlined the general plan for the year beginning September 1. He was succeeded by Joe Brandt, who practically had charge of the convention while it lasted.

One of the chief objects of the convention was to ascertain from the branch managers whether the program feature, of one feature a week, or the open booking plan of special attractions and features, should be adopted and put in effect September 1. After thorough discussion it was found that the consensus of opinion among exhibitors throughout this country and Canada was in favor of the open-booking plan.

The chief reason given by exhibitors for the adoption of this plan is that in contracting for a series of pictures for the year they are forced to lose considerable money, from the fact that when other big pictures are booked by them they are obliged by their contract to pay for pictures which are on the shelf.

Another important point was also brought up Sunday afternoon and thoroughly discussed. This had to do with the renting of advertising accessories, such as posters and lobby displays. A thorough investigation made by Universal branch managers revealed that it was advisable to discontinue this renting system. The reports submitted by the branch managers showed very conclusively that exhibitors to-day are more careful about the advertising displays in front of their houses than ever before, and that fresh, clean lithos and photos, etc., are a positive necessity in order to catch the eyes and excite the interest of the public. In other words it is becoming a watchword that "a clean, attractive front indicates a clean and attractive show inside."

Monday's Proceedings.

On Monday the important subject of the abuse of films, while being handled by incompetent operators, was thoroughly discussed. The evidence submitted by branch managers showed a heavy loss from this source alone, particularly from the burning of films while being presented. In most of the cases where films have been burned, the cause has been traced to inexperienced operators, who have taken the places of men drafted for the Army. Wherever a fire has occurred the exhibitor has been seriously injured by a falling off in attendance, as patrons fear for their children and themselves.

It was strongly recommended during the discussion of this subject that the owners and managers of theaters should see to it that only experienced and competent operators be employed, and that makeshifts, such as house electricians, ushers and ticket takers, should be kept strictly in their proper places.

Women in many cases are now working alongside with men operators who are of draft age, so that they may be able to take up this important work when the men are called. It was urgently recommended at this point that the plan just outlined should be adopted by exhibitors at once, instead of waiting until their operators are called to camp, as the cost involved is the cheapest and safest kind of insurance.

Tuesday's Proceedings.

During Tuesday's business the abuse of misleading the public by means of banners bearing false information concerning the films shown by certain exhibitors at their theaters was taken up. It was pointed out that some unscrupulous exhibitors, with small houses, had even gone so far as to use the titles of features shown at larger houses by their competitors. Experience showed that such practices hurt both the offenders and the exhibitors who were wronged, as moving picture patrons grow distrustful of all exhibitors in their city or neighborhood.

It was given out that several exhibitors have been, and are now being, prosecuted for such practices. One of the cases cited occurred in Boston recently, when an exhibitor made an attempt to steal the patronage of a theater which was showing "Pershing's Crusaders." In this especial case the government took care of the offender.

Two-Reel Subjects in Big Demand.

A vote was taken of the branch managers present Tuesday afternoon to decide if two-reel subjects were now in demand. The officials present were surprised to learn that good two-reel subjects, in many cases, were bringing as large a rental as some of the standard features.

Reissues Also Discussed.

Reissues of certain films were next discussed, and it was ascertained that exhibitors do not seem to object to the reissue of big successes, providing no attempt is made to disguise the fact that it is a reissue. Thereupon Carl Laemmle gave orders that Lois Weber's big success "Scandal," in five reels, should be reissued as an experiment.

Serials and Comedies Discussed.

It was found by a comparison of the experiences of the branch managers present, that serials are just as popular as ever; but that the adult patronage, which formerly was in the ascendant, is now exceeded by the juveniles. On hearing this Mr. Laemmle directed that the Universal studios be notified to prepare all future scenarios for serials so that they shall be devoid of all crime situations and the sex lure.

The comedy situation was next discussed, and it was concluded that there was a dearth of comedies of a refined type, for which there is at present quite a demand. It was advised, therefore, that Universal henceforth should tone down the slapstick type of comedy and aim at producing a more refined product of this kind.

Evasive Contracting Exhibitors Scored.

The abuse practiced by certain exhibitors when contracting for features with an exchange, without any real intention of ever showing them, was duly considered and strongly condemned by the convention. In such cases it was shown that certain exhibitors make a practice of seemingly booking a feature, by paying a small deposit and not fixing any definite showing date. By this means the bona fide opposition house has been deprived of the chance of booking the feature in question, this entailing the loss of actual money by the exchange and also the loss of actual money by the legitimate exhibitor who would have booked it and made a handsome profit by its presentation.

The following branch managers and assistants were present at the convention: I. L. Leserman, Morris Hellman, S. J. Goldman, Julius Bernheim, I. Gettleson and Irving Mack, Chicago; C. C. Smith and Joe Roderick, Milwaukee; Joe Schnitzer, R. W. Abbot and D. Adams, Indianapolis; Sam Saxe, Cincinnati; E. J. Smith, Cleveland; W. D. Ward, Detroit; R. K. Evans and L. H. Cohn, Minneapolis; Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis; S. Benjamin, Oklahoma City; M. J. Frisch, Des Moines; Mr. Feld, Kansas City; "Curley" Calvert, Omaha; Edward Armstrong, Denver, and John McAlear, Pittsburgh.

FRANK LAWRENCE MARRIES.

Frank Lawrence and Miss Viola Mallory were married June 15 at Los Angeles, California. Mr. Lawrence was for many years in the negative department of the Vitagraph Company. He was considered the most expert editor of motion pictures in the industry. Before he left the Vitagraph he was appointed superintendent of the negative and photographic departments. Miss Mallory was employed in the negative department at the time, and went to California with several other employes when Mr. Lawrence took charge of the negative and trimming department of the Universal at Universal City.

Crowder Classifies Industry as Essential

Text of the Order Issued by Provost Marshal General Fixing Status of Motion Picture Men.

MOTION picture artists are classed as "legitimate theatrical performers" in an order issued on July 5 by Provost Marshal Crowder, according to an announcement received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The draft boards have been directed to consider motion picture artists, musicians and all skilled persons employed in the creation and presentation of moving picture subjects as engaged in productive employment.

The official order as issued from Washington is as follows:

Washington, July 5, 1918.

Draft executives in all States: B-1885.

Communicate to all local and district boards at once:

Subdivision C, Section 121-K, Selective Service Regulation, is hereby amended as follows:

Persons including ushers and other attendants engaged and occupied in and in connection with games, sports and amusements, except owners and managers, actual performers, including musicians legitimate concerts, operas, motion picture or theatrical performers and the skilled persons who are necessary to such productions, performances or presentations.

CROWDER.

This amended order settles the question of the status of the moving picture industry under the so-called "work or fight" order which became effective July 1. The expression "skilled persons" is interpreted to include photographers, operators, mechanics and others necessary to productions and they will hold their present classifications under the draft law.

Dolliver and Ochs Issue Statement.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: A conference was recently held between representatives of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and representatives of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators, the subject of the meeting being the supposed shortage of moving picture machine operators.

Inclosed you will find a letter which was submitted to the conferrees and approved by them with instructions to forward copies to all theatrical and moving picture journals.

Trusting that you will give this matter the publicity which we feel it merits, we are. Very truly yours.

L. G. DOLLIVER,
Assistant President International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada.

LEE OCHS,
President Moving Picture Exhibitors League of America

[Inclosure.]

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: For some weeks prior to July 1, 1918, the motion picture operators affiliated with this organization were uneasy owing to the conflicting rumors circulated in reference to the status of operators as to whether they were in what the Provost Marshal General's office would consider an essential occupation. Numerous local draft boards had notified individual operators that they were engaged in a non-productive industry and would have to seek other employment before July 1 or be subject to having their draft classification revised and being inducted into immediate military service. These rulings had the effect of causing considerable consternation not only to the operators, but also to the exhibitors, and in several cases the employees raised considerable sums of money for the purpose of sending collectors to Washington and there over the draft age.

We assume that it is the necessity of relieving the exhibitors who were actuated by the desire to be classified as a patriotic number of operators to be all producers, but in many cases we have positive knowledge that these [illegible] have been [illegible] and [illegible] have proven to these assertions. Race for World's Trophy On

Director Hart of the Division of Films Says Bronze Medal to be Awarded to Exchange Recording Largest Proportionate Booking for "Pershing's Crusaders" Is Worthy Efforts of any Manager

GETTING off to a flying start the race for the beautiful bronze trophy to be presented by the Moving Picture World to the exchange booking the largest percentage of houses in its territory with "Pershing's Crusaders" is already under way. Scarcely had the issue containing the announcement reached the hands of the exchange managers before they got after their salesmen, and by September 1, when the contest closes, the splendid war film—first offering of the United States Government to its patriotic citizens—will probably be the most widely distributed motion picture in the entire list.

One of the first letters received in regard to the contest comes from Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, who writes:

"Editor Moving Picture World:

"Dear Sir: In the current issue of The Moving Picture World we have just read with deep interest the announcement of the splendid co-operation your publication is giving in helping to promote 'Pershing's Crusaders.' The bronze medal you propose giving to the successful contestant is appropriately designed, and is well worthy the efforts of any exchange manager. I feel that your efforts will do much to arouse the theater managers of the country to greater activity, and I desire to express the thanks and sincere appreciation of the Division of Films for your patriotic work.

"CHARLES S. HART, Director."

Mr. Hart is keenly interested in the success of "Pershing's Crusaders," for he feels that through the medium of film the country can best be kept fully informed as to the efforts of the Government in a situation unique in the history of the world. This film is but the forerunner of other releases dealing with the army of the United States and the efforts in the field and at home, and the Division of Films is closely watching the results.

Entirely apart from the patriotic angles of the release the film has been a money-maker since its initial showings at the Lyric theater in New York, and the exhibitor who books this subject finds that patriotism is its own reward, but to assure the fullest possible bookings this publication has offered a bronze trophy, to be awarded the distributing agency making the largest percentage of bookings within its territory. This applies to all First National exchanges handling the film and to those public societies in the states which previously had arranged with the Division of Films to market its output.

The basis upon which this award will be made is the proportion of bookings to the possible openings for the film, placing all contestants upon a plane of absolute equality. There is no advantage to be gained through holding large territory. All distributors have an equal chance, and the award may be made to one of the smaller exchanges, provided it shows the most hustle. In the event of two or more exchanges reaching a booking percentage exactly equal the World will, in that event, present to each contestant thus coming into a tie an exact duplicate of the trophy and specified as first prize.

And the trophy is in itself worthy the effort, entirely apart from the sentimental considerations. It is a magnificent bronze relief, with a spread of three feet between the tips of the eagle's wings. With the flag, which forms a part of the trophy, the width is slightly more than six feet. As an office decoration it is superb, but apart from the intrinsic value it will stand for patriotic endeavor and selling ability, for the exchange that places this artistic bronze upon its walls will be proclaimed the most enterprising of a body of hustling film salesmen.

In offering this trophy the Moving Picture World is actuated by two motives. It naturally wishes to serve the cause of loyalty and to promote the widest distribution of this film, which is an eloquent and visual reply to the Hun-inspired critics. But entirely apart from this it feels that in putting out this subject the Government is subjecting the great motion picture body to the test. Upon the success of this picture (and success is to be judged by the number of public showings) depends the issuance of other and perhaps even more important releases. The fighting fronts are dotted with motion picture cameras in the hands of skilled photographers, and much of their product is being released to the news weeklies, but the strongest related scenes, made primarily for preservation in the Government records, will be given the public now only if widespread circulation is assured.

It will stand rebooking, and the smaller houses may profit from the advertising earlier done by the larger theaters. Every one can and every one should book this film into his house and give it the most adequate production possible, both for reasons of financial gain and from patriotic motives. It is to help promote this end that this publication offers the handsomest trophy ever given in a motion picture competition—a trophy that is one of the orders of merit for the army at home.

The award will be made by means of the certified returns of the booking agencies as soon after the close of the contest—September 1—as is practicable, and the jury of award will consist of Sydney Cohen, president of the league for New York State; Epes W. Sargent and Sam S. Spedon of this paper.

It is too early yet for the distant exchanges to be heard from as this issue goes to press, but it is hoped that in the following issue some hint of the progress of the contest may be given, though the fight will stay open until the night of August 31.

Broad Interpretation on Educationals

N. A. M. P. I. Reaches Agreement with Committee on Public Information Regarding the Export of Films.

THE following reported submitted by the officials of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which we print verbatim, will be of interest to all the New York film exporters who have been working during the past month on a settlement of the shipping question:

The Committee on Public Information as part of its educational work in allied and neutral countries has perfected an arrangement with the War Trade Board to facilitate the granting of licenses to export motion picture films.

Paul H. Cromelin, representing the export division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Carl Byoir, associate chairman of the Committee on Public Information, have agreed upon the following working arrangement under which the committee will carry on its work in connection with film exports for the present.

The Committee on Public Information desires to secure as part of its educational work in neutral and allied countries the widest distribution possible of moving pictures showing American life and ideals. To this end the committee has made an arrangement with the War Trade Board to facilitate the granting of licenses to export motion picture films.

During the present war emergency all export shipments of whatever nature are carefully scanned to determine the character of the goods, whether they are essential or non-essential. The arrangement of the Committee on Public Information with the War Trade Board is based on the fact that motion pictures constitute a desirable article of export because of the educational messages they convey. In order to successfully maintain its interest in assisting exporters the committee requires the close working understanding with the industry. The committee is willing to accept in lieu of a hard and fast arrangement for a certain percentage of educational film the patriotic assurances of manufacturers and exporters that reasonably large number of the motion pictures exported will be really entitled to be deemed educational. For the present the committee confines its interest to shipments made to countries other than Great Britain and its colonies and France and its possessions, but it is expressly understood that the National Association undertakes to guarantee that positives and negatives, or prints from negatives, exported to allied countries will not be reexported to neutral countries without special permission.

In determining whether a motion picture is to be considered as educational manufacturers and exporters may be assisted by the knowledge that films showing American ideals or American life, such as news weeklies, screen magazines, American travelogues, American industries, and American social conditions will be classified as educational. Films purely entertaining in nature, but which clearly portray some ideal of American life and purpose, will be classed as educational.

Manufacturers are cautioned against making pictures which misrepresent our life or our ideals.

Motion pictures which are derogatory to the interests of the United States, or to its Allies or friends, and motion pictures which may give aid and comfort to the enemy will not be approved.

All manufacturers are urged in their own interest in the making of new productions to avoid mob scenes and riots which might be entirely innocent in themselves, but distorted and used adversely to the interests of the United States.

From time to time the committee will indicate by notices to the trade through the National Association other subjects which it would be best to avoid. All manufacturers are encouraged to include wherever possible in all new productions industrial and educational matter which will aid in conveying a favorable impression of the United States and its people.

The Committee on Public Information desires to render every possible assistance to exporters and producers, and to this end will, as far as may be possible, advise shippers on all matters pertaining to the classification of films.

The sense of this arrangement comprehends that the Committee on Public Information is willing to rely upon the patriotic co-operation of the industry rather than upon hard and fast rules laid down in advance which might cause unnecessary hardships.

The export division of the National Association undertakes to secure the co-operation of the producers and directors to the end that the greatest possible showing shall be made in new pictures of the high plane of American industry and American life, that they will co-operate with the committee in the exploitation of Government films in all countries, and that the export division undertakes to secure such information as the committee may request to show that a satisfactory ratio of educational film is being maintained.

In all cases of film offered for export whether to neutral or allied countries the exporter must secure from the Committee on Public Information a formal letter of approval after obtaining certificate of approval from the Collector of Customs.

"HAVE NOT BEEN CONSULTED," SAYS HOWELLS.

"We know nothing about the agreement—officially, I mean," said David P. Howells, temporary president of the Film Exporters of America, Inc. "I went to Washington representing our organization and did my best to co-operate with the other members of the industry present at the capital, but as far as the agreement referred to is concerned we have neither been consulted nor approached on the subject. It should be taken for granted that it will be binding on the committee and on the export division of the N. A. M. P. I., which, unless there has been some addition during the past few days, is composed of Paul Cromelin (chairman), of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation; Reginald Warde, of the Windmill Pictures, and Mallard Johnson, of Australasian Films.

"Now I want to make it quite plain that the above remarks are not made in a spirit of antagonism. The situation is too serious for petty squabbles. If this matter is not settled in an intelligent fashion it will mean a hard blow to the exporters and a harder one to the cause of the Allies, and America in particular, in neutral countries.

"This is the reason why I hold that the film exporters should have been consulted. It is notorious that American film producers pay very little attention to foreign countries, confining their scope to the home market, Canada and, in some cases, Great Britain. At least 80 per cent. of the film shipped from America to neutral and allied nations is, with the possible exception of those cargoes sent to Great Britain proper, handled through New York exporting houses, which have thorough knowledge and local connections in foreign territories and pay cash right here to the manufacturers, taking all risks on the transactions. In the membership of the film exporters are to be found over thirty houses of standing, practically every one in the business outside of the three firms affiliated with the N. A. M. P. I. With their first-hand information on conditions abroad, would not their advice and counsel be an invaluable help to the Washington authorities in arriving at a clear understanding of the most effective method of carrying and intensifying our educational campaign in foreign countries?"

North Carolina Exhibitors Elect Officers

Percy Wells Chosen President for Fifth Term and Varner Again Is Named Secretary.

PERCY W. WELLS, of Wilmington, was elected for his fifth consecutive term as president of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League on the concluding day of the regular annual convention, held at Wrightsville Beach, N. C., July 9 and 10. H. B. Varner, of Lexington, chairman of the Allied Legislative Committee at Washington, was re-elected secretary, and A. F. Sams, of Winston-Salem, again becomes attorney. R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, and H. T. Drake, of Fayetteville, are first and second vice-presidents respectively.

The convention was very poorly attended owing to an eleventh hour change of date, and its sessions as a whole were without important incident. However, the principal, larger theatrical interests of the state were represented, and the action of chief interest was the ratification by the league of the affiliation recently made by R. D. Craver, of Charlotte and H. B. Varner, of Lexington, with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, whereby the territory embraced in ten southern states, known as the southeastern group, was taken over.

While the plan of the different units provides that the small issue of stock shall be distributed throughout the different states comprising the various units, North Carolina, with the small handful of men at the convention, subscribed every available share of stock within thirty minutes, and this state will control the major operations of the southeastern unit. A meeting of the subscribers to stock will be held in Charlotte within the next few days, at which permanent organization will be effected and arrangements made for opening exchanges at Washington, Atlanta and Charlotte. The organization will not only control the distribution of the entire Affiliated output throughout their ten states, but will, through a subsidiary corporation, the Carolina Booking Office, handle independently other state rights productions.

The mid-winter meeting of the Carolina league will be held at Charlotte, beginning December 11. No delegates were appointed to attend the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association, to be held in Detroit during the month of August, although it is likely that several prominent exhibitors of the state will attend.

GRIFFITH'S ARTCRAFT SET FOR AUGUST 12.

The release date for "The Great Love," the first of the D. W. Griffith Productions to be released through Artcraft Picture, has been set for August 12.

There are many factors which combine to exalt "The Great Love" to this high position. There is the bigness of its theme—the transfiguration of the womanhood of England by the Great Love, the love that places country above all else. There is the fact that in the accomplishing of his difficult task Mr. Griffith had the backing of the British Government and not only the encouragement but the active assistance of many of England's most distinguished people.

QUINN AND GRIFFITH GET INTO UNIFORM.

Say good-bye and good luck to Harry Quinn, office manager of Universal's Denver exchange, and to C. H. Griffith, head of that office's bookkeeping department. Both are on their way to convert live Germans into good Germans.

Exhibitors of the Denver territory are losing a couple of mighty good friends in their departure and the allied armies are getting what should be a couple of first class fightin' men.

National Association Goes to Boston

Will Give Banquet to "Tay Pay," Hold Its Annual Meeting and Attend Exhibitors' Ball.

EXTENSIVE plans were perfected at a meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held today to co-operate with the Exhibitors' League convention being held this week in Boston.

The most important event will be a banquet on Thursday evening, which is to be given in honor of T. P. O'Connor, M. P., who is the Cinema Censor for Great Britain. The executive officials of the important producing and distributing companies as well as the supply and equipment concerns are planning to leave for Boston on the 1 o'clock train Thursday, so as to attend the late afternoon session of the Exhibitors' League and the banquet to be tendered to Mr. O'Connor in the evening.

On Friday morning, July 19, at 11 o'clock the annual meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held at the Copley Plaza Hotel, presided over by William A. Brady. One of the big events of the week is the ball which is to be given on Friday night and which celebrated screen stars are planning to attend. Arrangements are being made by President Brady to run a special car to the train leaving New York Friday afternoon to carry the artists. This car is to be held for their return on the 1 o'clock train Saturday morning. Through this arrangement the stars will not lose practically any time at the studios.

Arrangements for the banquet to be tendered to T. P. O'Connor are in charge of President Brady of the National Association and President Ochs of the Exhibitors' League, and it is hoped that the Governor of Massachusetts as well as the Mayor of Boston and other state and city officials will attend this function.

The executive committee meeting was presided over by Chairman Walter W. Irwin and present were President William A. Brady, P. A. Powers, J. E. Brulatour, Gabriel L. Hess, Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal, William L. Sherrill, Louis L. Levine and Frederick H. Elliott.

Goldwyn Announcement Meets Approval

Exhibitors Indicate Special Interest in Six Farrar Productions and Six Beach Stories.

AS was expected, instantaneous approval greeted the announcement of Goldwyn that for the company's second season its output of in excess of fifty productions would be released to exhibitors under the Star Series plan.

In twenty territories where Goldwyn maintains its sales offices the company's managers at once began closing contracts with big exhibitors, who declared this to be the finest move that Goldwyn could have made now that it has doubled its annual output.

Two of the most noteworthy features of Goldwyn's greatly expanded plans for the coming year have to do with the making of six Geraldine Farrar productions and six Rex Beach stories.

During her screen career the greatest number of pictures ever made by Miss Farrar in any year has been two and Mr. Beach's maximum has been one.

The Goldwyn reasoning has been that instead of giving exhibitors two weeks of box-office prosperity based on Miss Farrar's popularity it would be much more desirable to give them six weeks of assured patronage by increasing the number of her productions. Miss Farrar has completed her first Goldwyn production, "The Turn of the Wheel," written by Tex Charwate, under the direction of Reginald Barker, and is now at Cody, Wyoming, making her second picture, "The Hell Cat," by Willard Mack, with Mr. Barker as the director.

Getting Away From "The Curse of Stills"

Tag an Actor for a Certain Line of Roles During His Entire Motion Picture Experience.

WHEN an experienced motion picture actor applies for work at a new studio he is compelled to show "stills" of the roles he has assumed in former productions for other companies. From these "stills" the director casts the actor and, naturally casts him in the same sort of role that he played in the other pictures. By this system a motion picture actor is tagged for a certain line of roles during his entire motion picture experience. It may be for roles that he dislikes, roles that he cannot play as well as other parts but he simply can't get away from his tag—he's got to keep on playing for his entire motion picture career the same sort of a role that he played upon his first entry into pictures. And the worst of it is that in all probability the first director for whom he worked grabbed him out of a crowd and hustled him into a make-up without trying him out or testing his ability in any manner.

World Pictures realize that this "curse of stills," as one actor calls it, is a real detriment to the picture business, in that it does not give good actors the opportunities for versatility that they deserve. So World Pictures is now discarding the use of "stills" in casting, as much as possible, and are casting actors after screen tests and tryouts. In this way actors are being cast in the parts for which they are best fitted by training and temperament and not because they have been "tagged" for some particular line of roles. And the splendid results attained by this plan are being shown in the perfect casts and superb acting displayed in the new World pictures.

Day of the Painter Coming, Says Earle

Metro Scene and Title Creator Talks of the Possibilities of His Special Field.

ONE of the secrets of the exceptional finish of Screen Classics, Inc., "To Hell With the Kaiser," now running at the Broadway theater, New York, is the scenes and titles painted by Ferdinand Earle. They include several unusual visions of the infernal regions, several battlefields peculiarly lighted, two Gothic cathedral interiors, and fifty other views of Europe and America.

When interviewed at the Metro studio, the other day, in his den piled to the ceiling with sketches and oil pictures for the shortly-to-be released May Allison production, "A Successful Adventure," the young artist switched the conversation to his plans for creating costume and fairy plays on the screen, and futuristic dramas, in a painted world of his own making.

"You see that little temple interior?" indicating a canvas 18 by 25 inches, or thereabouts. "Well, I could put you and all your relatives into those halls, with all the animation of a cabaret and all the splendor of an Egyptian orgy, and have it dissolve and blend, as by enchantment, into a Quaker meeting house."

The interviewer enthused over how much money could be saved by such a process, but Mr. Earle knew the game: "No, we will spend more money than ever before, but a thousand dollars will look like a million. The day of painters, architects, sculptors and poets is at hand—especially men of vision and inventive instinct. The most valued person in pictures has been the boob who could most cunningly rehash and disguise stale and highly spiced material—not the man of ingenuity, originality, and imagination. And so the path of the aesthetic pioneer is not entirely paved with roses. An artist adventurer in screendom rarely received the support of the press, of art lovers, and of art critics, although he is the most needed in the world."

Mr. Earle calls his work motion painting, and attains a kind of Tintoretto-fresco effect as fresh and charming in spirit as an Este or Baskt design.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of July 14 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIVOLI.—"We Can't Have Everything," a Paramount picture directed by Cecil B. DeMille, with Theodore Roberts, Tully Marshall, Kathlyn Williams and a strong cast, was the screen feature at the Rivoli the week of July 14. The story was written by Rupert Hughes and put into scenario form by William C. DeMille. A comedy, the Animated Pictorial and an educational subject were also shown. The soloists were Desere La Salle and Murtha Atwood.

THE RIALTO.—Enid Bennett in the Paramount comedy drama, "The Vamp," was the leading player at the Rialto. Jerome Storm directed the production and Douglas MacLean Melbourne and Robert McKim are members of the cast. "Paris the Beautiful," was the scenic. The Animated Magazine and the Fox comedy "A Tight Squeeze," were the other screen numbers.

THE STRAND.—Marguerite Clark as Eva and Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" held the top position on the Strand program. This stage classic is excellently produced. A new Chester-Outing number, Billy Parsons in "The Widow's Mite," the third installment of the Official Allied War Pictures, a comedy cartoon and the Strand Topical Review completed the picture bill. Grace Hoffman was the vocalist.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER—Douglas Fairbanks in "Say! Young Fellow" the entire week.

Film Colony Assists in Patriotic Meet

Hollywood Officers Training Corps Holds Regular Show, at Which Cecil De Mille Enters in Airplane.

MEMBERS of the Los Angeles film colony took prominent part in the monster field meet and military pageant held at Exposition Park on June 29, under the auspices of the Hollywood Officers' Training School. Baby Marie Osborne, Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin assisted Mayor Woodman in firing the opening salute which started the proceedings.

The Lasky Home Guards acquitted themselves with glory in the drills, and the rodeo staged by the Triangle and Universal cowboys and cowgirls in friendly competition was one of the big features of the day.

Lieutenant Wells of the Aviation Corps performed some thrilling feats in the air, after which Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky studios, made a spectacular entry to the grounds in an air machine driven by himself.

Marie Osborne, Virginia Lee Corbin and Francis Carpenter then appeared in a patriotic costume act. Drills and maneuvers by the Hollywood Officers Training Corps, which includes a number of player and studio employees, were executed with dash and spirit which speaks for the future success of those of the corps who will later on be engaged in the great war for liberty.

Ship Workers to Have Picture Show.

The buildings that are to be erected to house one thousand shipyard workers at the Southwestern Ship Building plant on Terminal Island, are to include a moving picture theater. Work on the structure will be started at once.

Pasadena Doesn't Want Young Studio.

The Real Estate Board of Pasadena has passed a resolution opposing the erection of a studio which Clara Kimball Young proposed to build in that village, according to a statement made by C. V. Sturdevant, president of the board.

The action was taken because it was felt the location of a moving picture studio in the town would result in lowered values and a general depreciation of property. There has been considerable controversy over this matter.

The Rev W. C. Loomis preached a sermon at the Lincoln Avenue Church on June 30 on "Shall the Crown City give its crown to the movie queen?" Mr. Loomis is said to have declared, among other things, that the moving picture industry was a mushroom industry.

On the other hand, a petition indorsing the plan and bidding Miss Young a cordial welcome was circulated and signed by merchants, business and professional men as well as wage earners and property owners.

Santa Ana to Stage Local Film.

The West End theater of Santa Ana, Cal., has just closed a popularity contest which was held to select the leading players in a film to be produced by home town players and staged in local settings. Mary Grubb and Mark R. Todd were the winners. Cassius Paul received more votes than Todd, but as Mr. Paul is ill, the honor went to Todd, who was next highest on the list. The filming of the play will begin at once.

M. P. W. S. A. to Give Big Patriotic Benefit.

The Los Angeles Motion Picture War Service Association is planning to give a monster ball at the Shrine Auditorium on August 3. Patriotism and "Help win the war" will be the slogan of the evening, and the proceeds of the affair will be devoted to the charity and relief divisions of the organizations. The promoters of the ball are planning to make it a big success, and invitations will be sent only to those connected with the industry. An admission of three dollars will be charged.

Stars Help in Balloon School Opening.

Players from the Fox and Sunshine studios helped to make a success of the elaborate program staged at the opening of the United States Balloon School at Arcadia, Cal., on July 4. Theda Bara and the players from the Lehrman studio staged an aquatic farce. Tom Mix and his cowboys performed stunts, and Mae Eccleston did some spectacular work in the high diving line.

Menlo Park, Cal., to Have New Theater.

Triumph Hall, on the state highway at Menlo Park, Cal., is to be remodeled and made into a five hundred seat capacity picture theater. The alterations are under the supervision of J. G. Mason, who will probably manage the theater.

They Almost Loved Mary to Death.

When Mary Pickford's latest film, "How Could You, Jean?" was being shown at the Kinema theater Little Mary made a personal appearance in behalf of the Sandoz Commission for the invalided soldiers of France. The immense audience became so enthusiastic and displayed so much eagerness to show their appreciation to the star that she was almost mobbed by her admirers as she emerged from the theater. It took a squad of police as well as several mounted officers to keep the crowd in order.

Second Broncho Billy to Come First.

"The Yellow Streak," the first of the new Broncho Billy films, has been finished and work has been started on the second feature. According to a statement made by G. M. Anderson at the offices of the Golden Producing Company in Glendale, the second feature of the series, which will be called "The Son of a Gun," will be put on the releasing schedule first, and the date of release will be early in September.

M. Zecca of Pathe in Los Angeles.

Production Manager Zecca, of the Pathe forces in America, was in Los Angeles the week of the Fourth with M. Franconi, head of the cutting and editing department, looking over the western studios of his company. As M. Zecca cannot speak English he escaped many interviews with future captains of the industry who usually pester film magnates and other officials from the East when they visit the West Coast studios.

Fire at Fairbanks Studio.

A fire that caused $50,000 damage was started at the Douglas Fairbanks studio in Hollywood at 6 o'clock on the morning of July 4. The fire is thought to have been started by a firecracker that was thrown on the roof of the assembling room. This room, together with Fairbanks' dressing room, and the scenario department was destroyed before the fire could be got under control. The European negative of "Headin' South," the negative of "Swat the Kaiser," and the first print of "Bound in Morrocco," Fairbanks' latest film, were destroyed.

Theater Jobs for Liberty Boys' Dependents.

Michael Gore, owner of a chain of motion picture theaters on the Pacific coast; Matthew Bridge, manager of the Superba theater, Los Angeles; and F. Jackson, proprietor of a Huntington park theater, have pledged themselves to employ relatives of soldiers and sailors in preference to others in the management of their several houses. The movement was inagurated and launched by Colonel B. B. Ray of the Soldiers and Sailors Welfare Association.

Hunting the Hun.

Joseph Henaberry, director for the Douglas Fairbanks Corporation, has been called to the colors of his country and is now at Fort McDowell, San Francisco. Mr. Henaberry is well known to the picture industry as a capable actor as well as a director of brains and ability. Among other big things, he created the part of Abraham Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," and as a director his most recent achievements were "The Man From Painted Post," and "Say, Young Fellow," Douglas Fairbanks' Artcraft release.

Two more boys from Triangle will soon be in training to hunt the Hun. They are Cyril Gardner from the cutting room and John Curtis Gault of the transportation department. These boys have just turned twenty-one and their numbers came out in the first call.

Gus Inglis, of the well known firm of Willis & Inglis, has enlisted in the Officers' Training School of Hollywood, Cal.

Richard Marshall, of the Majestic theater, is now going to see the big show from the front row. Dick has gone into training at Camp Kearney.

Harry Edwards, film actor, has enlisted in the navy.

Quinn Now Sole Owner of Rialto.

The partnership between J. A. Quinn and D. D. Sayer, who owned and operated Quinn's Rialto theater at 812 South Broadway, has been dissolved. Mr. Quinn purchased Mr. Sayer's interest in the property and will continue to operate the theater on his own account.

The Grauman Has a House Organ.

The Grauman Weekly Magazine is the name of the new house organ that is being published in the interests of the Grauman theater, at Third and Broadway. Aside from informing the patrons about the program for the current and the coming week, the periodical contains interesting bits of screen gossip and other matter pertaining to the film industry. The little magazine will be mailed out to anyone asking to be put on the mailing list, and is also distributed to the audience at each performance.

The Miller Is the New Name.

Carl Ray, who recently purchased Miller's theater at Ninth and Main streets, changed the name of the house to The Miller. Mr. Ray is giving the house a complete overhauling, and has added $1,700 worth of carpets and draperies to the interior decorations of the house.

Alterations at Tally's.

Extensive alterations are being made in Tally's Broadway theater. A new system of lights is being installed and the stage is being reconstructed in a manner that will give it several additional feet in depth. A new scheme of handsome curtains and draperies are being hung that will add new beauty to the house. Manager Tally is rushing the work in order to have the house ready for the personal appearance of Mme. Olga Petrova, First National Exhibitors star, who will come to Los Angeles shortly on her War Savings Stamp tour.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Personally Conducted by Giebler.

LADIES and Gentlemen, the group of large white buildings we are approaching are the Triangle studios. The word Triangle does not refer to the eternal triangle in picture play plots, however. As you will note, these edifices are most ornate. Triangle is one of the most architectural of all the film plants on the Pacific Coast.

About five hundred people are employed here, among whom are a number of actors.

We will enter this interesting place. These are the executive offices of the studio, where the heavy thinking of the plant is done by General Manager O. L. Sellers and his force of assistants.

Follow me down this corridor and out on to the lot.

The tall and pensive gentleman leaning against the door is Ivan, sometimes yclept Ike, St. John, the historian of the institution. Borrowing a cigarette from him is Tom Buckingham, cameraman and official graflexer.

You will note that Triangle is as handsome inside as it is outside. The beautiful flowers and verdant lawns are maintained to keep the actors in a pleasant frame of mind.

The two young ladies you observe walking near the geranium hedge are Olive Thomas and Gloria Swanson, and approaching them is Frank Borzage, Miss Thomas' director.

If you will step into this glass-covered stage, said to be one of the largest in the country, you will see Director Heffron staging a scene for "The Price of Applause." This scene shows Bohemian life as it obtains in the neighborhood of Washington Square in New York. Happily we Californians are far removed from such.

Jack Livingston, Claire Anderson and Joe King are the leading players in this picture. The others in the set are some of the atmosphere secured by the Triangle's own exclusive registration bureau.

Over on the next stage we haye W. Christy Cabanne working out a spirited situation in his forthcoming comedy-drama, "The Mayor of Filbert." This play is not as nutty as the title might lead you to suspect. The liquor in the bottles behind the bar is property booze and is harmless. No, lady, real liquor is not dispensed at movie bars—in Los Angeles.

Observe Mr. Cabanne closely. He is one of the interesting personalities of the pictures. He was a writer, painter, sailor, actor and traveler before he became a director. Mr. Cabanne is a scion of one of the oldest French families in the country. His family settled in St. Louis, a large town on the Wabash railroad in Missouri, when the Mississippi River was but a small brook. Various parts of the town have been named after the Cabanne family. To live in the Cabanne district in St. Louis entitles one to an invitation to all of the best dances and parties, including the annual Veiled Prophet's Ball.

Barney Sherry, Belle Bennett, Jack Richardson, Joe Singleton and Olga Gray are the principal players in "The Mayor of Filbert."

The buzzing sound you hear comes from the scenario department, and is caused by the editors grinding out plots. This department is under the supervision of Charles Stocking, who is very clever at knitting yarns of all kinds.

The group standing near the automobile is worthy of your close attention. The tall man wearing the cowboy make-up is Roy Stewart, the one and only leading man in the movies who has never pressed his feet on the flagstones of that mecca of all actors—Broadway.

Roy has never been to New York, and says he has no desire to go there.

At Mr. Stewart's side to the north is Cliff Smith, his director. Smith made his debut in the movies by jumping into a creek in Oklahoma from a beetling bluff fifty feet in height on horseback. Cliff then joined out with the movies, and his knowledge of the wild life of the west, his skill as a rider and roper, coupled with a natural dramatic talent, soon made him a director.

Cliff directs all of Roy's pictures, and the one they are now working on is called "Cactus Crandall."

South of these two interesting persons is Jean Hersholt, an actor of parts, who has just had his appendix removed.

As we journey to the next point of interest we may very profitably improve the time by a consideration of the flora and fauna of this section, evidence of which we see on all sides.

The waving fronds of the plants in the distance indicate a bean orchard. Thirty-seven distinct varieties and kinds of beans, including the air-tight bean of commerce, are reared in this salubrious clime. The fruit of these bean plants are much esteemed as a food by the people of our sister republic—Mexico—and by the inhabitants of the city of Boston.

Oranges, lemons and other citrus fruits are also grown extensively in this section.

The small mounds of earth at the side of the road are gopher villages. These gophers do great damage to gardens, and are referred to locally as "dampests," a word taken from the Latin and meaning troublesome.

The gopher, the mountain lion and the sand flea are the last three representatives of the wild life of the region that have refused to move on before the advance of civilization.

Ah, here we are at the Metro studios!

The action being shot on this stage is part of a drama entitled "Boston Blackie's Little Pal." The beautiful lady in the scene who is about to succumb to the persuasion of the villain is Rosemary Theby, and the person sitting on the stairway with the gray flannel shirt on is Bert Lytell, sometimes known as the Lone Wolf.

Bert is not garbed in this outfit because his things have not come back from the laundry, but because his part in the scene being shot, in which he plays the part of a burglar, demands that kind of dress.

E. Mason Hopper is directing this piece. He is the individual with the air of deep concentration.

The man with the van dyke beard is George D. Baker, manager of productions at this plant. Mr. Baker not only acts as overseer of all the films, but dashes off stories in his odd moments. He is the author of "Judgment," a story of great power now being produced by Will S. Davis on the adjoining stage.

Anna Q. Nilsson, the most perfect natural blonde in the movies, and Franklyn Farnum, late with Universal, are in the leading parts.

Mr. Baker, in addition to his many duties during the last few weeks, also found time to have his appendix removed.

The number of appendixless people in the picture industry is increasing daily.

The individual wearing the new straw hat is Harry S. Northrup, one of the most consummate villains in pictures.

Mr. Northrup was brought here recently from New York to play the bad man in one picture, and the brand of dastardliness he brought with him from the east was so effective that he was retained for three more porductions.

In a recent play Northrup was supported by a feminine rattlesnake, and although it is conceded that the female of the Crotalus Horridus species of serpents is more deadly than the male, when Priscilla—which was the snake's name—playfully bit Harry on the off leg she immediately succumbed to the villainous venom that permeates his system and curled up and died.

Our next trip, ladies and gentlemen, will take in, among others, the famous Mack Sennett studios.

Heart Interest Stories of the Week

Punch Lost.

TOM GERAGHTY has been going around with a story, which he says he heard in a restaurant, about a man with a lot of cigars in his vest pocket which made him resemble a human pipe organ. Tom has told the story to a lot of people, but has drawn very few laughs. In fact, the only ones who have laughed at all were those cheerful idiots who laugh at every story they hear for fear some one will think they have no sense of humor. Others who demand a well defined punch to their stories before they step on the giggle valve have not laughed at all.

Somebody has undoubtedly held out something on Tom, and if any one knows the story with the laugh attachment to it he will confer a great favor by bringing or sending it to the Moving Picture World office in the Wright & Callender building. As soon as the punch is found and attached to the story it will be handed to Tom, who will apologize to every one—and tell them the story all over again.

Vile Calumny.

A writer on a San Franciso paper, in describing the opening of a tea shop, in which Clara Kimball Young assisted while visiting in that town, says, among other things, about Miss Young: ". . . and a black picture hat was worn over the smartly coiffured little blonde head."

This is base slander. Clara was born with hair just about as blond as the wings of a crow and her tresses are as yet innocent of H_2O_2.

Studio Shorts

D. W. GRIFFITH has received word that the entire British Parliament adjourned session to attend an afternoon performance of "Hearts of the World," when the feature was given its initial showing at the Palace Theater in London. This is said to be the first time in history that an action of such a nature was ever taken by either House.

Frances Marion, scenario writer for Mary Pickford, is working on three stories at once. Besides a new play for Miss Pickford, she is also working on an original plot for Fred Stone, and during her odd moments is writing the continuity for Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "He Comes Up Smiling."

Last week, while Marie Doro was on her way to Los Angeles from the East, Elliott Dexter concluded that the train was not traveling fast enough so he cranked up his car and went over to San Bernardino and brought friend wife home in person .

William D. Taylor, director of recent Mary Pickford features, is indulging in a vacation since his star's contract with Arteraft expired. Instead of going east or anything like that, however, Taylor is going fishing.

Mrs. C. H. Christie, wife of one of the members of the Christie Comedy Company, is an officer in the Farmerette Brigade, and has been recruiting at the High Schools and Girls' Colleges, but has had little success so far among the girls of the studios.

Taylor Holmes has been engaged on a three year contract by Triangle, and his pictures will be produced at the Culver City studio under the direction of Lawrence Windom, who has directed Holmes in his former picture successes.

Mrs. Billy Elmer, wife of the famous "heavy" of the Lasky and Ince films, has joined the symphony orchestra at the Burbank Theater. Mrs. Elmer plays the cornet, an instrument at which she is an expert.

Tsuru Aoki received a fox terrier as a present the other day, and as she was already the possessor of two dogs, she obtained permission of the donor to sell the newcomer and invest the proceeds in War Savings Stamps.

Vera Lewis turned loose several very pretty film actresses in the streets of Los Angeles one day just before the Fourth of July to sell flags for the Stage Women's War Relief, and the result was a good round sum for the Cause.

Jesse Hampton, one of the business officials of the Ince studios was out of commission for a whole week or more on account of an operation he had to undergo recently.

Henry B. Walthall has been specially engaged by Thomas H. Ince for the leading part in Louis Joseph Vance's story, "The False Faces," which is to be produced on a massive scale.

Ford Sterling has joined the ranks of the Mack Sennett forces, and will be seen in "dressed up" parts instead of the comedy policemen of former films

Harry Hilliard, former leading man in a number of Fox productions, is now at Universal City to take leading parts in Universal productions.

Lora Bara, sister of the famous Theda, will have a real part in a forthcoming Bara production entitled "The Little She-Devil."

Nell Shipman and her husband, Ernest, who is on the coast for a few weeks, opened their summer cottage at Santa Monica on July 4 and entertained a number of friends at a house warming

Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher came in from the American Studios at Santa Barbara to do a little trading at the city stores last week.

George Hively is a new member of the scenario and continuity force at Triangle.

Fred Stone is working out some of the scenes of "Johnny Get Your Gun" on the lot at the Douglas Fairbanks studio in Hollywood.

Harry McCoy, former Keystoner, is to be seen at the Mack Sennett plant taking part in a forthcoming comedy.

Olive Thomas is now in New York taking a short vacation and visiting her hubby, Jack Pickford, of the navy.

Fred Stone has leased a house in Laughlin Park, near Los Angeles, and with Mrs. Stone and his three children, will reside there during his film activities at the Lasky studio.

Harold Lockwood departed from Los Angeles on the last day of June for New York, where he will begin work on his next production under the direction of Edwin Carewe within a few days.

Antonio Moreno is in Los Angeles, and will soon be at work on a new Vitagraph serial.

Frank Keenan is returning to the Brunton studios for his next Pathe production, which will be started immediately.

Bessie Barriscale is working in a comedy written by Tom Geraghty entitled "Country Kin," at the Brunton studios.

A daily diversion at the Christie Studio is the disposing of a Five Dollar War Savings Stamp. Ethel Lynne is the only Christie-ite so far who has taken the stamp two days in succession.

Edna Earle left for New York last week to go to the White Mountains with her father and sister. Miss Earle will return to the Los Angeles Film colony early in September.

Charles Gunn, of Paralta, is entertaining his mother, Mrs. Georgia Gunn, of Oakland.

Theda Bara Making 32d Picture.

Counting "The She-Devil," upon which she has just begun work at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., Theda Bara has done thirty-two pictures for William Fox. This is a record which is looked upon with pride by both Miss Bara and the company.

Among the productions in the list are "Cleopatra," "Salome," "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans."

Much Publicity for "The Yellow Dog"

Advance Campaign Instituted by Jewel Is Designed to Serve the Government.

IN connection with the picturization of Henry Irving Dodge's great win the war story, "The Yellow Dog," Jewel Productions, Inc., is conducting a publicity campaign entirely different from anything heretofore done in connection with a picture play.

The advance publicity campaign which has already been started is designed first, to serve the Government in the elimination of insidious German propaganda. Second, to publicize the picture by the indirect method of making the "yellow dog" as an individual as intensely hated as the Kaiser himself.

Mr. Dodge's story created a furore when it appeared in the May 4 issue of a popular weekly and thousands of letters have already been received complimenting the author upon having conceived so valuable a plan for the suppression of our internal enemies.

"The Yellow Dog" though a pure story of adventure, suggested so practical an idea for the elimination of a dangerous form of enemy influence that the Jewel company decided to abandon all regular forms of advance publicity and devote its energies to making a reality of Mr. Dodge's fictional campaign against "yellow dogism." To this end an unusually large appropriation has been set aside and the work of forming Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs and organizing companies of boy detectives is going forward under the auspices of prominent men and women and state and city officials in all parts of the country.

In "The Yellow Dog" a vivid picture was drawn of the despicable men who add to the tremendous task of winning the war by making discouraging statements and create misery by repeating false rumors and insinuating disaster. So impressed are the officials of the film company with the practical possibilties of Mr. Dodge's idea that each detail of the plan will be put into actual practice.

Every theater owner is asked to help make his particular neighborhood 100 per cent. American by assisting the formation of an Anti-Yellow Dog club and the organization of a company of boy detectives. A booklet on "How to Form Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs" is being distributed throughout the country. Work on the picture has been started under the direction of Colin Campbell at the Universal West Coast studios.

GRACE HENDERSON IN WORLD PICTURES.

Grace Henderson has been engaged by World Pictures for an important role in support of June Elvidge in "The Love Wraith," which Travers Vale is directing. With the late Augustin Daly, Grace Henderson made her first appearance on the stage and her name was coupled with Ada Rehan and John Drew in the many noted productions these two famous stars appeared in at Daly's theater. Afterward she went to the Lyceum theater, where, with Georgia Cayvan, E. H. Sothern, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon she played in success after success. At the Empire theater under the management of Charles Frohman, she supported Maude Adams, William Gillette, Annie Russell, the Barrymores and other famous stars. For several years she retired from the stage to raise her two sons, one of whom is now in France, an officer with the American Forces.

Chicago News Letter

by Jas. S. McQuade

American Plans Fully Outlined

Films Direct to Exhibitors Through American's Personal Representatives—Physical Handling by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PRESIDENT of the American Film Company, Inc., Samuel S. Hutchinson, has formally announced the consummation of arrangements for the selling of future American productions direct to exhibitors, the films to be handled through the Pathe system of exchanges, as announced in the Moving Picture World last week. Contracts by which Pathe will handle the physical work of distribution on American made features were recently signed in New York by President Hutchinson, of the American, and Paul Brunet, vice president of the Pathe organization.

"Yes," said Mr. Hutchinson upon his return to Chicago from the East, "future American Film Company productions will be sold direct to exhibitors by the American Film Company's representatives in Pathe exchanges. These productions will star Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The contract also calls for the release of the William Russell productions, which I control. Personal representatives of mine will be found at each of the thirty Pathe exchanges in the United States, on and after Monday, July 22, and will be pleased to meet all exhibitors and to explain to them the details of the booking arrangement we have effected, and to show them the first completed subjects and take applications for bookings.

"You will note that we are not asking the exhibitors to book our productions unsight-unseen," said Mr. Hutchinson. "The first of the new American releases will be actually on hand and can be seen on the screen at least sixty days in advance of their first presentation. American will absolutely control the productions from the moment the story is selected until it is turned over to the exhibitor for showing to his patrons. Pathe will attend to the physical handling of the film, but American will both supply the production and control the selling organization. The salesmen who will be found in each Pathe exchange on and after Monday, July 22, will be personal representatives of the American Film Company, and when an exhibitor calls upon them it is exactly the same as though he were dealing with the American Film Company direct.

"The forthcoming pictures are being staged by Directors Edward Sloman, Henry King and Lloyd Ingraham, and I am confident they will be voted superior to any we have ever offered in the past. However, we are letting the pictures speak for themselves, and we invite exhibitors to book them only after they, themselves, have seen them on the screen at any Pathe exchange."

Funkhouser Trial Near Its Close

Public Opinion Continues Strong on the Major's Side and His Acquittal Is Expected.

WHILE on the stand Monday, July 8, Major Funkhouser referred to a "weighty conference" held in Acting Chief Alcock's office, in the city hall, March 27 last, to which he had been summoned by the acting chief. The official stenographer of the acting chief was present to take the conversation for filing purposes. A motion by one of the major's counsel was made that his client be withdrawn from the stand and that the stenographer take his place to read the report of the conference. Much wrangling between opposing counsel ensued, but it was terminated by the ruling of President Frazier, of the civil service commission board, to the effect that certain parts of the report must not be read.

On the stand the same day the major charged that moving picture interests and the underworld are responsible for the attempt to oust him from the position of second deputy, and his chief attorney, John S. Miller, added, "We will prove it." Testimony concerning certain films which had been refused permits was proceeding, when President Frazier of the board stopped it by saying: "It has been understood specifically that the question of censorship does not enter into the case except in the small way covered by the charges that violations of the ordinance were not prosecuted."

Attorney Miller protested that his client had testified that censorship is the very spirit of the case, and that he would prove it.

The commission board had ruled out a report bearing upon this point earlier in the day, and it is believed that the document in question is the "missing report" which Actin Chief Alcock says showed that a private citizen, not connected with the vice world, had been shadowed by one of Funkhouser's vice investigators. It is whispered that this document is in reality a report on the activities of an attorney who is identified with the efforts to eliminate or modify the present Chicago plan of censorship. Major Funkhouser completed his testimony on direct examination, Monday afternoon.

During cross examination Tuesday, July 9, the major's attorneys again tried to bring out the secrets of the "missing report," but opposing counsel objected strongly. The counsel for defense insisted that the acting chief had made the charge and that they intended to justify it, but President Frazier ruled that the acting chief's statement was not followed up by any evidence, that it had made no impression on the commission board, and that it will be given no value in the board's consideration of the case.

One of Tuesday's important contributions during the trial of Major Funkhouser was a signed, formal statement issued to the Woman's City Club of Chicago, by Miss Jane Addams, Miss Harriet E. Vittum and Mrs. Edith R. McDowell. These three women were appointed by the board of directors of the organization to act as a special committee in the matter. The statement is lengthy and reviews the police government of Chicago since the reorganization ordinance was passed in 1912 and of Major Funkhousers' discharge of his duties as second deputy. The statement praises the major for his campaign against commercialized vice and for his work as a censor of moving pictures.

During Thursday's session the suspended second deputy at one time offered to name city officials who had interceded to prevent the prosecution of certain offending film concerns. This occurred when one of the opposing counsel wanted to know why certain suits had not been started. President Frazier of the commission hastily interposed, and relieved the situation by ruling that it was not necessary.

On Friday the major charged from the stand that certain interests are leagued in a conspiracy to oust him from his job, but all attempts made by his counsel to introduce the evidence were frustrated by the commission board. The evidence which it was attempted to submit was a reprint of unfavorable editorials from certain Chicago newspapers, charged to have been circulated by the moving picture interests. The board, however, declared the entire matter immaterial.

It was expected that the trial would close Saturday, July 13.

Oakland Square Theater Manager Robbed.

Saturday night, July 6, Charles Doll, assistant manager of the Oakland Square Theater, Oakland and Drexel Boulevard, owned by the Ascher Brothers, left the theater about 10 o'clock to deposit the receipts for the day in the bank, across the street from the theater. On the way he was accosted by two men, one of whom struck him over the head with a blackjack and seized the money, amounting to $406, and made his escape. The police are still working on the case, but up to the present writing have not located the robbers. Mr. Doll was still abed, Friday, July 12, suffering from the attack.

S. S. Hutchinson Goes to Santa Barbara.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., leaves for Santa Barbara about the middle of the week beginning Monday, July 15. Mr. Hutchinson will remain for some time in close touch with his studio forces, in connection with the plans for his future.

Vitagraph Serial Has Good Start.

The new Vitagraph serial, "A Fight for Millions," featuring William Duncan, has been passed by the board of censors and was released July 15. The advanced bookings on this picture have far exceeded all expectations.

At George Kleine's Offices.

"The Unchastened Woman," featuring Grace Valentine and Frank Mills, will be released about October 1, with a downtown showing in Chicago. It has a white permit.

Bill Schubbe, George Kleine's night shipping clerk, was drafted last week and has gone to Columbia, S. C.

"The Unbelievers" is now playing all the theaters in outside territory and is making just as big a clean-up as it did in Chicago, according to reports.

A Firstborn Son at Verhoeven Home.

A bouncing boy arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Verhoeven, 6019 St. Lawrence avenue, this city, June 24 last. Mr. Verhoeven is a member of the law firm of Cooney & Verhoeven and is well known in Chicago film circles. His firm has had charge of many important legal cases for some of the leading men in the business. John is so proud of the arrival of his first son that he is already contemplating a change of the firm name.

"To Hell with the Kaiser," opened at the Playhouse, on Michigan avenue, for a run, at the Sunday matinee, July 7. Rex O. Lawhead, who is managing the Playhouse during the moving picture season, states that he held a crowd in front for six hours the opening day, and that he is doing capacity business since. The prices are: Main floor, 50 cents; balcony, 25 cents.

Mary Pickford at Orchestra Hall.

Orchestra Hall has been liberally patronized during the week of Sunday, July 7, with Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" as the chief attraction. This Artcraft picture affords delightful entertainment, but I was impressed that the story was, in some respects, not quite worthy of the prominence of the star. Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (Paramount) next week.

Off to the Boston Convention.

Thomas Furniss passed through the city, Monday, July 8, on his way to Detroit, where he stopped for a short visit and then proceeded to Buffalo by lake and thence to New York and to Boston to attend the National Convention of the M. P. E. L. of America. Mr. Furniss gave out during his stay in Chicago that business was very fair with him in his houses in Duluth.

Peter J. Schaefer left for New York, Tuesday, July 9, where he will remain for a short time, on his way to the Boston convention. The national executive committee will meet Sunday, July 14.

William J. Sweeney, financial secretary of the national league, left the city Friday, July 12, for Boston ,and Alfred Hamburger and Robert R. Levy, members of the national executive committee, left Saturday morning by the Twentieth Century for the Bean City. Alfred Hamburger is chairman of the Illinois delegation. Other members of the Illinois delegation, both from down state and in the city, are expected to leave Sunday for the east.

John A. Kent Mutual's Milwaukee Manager.

John A. Kent was appointed manager of Mutual's Milwaukee branch last week. Five years ago Mr. Kent had charge of the General Film Company's special feature department in New York City and was afterward publicity and sales manager for the Great Northern Film Company, when Ingvald C. Oes was president of that organization. Mr. Kent held this position for two and one-half years and then took charge of Artcraft's foreign department until its consolidation with Paramount was affected in 1917. Since March of this year Mr. Kent has been working for Mutual as traveling salesman out of the Minneapolis office.

Mr. Kent stated, during a conversation, that Mutual's business in Minneapolis and adjoining territory is very good and, judging from the new additions to the program which will be made in the near future, he believes its product will be still higher in demand.

COOPER PHOTOGRAPHS AIR COMBAT.

Word has just been received here that Lieutenant Edwin R. Cooper, the first American officer to make motion picture films of airplanes in actual combat, has been decorated for bravery on the western front. The films he made high in the air will be shown in this country.

Open Market Hope of the Exhibitor

J. D. Williams Expresses Belief That "Programs" Will Soon Pass With Longer Runs and Individual Bookings.

FORCED attractions," said J. D. Williams to a representative of The World, "should be the term used to unmask the misnomer, 'program,' in the language of the trade—for that is exactly what 'programs' amount to." Mr. Williams made it clear that he was speaking as an individual in the expression of his opinion and not as general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

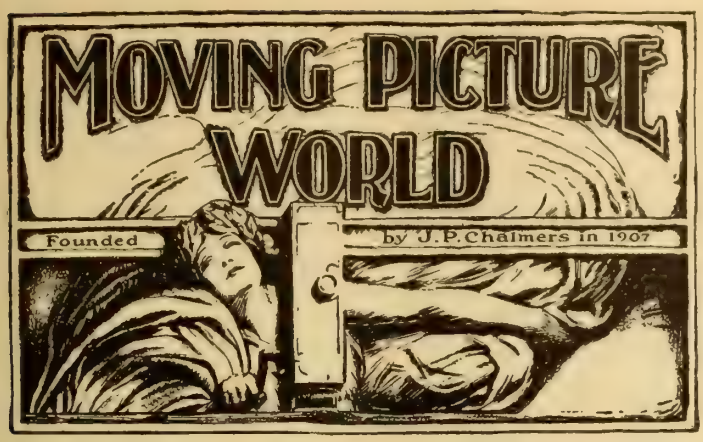
"Booking a program means that the exhibitor, to secure the stars that he desires to satisfy the demands of his patrons, must contract to also 'pay or play' other 'forced attractions' distributed by the 'program' firm. This is unjust not alone to the exhibitor but to his audiences," added Mr. Williams.

Declaring that stars most in favor would in future demand that they shall, through a personal representative, have a share in fixing the price their pictures shall collect from the exhibitor, Mr. Williams made his point clearer by indicating how the "star system," as now exploited by the manufacturer, would be an important factor in bringing about the open market.

"The Charley Chaplins, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickfords and other stars who have won exceptional favor with the public will not long be content to serve as the main attraction in a plan of distribution that uses them as a means to sell six or eight or a dozen lesser 'stars' to the exhibitors," said Mr. Williams. "The big moneymakers for the distributor and exhibitor are going to have their 'say' as to who shall play their pictures and how much shall be the rental—for the 'big fellows' on the screen are going to demand a share in the profits of the 'big fellows' who they enrich by their talents and popularity."

Such being the case Mr. Williams declared that exhibitors would insist upon going into the open market to secure all of their attractions. If the highest bidder should secure pictures made by a certain star in a specified territory (something the stars will, eventually, insist upon, as they will participate in the profits) the theory advanced by Mr. Williams would leave the exhibitor in a position to then insist upon an open market for every feature he shall play.

"Take the star out of a program," continued Mr. Williams, "and the 'forced attractions' would be brought into competition with every picture of equal merit—pictures without 'big names,' but, nevertheless, good pictures. Freed from the requirements of a contract that demanded 'everything on the program,' when there were no 'big names' to use as a leverage to make him sign contracts, the exhibitor will be able to give his patrons better pictures and with longer runs would get the full value out of every feature he played.



"When film stars with money-drawing personalities realize that they are beig used to perpetuate the 'forced attraction' plan and demand a share in the profits of their work the 'open market' will be here. In fact," said Mr. Milliams, "the 'open market' is so near at hand that showmen and manufacturers who have their own best interest at heart might just as well accept the 'open market' as having arrived."

Mr. Williams advocates longer runs, citing Australia, with more than 1,500 exhibitors, where there is not an instance of daily changes. Mr. Williams declares that in the matter of population to draw from the theaters of America have every advantage over those of Australia. With an exhibitor able to pick his own offerings Mr. Williams believes that longer runs will be the logical result—for the exhibitor will have an evenly balanced line of attractions that will warrant more days for every picture a theater shall present.

HODKINSON GETS MANY APPLICATIONS.

"In spite of our raising the barrier so high, and making it perfectly plain that we wanted only the highest grade of men, the response to our advertisements in last week's trade press has been enormous." This is the comment of one of the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and refers to the full page advertisement calling for big calibered men to compose a sales force to cover the entire territory.

This official further stated that an interesting fact developed in analyzing the large number of applications that came in, and that is the number of men in the field who have very clear ideas of the diseases this industry is suffering from and what must be done to remedy them in order that the industry may have a clean bill of health and continue to a prosperous, successful future.

Facts and Comments

READERS of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD who have been buying their favorite picture paper from their nearby newsdealer are advised that, beginning with the issue dated August 17, 1918, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will distribute its newsstand edition upon a non-returnable basis. The effect of this action will be to reduce the number of copies ordered by the newsdealer to those from which he has orders, so that, if you wish to continue getting your copy from your newsdealer it will be necessary for you to give him a definite order for it. Don't forget the date: Issue of August 17.

Our purpose in taking this step is to put the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in line with the movement for the conservation of National resources which has become necessary that we may, as a united Nation, meet the demands for war purposes. Already the Government has called upon the newspapers of the country to cut off all non-essential circulation for the purpose of saving paper. Soon, it is expected, a similar order will be issued to magazines and trade papers. Consequently, in making the MOVING PICTURE WORLD non-returnable, the publishers hope to anticipate the Government's action by getting in line with the conservation movement.

Another potent reason for this action is the recent extraordinary increase in postage on second-class periodicals caused by the act of Congress governing such matters. This act divides the United States into eight zones, carrying an increase in the postage rate all the way from 25 per cent. to 225 per cent. a pound. This extra cost must be taken up in some way. In going over the situation the publishers decided at once that no attempt would be made to pass the tax on to its subscribers, but would make up the loss in some other way. Making the publication non-returnable seemed to be the best solution. It is estimated that the saving thus effected will nearly cover the increased cost of postage without further curtailing our efforts to give the trade its favorite publication in its usual comprehensive form. In this emergency the thing for our newsstand buyers to do is to place their orders with their newsdealers at once or, better yet, send in to the home office an order for a year's subscription—it's the most economical in the long run.

THE appearance in the East of a representative of the Motion Picture War Service Association, which was organized in Los Angeles some months ago, brings out the fact that there is to be a duplication of effort in the legislative acceleration business at Washington unless there is an immediate getting together among the film men. In the first place the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has taken steps to open headquarters and to maintain a staff of influential members at Washington for the purpose of providing Congressional committees with information regarding the trade that will help in shaping tax schedules. In the second place the announcement is made that the M. P. W. S. A. of Los Angeles has engaged Ewell D. Moore of San Francisco, said to be a recognized tax expert, who will proceed to Washington to use his influence with Congress and that the coast association will open headquarters there. The question is: Who pays? And the answer: Wouldn't it be a good idea to get together to save hotel bills?

There is a more serious view of this matter which must not be overlooked. William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., has been in Washington for some time for the purpose of getting things properly straightened out. He says that the affairs of the trade in general are in good shape—100 per cent. good—and that the situation will not be improved by a multiplication of effort. We agree with Mr. Brady and would join him in insisting that a unity of action be determined upon at once.

War Realism

By Robert C. McElravy.

JUST how far should the producer of moving pictures go in depicting the horrors of warfare? This question has been asked many times in the past few years, and will no doubt continue to be asked for some time to come. It is a question that requires thought from several different angles in order to get anything like a satisfactory answer.

The first essential of any art is to entertain. That much may be put down as certain. It may astound or instruct or moralize or preach as much as it chooses, but to be welcomed by the public—or, in other words, to be successful—it must, over and above all else, entertain.

To successfully entertain the public it is necessary to have at least an approximate idea of the condition of the public mind. This varies greatly, and is swayed continually by events and changes of all sorts. The happenings in the world since August, 1914, have altered the public mind in many respects. They have brought into play deeper emotions and called up a welling of human sentiment beyond all precedent.

When the war began in Europe the disposition of our people here in America was to think and talk as little as possible about it. The magazines, many of them, decided not to mention the war at all. But this attitude, of course, was altered when America at length entered the conflict. War is now, very properly, the thing of first interest, and the main concern is how we and our allies may press it to a successful conclusion.

From the first moving pictures and the daily press have led the way in bringing home the full facts to the American people. The news dispatches have carried their verbal descriptions of events, and moving pictures have recorded them graphically upon the screen.

At just what point must the realism cease? Obviously it is not possible for the screen to deal with the subject of war without picturing much that is unpleasant. To exclude absolutely the horrors of war would be to miss the truth entirely. It would not be wise to do this, even to save the feelings of sensitive people. We are all sensitive when it comes to that, but by some providential process we harden and strengthen with the passing of time until we finally are able to face what comes resolutely.

Moving pictures have done much to strengthen our endurance. They have given us a valuable foretaste of the perils that were upon us. It has been much better to witness German atrocities upon the screen than it would have been to sit back quiescently until such atrocities were committed upon the streets of our towns and cities. The screen must be given credit for doing its part in arousing the nation to its present state of preparation.

The condition of the public mind has demanded this. It would be interested or attracted by nothing less than the truth. To bring this truth before the people it has been necessary to picture much of the violence of war, but in doing this we can but feel that the rules of good construction have usually prevailed. Even the most graphic productions have used moderation, and careful editing has usually excluded the lurid and impossible.

It is generally quite possible to tell in editing pictures after completion just what scenes are too strong or unnecessarily painful. There is certainly no desire on the part of the wise producer to overdo in these things, for in such an event he is the one who suffers. What the producer is trying to do is to keep the public alive to actual conditions and by so doing to help win the war. In this undertaking he has done much to deserve the thanks of this same public.

Let the screen reflect the realism of war within proper bounds so long as the safety and well-being of the country demands it. That is the answer to our question. When we and our allies are able to dictate a real peace the screen will be glad to turn to other fields of interest.

What Are Stories Worth?

By Epes W. Sargent.

RECENT announcement by a film manufacturer that he was ready to pay as high as $25,000 for a motion picture story worth that much raises the interesting speculation as to how much stories really are worth. It is safe to say that there will be few, if any, stories valued at the top price, and yet another "Birth of a Nation" would be cheap at any price. Yet the story of that production was not, in itself, the secret of success. It was not until it had been cleverly adapted to the screen that its value as a film play became apparent. In its original form it might not have carried similar appeal.

It is to be presumed that if $25,000 ever is paid for a single story for the screen it will be for a widely advertised play or book right, and four-fifths of the value will be in advertising rather than in story. Twenty-five thousand dollars would represent a fair return for the average best seller, and not many best sellers are worth that sum as film material, for few will transfer to the screen the elements which made the printed story so successful; indeed many stories which have given pleasure on the screen have been but indifferent fiction material, for the very reason that they were better suited to photoplay presentation.

It is only logical to assume that the best photoplay story is one written with the film-medium in mind rather than one first written as fiction, because fiction commands better prices, and then made over into a film play. But few direct-for-the-screen plays would be worth the top price, and few authors capable of writing material worth these prices will care to bother with the uncertainties of film production because he knows that a poorly produced story will detract from his reputation and he has found that his stories do not translate well to the screen, largely perhaps because he has not made a sufficient study of the new medium.

Photoplay is not a matter of story alone, though story is the foundation of success. It is a good story plus sympathetic production, plus intelligent acting and adequate mounting. The director, the player, the scene painter and the property man are alike factors in the success or failure of a story, along with the author, and authors capable of writing direct film plays worth $25,000 will not bother to study the new medium until they are more positively assured of intelligent co-operation all along the line. They cannot afford to place their reputations as writers into the hands of so many others whose interest and ability are untried factors. It will be a long time before the $25,000 film play will be reached, but meantime, just what should be the top price for an original play?

Basing Profits on Production

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN clinging to an autocratic commercial system, that of attaching production to distribution and basing costs on the two combined, it seems reasonable to consider a complete detachment of the two fields of effort, not on account of the quantity demand for moving pictures, but because of the character of that demand in relation to specific quality of product. It is the strictly commercial idea to think of these art products as constituting a mere commodity manufactured for home consumption to a large degree and a lesser one for exportation.

That idea has grown out of supplying a settled market for a certain amount of staples fairly well established in public demand.

Now the native beauty, charm and directness of this new art of expression, not the average examples shown, are responsible for the opulence of early birds who were bold pioneers and explorers, and for the unexpected wealth of men who are now weighing down production with distributive costs to an extent that means serious injury to the business as a whole.

It is the strictly commercial idea to push the sale of a product.

Rarely it has quality, more often it has not.

This system diverts to distributive offices, organization, employes and general expense, an outlay which might be warranted in some lines of business, but which lowers the effectiveness of motion picture production to a point where releases can only be marketed by elaborate organization and costly methods. This drain on actual picture values is due to the fact that very few producers have fully grasped the significance of what they are handling and its relation to public demand.

There are fears shown that the market may be glutted.

There are attempts at combination and exchange control.

There is no trade secret about the fact that a much shrewder degree of salesmanship and a more costly system of selling are necessary to dispose of inferior goods than in the case of those whose general fine quality markets them on sight, but your keen business man is more instinctively a seller of goods than maker of them, especially of that kind which requires novelty of design and originality of treatment to respond to each season's demands. Give him something to sell, anything from a cake of soap to a submarine, and he will manage to dispose of it at a profit. At that game he may be 100 per cent. efficient.

He fully appreciates the importance of the department he best understands, and he throws in the "overhead" when he figures manufacturing cost.

Thus it is that his features run ten or fifteen thousand dollars a reel according to his method of determining costs.

Thus it is also that actual picture values do not average 50 per cent. of the nominated cost of production.

Every man who knows the history of moving pictures knows also that many concerns capitalized in the millions, organized and managed by capable business men, equipped with fine distributive facilities, have gone down and out, almost forgotten, through managerial inability to grasp the relative value and importance of true artistry in production.

Their studios are idle or in process of gradual decay.

It will be eventually discovered that the most effective system in the long run holds out the brightest opportunity to artistry, not of the reflective and imitative kind, but that more truly scientific which treats the art as one to stand on a basis purely its own. It will consider only authors, directors and actors who understand screen requirements and are equipped by nature or experience, not for some other art of expression, but for that in which they work, to which they are best suitted.

There can be no such thing as overproduction of high quality.

That kind is limited by the very nature of their composition.

Cost of production can then be based on picture values up to the completion of the negative. High quality in all departments, both artistic and scientific, at once simplifies distribution almost to the point of making salesmanship a lost art, as forgotten as the old concerns which gave it precedence a few years ago. Right production means the elimination of distributive waste and greater profits for all.

Seeing Is Believing

By Edward Weitzel.

COMING out of a moving picture theater recently, a young woman turned to her escort and delivered a terse criticism of the picture they had just witnessed:

"That was the most exasperating photoplay I've ever looked at! I couldn't see the expression on the faces of the characters more than half the time!"

The young woman was absolutely correct. There were any amount of beautiful bits of landscape in the picture, most of the action taking place in the open. The hero and his sweetheart wandered beneath giant trees or stood within the shadow of huge overhanging rocks, and the spectator was given a choice selection of scenery to admire. As to following the story by watching the faces of the men and women who figured in the plot, that was frequently impossible. The light often was so obscured that the characters on the screen were only dimly outlined, and the dramatic tension was entirely lost.

Seeing is believing. Patrons of the spoken stage expect to be able to hear everything that is said during a performance, and any member of a cast who failed to make himself heard would quickly be dismissed. Spectators at a moving picture theater have the same right to follow every thought and action of the human beings reflected on the screen, through the medium of their eyes, and no piece of natural background, no matter how striking and how wonderfully laced with shadows, offers a valid excuse for holding up the action of the plot because the faces of the characters are hidden by want of proper lighting.

Screen drama requires the services of directors who know how to keep the human interest of a story always in the foreground. The class of experts known as art directors are useful in helping to prepare the backgrounds of a picture; but the grip of the photoplay begins to weaken the moment one of these gentlemen is allowed to dominate any of the scenes.

MARROUN TO JOIN GERMAN COLONY.

Hans Marroun, the nineteen-year-old German who several weeks ago created a panic in the Globe theater, 614 Canal street, New Orleans, when he attempted to destroy the picture "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will not worry any more motion picture patrons during the war. Marroun has been ordered interned for the period of the war and cannot see that dear Hamburg, as he calls his native place.

"Zuni Kicking Races" (Mutual-Outing-Chester).

THE July 21 release of the Outing-Chester pictures through the Mutual Film Corporation brings the spectator in contact with one of the oldest races of the American continent—the Zuni Indians of New Mexico. Here this interesting race of people live in the pueblos of their forefathers, following in many respects in their footsteps. The kicking race, which is the chief topic of this particular number, gives all the details, from the religious ceremonies, with which it is ushered in, to the finish. In the beginning of the reel we are made acquainted with the Zunis and with their chief industry—the making of pottery. The actual shaping of the clay bowls and the ornamenting and baking of same is shown. Then we come to the race, which includes betting as keen as at any modern function of the sort. The race concerns the barefoot kicking of a piece of stick perhaps for miles over the cactus covered plains, while other Indians on horseback follow to watch and applaud. An unusually interesting reel.

"Celebrities of the Insect World" (Universal).

In Screen Magazine No. 80 beetles and scarabs and crickets are dealt with. The luminous beetle, one of the most striking of its kind, comes first, drawing attention to its queer habit of snapping up and turning over. The lobes on the head of this insect are responsible for its remarkable radiance, which is sufficient to allow of reading the time on a watch in a darkened room. Male and female of the scarab family are given second place, and thirdly the cricket, which is perhaps the most common. He sings by rubbing together his brittle wings. Lastly the walking-stick insect, whose heart is weak, causing him to move slowly, is introduced. He is a strange looking specimen, and is splendidly equipped by nature to fool his enemies.

"May Irwin's Farm" (Universal).

One of the most fascinating subjects in the 80th issue of the Screen Magazine takes us to the island farm of May Irwin. Here, if the picture speaks the truth, she feeds her own chickens, pickles her own peaches, milks her own cows, or some of them, and makes her own butter. Of course, we will assume that Miss Irwin has plenty of help in keeping up the splendid establishment which is shown in the picture, and one cannot help envying her the milk and cream from those splendid Jersey cows.

"The Isle of Cuba" (General Film).

This excellent number of the Harold H. Horton series of "Travel Impression" gives a clear and interesting idea of modern Cuba. He doesn't forget to draw attention to the cleanliness of the streets of Havana against the filthy condition which prevailed in some parts of the city previous to Colonel Waring's regime. Included in the points of interest are Moro Castle, Plaza Emperado and Case de Bonifaci. Characteristic features, such as narrow streets and the walking dairy, ornate balconies and massive grilles, are shown. The colonias, or sugar cane plantations, showing the natives at work cutting and loading the sugar cane, are interesting. The towns of Camaguey and Neuvitas are also shown.

Pathe's Contribution

Second Number of Allied Official War Review Contains Choice Glimpses from Battlefronts.

THE Allied Official War Review, which is being handed to the public from the Committee on Public Information through the Pathe exchanges, is well compiled and contains material of special interest. The second number, opening with desert battleships in the shape of a military camel train crossing the desert, follows up with a view of Italian troops on the march and an Italian artillery bombardment at Monte Tomba. Italian infantry rushing into battle over shell-swept ground includes also the scaling of a mountain wall. Thousands of Austrians taken prisoners finishes this chapter of the picture. In another portion of the film the Irish cavalry charging at the battle of Cambrai furnishes a thrilling item, and not less thrilling to the American heart is the pictured group of American engineers who recently threw down pick and shovel to drive back the Huns. There is also a British tank returning from battle and the remains of a French regiment going to a well deserved rest.

Motion Pictures in Rural Churches

Orrin G. Cocks Gives Advice to Isolated Communities Whereby Public Meeting Places May Be Used to Advantage During Idle Hours.

THE July issue of the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committee for Better Films contains the following timely dissertation by Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, on the advantages offered by the church, library or public hall of rural communities as places of healthful diversion during the week:

Most small country towns in the United States are suffering from stagnation. Yes, s-t-a-g-n-a-t-i-o-n! It is not necessary to argue the matter; every one recognizes it. No wonder the young people from the surrounding country wish to leave at the earliest possible moment for the cities. They are full of energy and want action and amusement after work. They are, however, lacking in initiative and depend upon their elders for community leadership.

The plea of lack of money is usually advanced for doing nothing. Some of the town leaders hold that the church, the library, or the public hall is so sacred that it cannot be used for motion pictures. The church is the logical place. Throughout the whole week it graces the landscape with closed doors when it might become the center of the social life of the community and attract the young people nightly for miles around. Your cheerful lighted church may become a beacon and a magnet for idle young people.

But how can the money be found for the original investment? Some communities will never know until they canvass the community how easy it is to raise the five or six hundred dollars necessary to purchase a machine, screen, booth and other equipment. The funds raised locally may often be supplemented by gifts of well-to-do persons born in the community, who now have a sentimental interest in their home town. If the home missionary boards and boards of Sunday school work of the different denominations would learn the lesson being taught by the War Council of the Y. M. C. A. in their cantonment work they would cheerfully offer to supplement the funds raised by these country churches. It is possible also for several towns conveniently located to share the expense for traveling machines and equipment, and exhibit motion pictures on succeeding nights of the week.

Years ago the story was current that good films did not exist. This may have been true fifteen years ago, but such an absolute falsehood should no longer be perpetuated. The world is full of them now. They rank with the best books in country libraries and put to shame the books on the shelves of the Sunday school libraries. Moreover, if a little business ability is displayed these films can be obtained regularly each week from the motion picture exchange for a small daily rental. Assistance in the selection of such films can be obtained from the National Board of Review for the asking.

A number of wideawake country ministers have discovered how powerfully the motion picture can aid them in building up their congregations and have boldly entered this field on the week nights. They have discovered that the initial investment has soon been met by the charges for admission and have gathered together funds which they have been able to use for other social purposes. This not only meets a social need, but is a money-maker, and is tenfold more profitable than church suppers, with far less expense or labor. Officials in the churches may well follow the lead of the Rev. Moses Breeze, the secretary of the Presbyterian movement in Ohio, who urges the use of motion pictures as an aid in making effective rural church centers. Fine week day entertainments will transform many a dying rural church into a denominational asset.

"Fighting Along the Piave"

The Rivoli Theater Exhibits Pictures Showing Scenes of Military Preparation and Actual Battle.

A SERIES of views along the Piave river exhibited at the Rivoli theater during the week of June 30 give a realistic illustration of the vigor with which the Italians are pursuing the business of war. Through these pictures which were shown through the courtesy of the Italo-North-American-Commercial Union an excellent idea of the marshy approach to the river can be had, and also the dangers which must necessarily attend that portion of Italy when the mountain streams precipitate their overflow into the valley and swell the Piave far beyond its shallow banks.

The scenes include the mounting of big guns on floats on the river, and the hauling of cannon into the interior. Thrilling glimpses of actual warfare with here and there a man falling to his death the victim of an Austrian shell. It is said that this is the first time that this particular group of scenes have been publicly exhibited in America.

Items of Interest.

The 82nd release of the Screen Magazine contains the life story of the bull frog presented an interesting detail, and the cutting and transporting of railroad ties obtained in our national forests as its featured subjects. This reel closes with a cartoon comedy by Hy Mayer.

The Educational Films Corporation of America re-issued during the past week two splendid scenics entitled "Wonderful Niagara" and "The Cruise of the Quickern'ell." The cartoon issue of the week of July 7 was also of good quality and was entitled "War Gardens" which depicts Mamma Katzenjammer being attacked by the family goat while caring for the family beans. The jumping beans devoured by the goat and a few by Mamma K. have peculiar effects.

The Rivoli Animated Magazine for the week of June 30 contained some unusually interesting material including the manufacture of locomotives, Southern farmers for the first time in many years raising wheat instead of cotton, Joffre welcoming Americans in France, and American artillerymen manning a French 400.

GOLDWYN PROUD OF ITS QUINTET OF DIRECTORS.

Goldwyn begin its second releasing year the first week in September with a roster of directors of which it has every reason to be proud. Reginald Barker, Hobart Henley, George Irving, Charles Giblyn and Clarence G. Badger are five names to conjure with in picture production. Each is a master of his craft.

Reginald Barker, with a brilliant record of achievement in other fields, has come to Goldwyn to direct Geraldine Farrar. The carefulness of his studied craftsmanship has been demonstrated in the "takes" of this stars' first Goldwyn Picture already developed and shown in the projection room of the Fort Lee studios.

Hobart Henley has gained nationwide fame under the Goldwyn trademark as director of Mae Marsh. Many directors have tried with mediocre success to transmit the elusive, almost intangible personality of this star to the finished film; almost as many have failed. Not so Hobart Henley.

Clarence C. Badger has directed three productions for Goldwyn, all with signal success. His first, "The Floor Below," a Mabel Normand starring vehicle, though highly successful everywhere, was exceeded in popularity by the same star's succeeding picture, "The Venus Model," just now at the height of its run throughout the country. Following these two he directed Madge Kennedy's new picture, "Friend Husband," now completed and to be released August 11. Mr. Badger, a former newspaper man, brought to his work for the screen the sense of story values inherent in the work of men who write for metropolitan journals together with a keen sense of the dramatic and a grasp of the comic possibilities of a script.

George Irving made his Goldwyn bow as director for Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods" following an eminently successful career in the service of other producing companies. Goldwyn is certain his work in this production will prove anew to the admirers of his technical skill that no mistake was made in selecting him to supervise it.

Charles Giblyn's enviable record with other stars promises to be further enhanced by his work with Tom Moore, Goldwyn's newest luminary, in the first production this masculine star has made for this company. To the thousands who know Mr. Giblyn's work it is enough to say that he has surpassed his best in this production.

Mastbaum Memorial Dedicated

Late Exhibitor's Friends Attend Services at the Hospital Structure Which Will Shelter Ten Tubercular Patients.

IN the presence of hundreds of persons prominent in the motion picture and theatrical world, the Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Building was dedicated Sunday, June 23, at Eaglesville, near Norristown, Pa. Tributes to the late Mr. Mastbaum as a man and a friend were paid by the speakers during the simple but impressive services.

Judge M. Patterson, the principal speaker, told of his friendship for Mr. Mastbaum. "Stanley Mastbaum, a great friend and a great worker, represented work and good fellowship," said Judge Patterson. "The stage has long been renowned for its power in the education of the people, but this man saw the possibility of spreading that influence even further through the medium of moving pictures. In every way he stood for the production of decent photoplays, and did all within his power to perfect this industry.

"Many of his hidden charities will never be known, he went about his work quietly, leaving a trail for others to follow. Unfortunately he died before he reached the meridian of his accomplishments, but usefulness is measured by deeds and not by years, and this building dedicated to his memory is proof that his principles will never die."

Lawrence D. Beggs, chairman of the memorial committee, presented the building to the Board of Trustees of the institution, and President Louis Gerstley on behalf of the board, made a speech of acceptance. Brief addresses were made by State Senator Edwin H. Vare and Richard J. Beamish. The services were opened with an invocation by Rev. Keon H. Emalah, and several musical numbers were offered by the Stanley theater orchestra.

Before the dedicatory exercises a bronze tablet, bearing this inscription, was unveiled: "In memory of Stanley V. Mastbaum, citizen of Philadelphia, director of the institution, man of affairs, philanthropist and patron of art, 1918."

The Mastbaum Memorial Building, funds for which were obtained through Mr. Mastbaum's friends, will be used as a men's infirmary. The committee which had the funds in charge consisted of Lawrence D. Beggs, Abe L. Einstein, Abe Sablosky, John McGuirk, Frank W. Buhler, Charles Segall, Louis Sablosky and C. J. Cunningham.

The new building has accommodations for ten patients. The rooms are large and cheerful and there are recreation rooms and sleeping porches. It is equipped with the most modern medical appliances for the treatment of tuberculosis Memorial services will be held at the sanitorium April 1, Mr. Mastbaum's birthday.

MILTON SILLS LEADING MAN FOR FARRAR.

Goldwyn's intention to surround Farrar with all-star casts in each of her Goldwyn productions is given further proof with the news that Milton Sills will be Miss Farrar's leading man in her second production to be made in Fort Lee.

Mr. Sills will arrive in New York this week from California ready for work, having just finished an engagement with Clara Kimball Young. His screen career has been one of unbroken successes.

Two years ago he was the leading man in "The Honor System," a most successful production, and immediately thereafter was engaged as leading man in the widely exploited serial "Patria." He also has appeared in "The Deep Purple," "Chasms," "The Fringe of Society" and "Struggle Everlasting."

The engagement of Mr. Sills was made by Samuel Goldfish on his recent trip to California. It adds to the Goldwyn roster one more well known name of the theatre and screen.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

House Signatures.

TRADE marks are considered to be of such value that the governments of the nations provide special protection for them, yet few theaters take the trouble to design a special signature for their house names, and yet the house signature can be made an advertising factor of the utmost value. Don't be in too much of a hurry to adopt a signature. Take it easy. Have several made, and try them out before deciding upon the one you shall use permanently, but once you have decided upon a design proceed to put it on everything. Paint it over the house, and again on the glass of the box office window, place it upon the entrance and exit doors, upon your stationery, have horse blankets made if you use a street wagon, and have cuts made in all sizes from half an inch to the width of a three-sheet if you use them. Keep the signature so prominent that the very outline will suggest the house. It will make money for you by bringing business, and it will save money by reducing the size of the display necessary to get the house name over in an advertisement. If you have the right sort of a signature you can get as good a display from a half-inch cut as you can by putting the same name in inch letters in regular type, and the half-inch display will not be so wide and will be more readily recognized. Your house is more profitable to you than any one film. Spend as much money in getting a proper signature as you would upon a single release. It will bring a far larger return. Go to a first class artist instead of a sign painter, but make certain that the design you accept is as plain as would be the work of the lesser artist, for the primary requirement is legibility in all sizes and under all conditions.

Ruff Did It.

Everyone is getting tired of seeing Bill Hart with two guns in his hands, but about the only way to get a picture of him without guns is to photograph the back of his neck or to sneak up on him in the bath tub. Ralph Ruffner did manage to get hold of a picture showing him using a cross cut saw, but that was only good for one picture, and to advertise "Selfish Yates" he used Bill's boots, which are as characteristic as his guns and a lot newer to readers of advertising. The other half of the cut shows Ruff's last effort in Portland with a reverse cut for the title balancing the signature at the head of the display. The two scene cuts do not mean much, but when few scene cuts ever do or ever will until manufacturers get men who can turn out decent advertising material for their press departments.

An N. O. Program.

Maurice F. Barr, of the Strand, New Orleans, one of the Saenger houses, got out a special cover for the program to announce the coming of "My Four Years in Germany," with a picture of the former Ambassador and caricatures of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince. The program is a sixteen and cover, but the program proper is badly cramped, the house getting but an inch and a half or two inches to each 8½-inch type page. Even at the cost of hurting some advertiser's feelings enough space should be taken to get the program for a day on a single page, instead of two or more. In theory, at least, the program is for the convenience of the patron and not for the advertiser. Here the advertiser gets the best of it, though the underline readers are given straight pages in the back part of the issue. There is a puzzle page with prizes for answers that is supposed to keep the program in demand, but with so much space at command we think the program could be made much more interesting at no greater expense. It keeps too much to the advertising end—both its own and trade advertising.

Waiting For Ruff.

A. A. Bruce, of the Rialto, Butte, Montana, writes that he is filling in as advertising man waiting the arrival of Ralph Ruffner, who is to replace A. C. Raleigh. He sends in a couple of examples of his work. One of these is a seven-fourteens and the other four-seventeens. The latter is for The Spirit of '17. It is a fine example of sketchy lettering. It does not seem to belong to the title at all, but to be some sort of ornamentation. Everybody is doing this particular style of unreadable lettering, so Mr. Bruce is by no means alone, but custom does not make the lettering good and sixty-four column inches of space that does not give a legible title is thrown away. The Pickford advertisement is better, but the lettering is partly obscured by the sketch design. There is a lack of selling argument in this space. It is announced that "In his story Bret Harte made M'liss a wild, harum-scarum girl with a spirit as proud and undaunted as a prairie mustang." That may be interesting, but what Miss Pickford makes of her is what the audience is interested in. Nothing is said about that. The layouts are well done, but there is needed some selling talk, even with the best layouts, but Mr. Bruce is not an advertising man, but assistant manager, and he has done very well for a starter.

Thrown In.

The Index, the house organ of the Fenray, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, gets out a red, white and blue cover for the showing of My Four Years in Germany. It looks unusually good, but the inside is still shy any column rules. A late idea is a half page on the inside back cover giving a list of advertisers with "These are the progressive business houses that enable us to give you this service. Please patronize them." As the address and line of trade is given as well as the name, it serves as a business directory. The idea is a good one where you have a large program with many advertisers. The trade directory alone is a good scheme where you have only a four-pager and cannot get more than a couple of dollars a month from any particular advertiser.

Start It Right.

The First National Publicity sent out a flimsy commenting upon the experience of an exhibitor who opened My Four Years in Germany to 1,245 persons and increased gradually to 2,324 on Friday, with 4,032 on Saturday. We do not think this so good a showing as the First National does. With an apparent capacity in excess of four thousand on the day, we think that the figures should have topped half that on the opening and have gone to at least 3,000 for the remainder of the week. Had the subject been properly circussed we think this would have been the case and need only point to the campaign of S.

Barret McMormick with the same offering. He started off on the jump and played to more people than the city is credited with by the census. That's advertising. Playing to only 45 per cent. of the town is letting the film do most of its own advertising after the opening.

Works For Both.

A. L. Middleton pretty well covers the science of advertising in sending in a full-page display in the local paper. Mr. Middleton runs the Queen theater in De Queen, Ark., and he writes:

> I know right now you are going to say: "Entirely too much copy, my boy—in fact, a plenty for two pages the size of this."
> But you must remember this—a county weekly paper—the only paper read by a large majority of the people I want to reach with my newspaper advertising, and that they read every word in the BEE and then read it over again—advertisements and all, for it's a week until they have anything to read again.
> Advertising in a local county weekly paper is not like advertising in the big metropolitan dailies.
> There, where there is so much to read and the people who get it have so little time to read that only something that stands out with a PUNCH is noticed, but here they read, as I say, every word.
> At any rate I figure my Amusement Herald shall carry a more pointed and shorter message to the people in town who would probably not read any kind of an ad in the Bee, while I try to reach the rural prospect with a simple—no matter how long—article that will appeal to them, and it finds its mark and brings home the bacon.

We were not going to say too much copy, for we know that the farmer reads his weekly paper religiously. It would be entirely too much for town use, but we have frequently commented upon Mr. Middleton's Herald. But between his own Herald and the local paper he gets both classes of possible patrons just as Steve Farrar gets his crowd with a

Don't let anything keep you from seeing this big Western serial start.

Everybody likes a red-blooded adventure story, and when the scenes are laid in the vast expanses of the mountainous West, and the stars are William Duncan and Carol Holloway as hero and heroine and Geo. Holt as villain, we know what to expect.

house program and throwaways. The thing to do is not to go by the rules, but to study your own particular problem and meet that. What makes business for Mr. Middleton would be waste for an exhibitor in a larger town, but there is some combination you can work to reach everyone in your territory if only you will take the pains to study it out. Mr. Middleton makes use of a good argument when he points out that everyone has something to sell and gets more for it today than they did last year and the year before, while his prices have remained unchanged while the show is better.

Play Up the House.

J. F. Relyea, publicity man for the Glove and Family theaters, Gloversville, N. Y., sends in samples, and says:

> You will please find three ads inclosed from the regular run used for our Glove theater. I would be greatly obliged to know your opinion of them. For the second day we use a smaller one-column space.
> The three ads from our Family theater include one three-column display, which style we usually use in announcing the opening of a three-day bill. The smaller ones are two styles; we would like to have you tell us which you think the best to use for follow-up during the other two days. On Saturday, however, we almost always go back to a three-column space about 3 or 4 inches deep.

Probably in Gloversville they are trained to know the signs, but on general principles we think that the house signature is slighted. With the exception of the single column advertisements the signature is sunk into the advertisement, as is shown in these two displays. They while the column display is nearly eight inches deep. A second single is about four inches, and unless the advertisement is crowded on the page we think that this is a better length for a second or third day advertisement than the longer drop. Four inches is large enough to show in most instances and more than that is a waste if the preparation is properly done in the opening advertisement. In larger places, where an appeal is made more to a transient trade, you must go after business every day, but with a patronage largely resident we think that a reminder advertisement is sufficient where the initial display is well done. It will be noticed that the Family is a vaudeville house, but uses the picture for the headline. The advertisement reproduced isolates the picture very nicely from the remainder of the advertisement, while keeping it a part of the display. The average is good both as to layout and display, save for the concealed signature.

Changed to the Service.

Edward L. Hyman, of the Victoria, Buffalo, has joined the service, and is managing one of the cantonment theaters. He was at Camp Wheeler, Ga., but by this time has probably been advanced to one of the "blue" circuit houses, which play only the larger attractions. He does not have to do as much advertising, but it takes real managing to run a camp theater, and his advancement shows that he has made good.

Good Advice.

The Lucas Theater Supply House, Atlanta, has been sending out cards printed up

What you do
DO IT RIGHT

We think that most managers who got one of these sent it up to the operator to hang up, but one should be hung over the desk at which the manager himself plans the advertising.

Organ Prices.

Now another small house is installing a $30,000 pipe organ. This is a comedown from the usual $50,000 installation, but we think that the $30,000 is not all in cash. Why is it necessary to exaggerate so?

Moore Tarzan.

Here is the way Tom Moore, of Washington, thinks a lobby should be displayed for Tarzan of the Apes. He did not turn the job over to his property man, but hired one of the local florists to get up the display, and Washington florists of the right sort have had such experience in decorating for state receptions that they can do almost anything. This is an exceptionally well-planned lobby, and the grotto suggestion is well carried out. The monks are from Wormwood's animal act, a well known vaudeville specialty. One of them acted as ticket-taker, following the lead of the New York presentation. A jungle setting was used for the stage, preserved palms being worked in with the painted cloths to get a good effect.

Don't Waste It.

Even though it may cost only ten cents an inch advertising space is too valuable to waste. Don't clutter it up with foolish cuts and ornamental rule work or try to paint pictures with type metal. Do not take a whole page if you have only half a page to say, and be brief and to the point even in the half page. On the other hand do not crowd a page into half the space. But too many exhibitors think that taking a full page is the last word in advertising elegance, and they take the page when they have not that much to say, and then fill it so full of other material that even the page is too small.

Special for Gerard.

L. L. Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corp., Louisville, sends in a special extra gotten out for My Four Years in Germany, and adds that "it seems to be an effective medium for advertising patriotic and timely features." It is a single sheet about 18 by 25, the front

The page copy is by no means new, but it is timely and pertinent, being a good deal more effective, in fact, as a single page than it would be if run in a newspaper. Mr. Gardner promised [illegible] to send a man to Simla, some forty miles to the east where scientists had decided that shooting the eclipse would be most easy. It so happened that clouds obscured the sun in Colorado Springs all the afternoon and nothing was seen of the eclipse. Sunday morning's paper came out with this announcement as a part of a four column

With characteristic forethought and determination to always show the VERY LATEST and BEST pictures regardless of the cost, the management of the PRINCESS THEATER in co-operation with the PHOTO-CRAFT SHOP, at great expense for special apparatus, yesterday sent an expert camera man to Simla, Colo., where pictures showing the

were made. This is a distinct achievement in long-distance photography, photographing an object estimated by scientists to be

MANY MILLION MILES AWAY

These views will be shown exclusively at the PRINCESS THEATER TOMORROW and TUESDAY. The astronomers calculated the time of the eclipse to the second, but on account of cloudy weather yesterday, the showing in Colorado Springs was postponed until tomorrow at the PRINCESS.

No advance notice was given and the copy for the Sunday issue was not sent in until ten o'clock Saturday evening when the negatives had been developed and it was certain that there would be pictures to show. Also the delay prevented the possibility of some other management getting hold of some amateur negatives. The ten pictures shown were later made into postcards from which we reproduce the set. The result was a scoop and a big business, for those who missed the actual eclipse were anxious to see it in photograph at least. The pictures might easily have been faked, but they really are genuine pictures of the event, and it was a bit of real enterprise to offer them to patrons the following day.

Gets the Prices.

The Crescent, Belzoni, Miss., sends in a card for comment, the chief feature of which is the scale of prices: twenty cents for children under twelve and forty cents for all others. The card is an announcement of a special feature, and though poorly printed, the copy is well prepared and it will more than do its work. It runs:

On next Friday, June 14th, we are offering an excellent Photoplay,

"THE LIGHT AT DUSK"

The story of a man who sacrificed everything and removed every obstacle aside that he might gain fame and riches, but the way in which he is made to see the error of his way and repent makes this production one of the classics of the screen. We have personally seen this picture, and we vouch for it that it is an offering you will enjoy until the very last scene. We will be delighted if you will honor us with your presence. First show begins 8:30 sharp, second 9:45 P. M.

Very truly yours,

THE CRESCENT THEATER.

Admission—Children under 12 years 20 cents; adults, 40 cents.

We like the tone of the announcement. It tells something of the picture and tells also that the management has seen it and knows it to be good. We think that the card, simple as it is, will pull more than a hundred throwaways loaded down with superlatives. When you get back to your rattrap that way and gain their confidence you can get the prices you ask because they will be convinced.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

A. C. and the Three-Wing Shutter.

From the West comes the following:

> Will you kindly explain just the disadvantage of using a three-wing shutter on A. C., as against a two-winger; or is there any big difference? As I understand it, with a 2-wing shutter and A. C. there will at times be a flash or glare of light on the screen. Is there a pulsating effect of light and darkness also? My situation is this: Am using a Baird projector with A. C. and fairly good results. Have been able to trim about 15 per cent. of the original shutter blade off without travel ghost, but seem to get a pulsating effect. I am, however, inclined to attribute this to the arc itself, due to fluctuating line voltage, because at times it is as steady and clear as with direct current. Of course the really right thing to do would be to install D. C., owing to speed of Baird shutter, which equals, in effect, the three-wing shutter of other projectors. D. C. is, however, out of the question, and was wondering if we would gain enough in effect by putting in a slower shutter gear and a shutter adapted to A. C. This expense would be $20.
> Another thing: Am using an Edison transformer on 110 volts. Have a special pole transformer. By "special" I mean that no one else takes current through it. The juice is 50 cycles. Would it tend to brighten my light to change to 220? Am I using the right sort of transformer? In other words, do you consider the Edison transformer as being equal to the Preddy and other makes? As you can see, I know but little about these matters and have come to the conclusion that you are the only one who can put me right. Am using one concave-convex lens next the arc, with an ordinary plano-convex outside, 6.5 and 7.5. Believe with steady light I would get along all right. Business in this place will not justify installation of current-rectifying apparatus.

As to the transformer, the Edison is an excellent device. It is not quite as convenient to handle in making changes of current strength as some of the others, but electrically it is O. K. Changing to 110 volts would have no effect in so far as screen brilliancy be concerned, and it is easier stuff to handle. If the trouble is due to unsteady line voltage you might get better results from the 220, since the fluctuation may be due to overload on one side of the system. But this seems hardly probable, as the line voltage is 2,200, unless you are using a lot of current for your theater. Your Edison transformer will handle 220, however, so the making of the change would not cost you anything, and if they will make a trial installation of a 220-volt transformer you could easily determine the matter.

As to the shutter, here is the dope: You have a handbook. Turn to page sixteen. Study the action of A. C. You will observe that the current fluctuates from zero voltage (no voltage at all) to maximum voltage 120 times per second with 60-cyle current; 100 times with yours. This means that 100 times per second your current value is zero and the crater brilliancy is maintained merely by its own heat. But it is not maintained at maximum brilliancy. Alternating current illumination is never even. It is really a series of brilliant flashes and comparative dullness. True, the action is so rapid with 60-cycle, or even with 50-cycle current, that to the ordinary eye it is entirely invisible. But if by any method we could place an opaque shade in front of the crater and remove it when the voltage is at zero, and keep doing this, we would instantly discern the difference, since we would then get only the brilliancy due to the crater brilliancy at its point of lowest temperature. And that is exactly what may happen when a three-wing shutter is used with 60-cycle current. But the effect will be obtained only when the projector is run at a certain speed, so that the shutter blades are timed to synchronize with the alterations, and that speed could hardly be maintained for any considerable period of time. The least change in speed in either generator or projector would operate to throw the shutter and alterations out of time, and we thus have the "flashing" effect, which is really a rather rapid change from bright to dull, or vice versa. With 50-cycle current and a three-wing shutter we have the following: At 60 feet per minute the shutter blades cut light 2,880 time sa minute. Times light at lowest value is 100 x 60 equals 6,000. Impossible to get synchronism you say? Right, but one-half of that is 3,000, and you can easily, by just a bit of change in speed, or a bit of change of speed of the power-house generator, get into synchronism with one side of the alterations, which is sufficient to give the effect in very pronounced manner.

Proof: When the effect is not present and everything is working satisfactorily, very slowly increase the speed of projection. If you don't get the effect, then try decreasing. If you get it, try it two or three times, and if speed change brings on the trouble, you have nailed Mr. Difficulty. Remedy: Avoid speed which will synchronize or get the gears you speak of, though the two-winger will give much more flicker. If you are unable to get the effect after several trials, changing speed very slowly and watching very closely, then the trouble lies elsewhere and you had best try the 220 volts. Possibly the advent of the new Westinghouse low-priced mercury arc rectified and the new low-priced Breco converter may bring current-rectifying apparatus within your reach.

Spherical Aberration Useful.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, to whom I give credit as being, in my humble opinion, the best posted man in this country in the practical optics of the projector, says:

> You may possibly remember what I said some time ago about spherical aberration being useful in smoothing out the light at the aperture, friend Solar being the only one who seemed to agree with me at that time. Do you know why the corrugated lens used with the Mazda gives a more even illumination at the screen than does the plano-convex type? It is for the simple reason that it has more spherical aberration and breaks up the image of the filament more effectively.

Granting this to be true, provided the film plane be in advance of the ghost area, what "evening up" is there to be accomplished with the arc lamp beam; also, do not the ill effects of spherical aberration more than counterbalance any possible gain through evening up of light intensity in the ray? Mind you, I am not certain as to just how far I am right in assuming there is very little to be broken up in the light ray at the correct film plane. Perhaps there is considerable, but I shall continue to think it is not so much as you suppose until it is proven otherwise. Of course if the crater be in actual focus at the film plain, then I grant your contention without question, but the crater must NOT be in focus at that point, and I have been much interested in the possibility of so much advancing the crater focusing position beyond the film plane that considerable light loss through divergence of the ray can be overcome. Personally, I think the thing is impractical for two reasons, but it might be possible to sidestep the objections, viz.: ghost and increase beam diameter at film plane.

But, anyhow, it may be cheerfully conceded that the Mazda sets up an entirely different proposition, and, as applied to that, I can readily see possibilities in spherical aberration for good. I have been the advocate of a condenser corrected for spherical aberration, and have been watching closely for practical methods of insurance against condenser breakage, mostly to that end. I shall not be satisfied that I am in error until it is proven by a practical demonstration that my position is wrong.

Department Editor Honored.

As previously set forth in the editorial pages of another issue, the editor of this department has been appointed Honorary General Director of the Association of Moving Picture Operators of Argentina, South America, by the Board of Directors in session in the city of Buenos Aires on May fifth.

Accompanying the notification of appointment was the statement that "the entire membership approved the appointment," and other very kind remarks. I am informed that the Association is the largest of its kind in all Latin America; also larger than any in Spain itself. It is indeed gratifying to know that I have won so high a place in the esteem of our Spanish-speaking brothers. The Association corresponds to the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of this country, except that it is confined to projectionists. It is preparing to issue a monthly magazine, and sets its aims high. We have been asked to contribute to the first issue thereof, and have prepared and forwarded an article.

Argentina is a country of large area, fertile soil and great enterprise. It perhaps more nearly approaches the United States in general make-up than any other country on the western hemisphere, excepting, of course, our sister, Canada. The notification of appointment was forwarded by Sr. Bruno E. Tedeschi, General Secretary, Cevallos 555, Buenos Aires.

Condenser Data.

Sam Bowden, Glen Ellyn, Illinois, says:

> Will you please give me following: Focal length of condensers and distance between the two lenses of the combination; also distance from condenser to aperture. Have two motor-driven Simplex projectors, taking curren through Bell and Howell transformers, with switch on 60-ampere notch. Voltage 110. Have two 5¾-inch Gundlach-Manhattan projection lenses, giving a 12-foot picture at 75½ feet from center of projection lens to screen. My trouble is a ghost in center of screen. Have tried different combinations and moving lamphouse, but without result.

The information I can supply is based entirely on amperage. If your amperage is not sixty, then the data will not be right, the amount of error depending on how much the amperage varies from sixty. In the first place, condenser lenses should always be as near each other as possible, without actual contact, except where they are spaced to change the focal length of the combination, and this can only be done intelligently by one who very thoroughly understands and can compute the exact effect produced by a given spacing distance. Assuming your amperage to be sixty, you need two 6½ plano convex or one 6½ meniscus and one 8½ bi-convex. The center of plano convex combination should be 17½ inches from the film, but if the meniscus-bi-convex combination be used, the distance should be 20 inches. If plano convex lenses are used, and the back focus of projection lens is 3 inches, then its diameter should be not less than 1.5 inches. If back focus is 4 inches, then diameter of projection lens should be not less than 1.84, and if 5 inches, then 2.1; if 6 inches, then 2.3. If the meniscus-bi-convex condenser lenses be used, then if back focus of projection lens is 3 inches, its diameter should be not less than 1.54 inches: if 4 inches, then 1.75, if 5 inches, then 2 inches, and if 6 inches, then 2.14. You will observe that with the meniscus-bi-convex a projection lens of slightly smaller diameter will serve, which means, in effect, that there is less light loss if the projection lens is of too small diameter, as it often is. Will you kindly advise as to whether or no this clears up your trouble? But if it does not, be certain that your amperage is sixty before condemning my data. Diameter of projection lens has nothing to do with the ghost matter. Lenses of larger or smaller diameter than those indicated may be used, but, if smaller, there will be light loss, and, if larger, it will add somewhat to revolving shutter difficulties. As to revolving shutter distance from lens, I must refer you to the handbook. It is too long a story to tell here.

Soldier Boy Wants to Join.

Allan D. Goodwin writes from Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, ordering a handbook, and says:

> Please advise as to whether or not there is any chance for a man in the service to become a member of the union. The nearest local is at New Orleans, which is 117 miles from here. Am working at No. 3 theater, with two Power's 6-B projectors, but have considerable trouble with condensers breaking. Have tried moving my lamphouse backward and forward, but it seems to be the same at any position.

You are within the jurisdiction of the local nearest to you, but must reside within its jurisdiction for six months before you are eligible to membership. Anyhow you might find trouble passing the union examination. Your condenser breakage is not to be cured by "moving the lamphouse backward and forward." It may be due to improper mounting of the lenses. Get some thin sheet asbestos and place strips in the holder so that the lens will not touch metal at any point. It may be due to overleaded carbons, with consequent excessive flaming. Remedy quite obvious. Get correct size carbons for your amperage (see page 287 of handbook). It may be due to wrong focal length condenser lenses, which place the arc too close to the lens (see chart March 17, 1917, issue). It may be due to poor ventilation of lamphouse (clogged vent screens) which sets up excessive heat inside the lamphouse. It may be due to wrongly placed fan in projection room, or to poor protection against natural draft. You have given me no data, so how can I help you? To merely write saying "something is wrong, what is it," is not productive of intelligent reply. It is always better to give too much data than too little. In this case I should be told the focal length of condenser lenses, amperage, kind of current and size of carbons at least.

New and Excellent Instruction Book.

J. H. Hallberg, consulting engineer for the United Theater Equipment Corporation, has submitted to this department for examination what is the best instruction book we have seen to date dealing with a motor generator set. The book is for the use of users of Hallberg motor generators. It has 32 pages, the printed space thereon being 3⅜x6 inches. It is illustrated in most excellent manner, and may be had for the asking by users of Hallberg motor generator sets. A postcard to J. H. Hallberg, United Theater Equipment Corporation, 1604 Broadway, is all that is sufficient to secure a copy, and it is worth a good many postcards, lemme inform you who use that machine.

A Question of Wage.

John Nagel, New York City, writes thusly:

> Recently I inserted an advertisement reading: "Expert operator wants out-of-town position where good service will be appreciated." This was done because my wife has been very ill and the M. D. advised my taking her to the country, preferably into the mountains. I received about a dozen offers of a position, of which the one enclosed is the best. Can you beat it? No wonder they cannot secure operators for out of town if they offer such salaries as that!

The offer enclosed came from the capital city of Pennsylvania. After asking several questions as to how long the applicant had been in the business, etc., the exhibitor says: "Salary, if you are thoroughly satisfactory, good, first-class electrician, fellow that thoroughly understands projection and will do all the electric work around the theater, $20.00 per week."

Now if the exhibitor had been in a small town, and had confined his requirements to the projection room there would be no criticism of the sum named. But the capital city of Pennsylvania is not a small town, but a fair-sized city, having several theaters; also the exhibitor wants an operator and house electrician all rolled into one. And he expects a "good, first-class electrician" and a man who "thoroughly understands projection" for the sum of twenty dollars a week, when an electrician of that class receives four, five and six dollars a day, with steady work too, and jobs in plenty. Let it be very clearly understood that this department has no sympathy with projectionists in small towns demanding extravagant wages. It most emphatically is not to be expected that the exhibitor in a small town is going to, or can, pay salaries which the large city exhibitor can pay and ought to be made to pay. Living expenses in small towns are not nearly so high as in large cities. Even in these times of hugely inflated living cost I would say that twenty dollars ought to be a fair figure for the small town projectionist. But in a city of the size of the one named, twenty dollars is rather absurd, when one considers that boys are receiving more than that in some sections of the country, and mechanics in many lines are making from ten to fifteen dollars a day, with five dollars as low-water mark for any skilled craft I know of at this time—in cities I mean. There seems to be an impression in some quarters that this department and its editor are demanding the same remuneration for projectionists in cities, towns and hamlets. That is absurd. It is ridiculous. We demand for the projectionist such remuneration as will attract the best available talent in each respective community, but this may and will vary widely in places of different size, also in different sections of the country.

It seems to me in a city the size of the one involved in this discussion twenty-five dollars should, in these times, be a minimum, with thirty for first-class men, but that would be for a PROJECTIONIST—not a projectionist-house-electrician-janitor-bill-poster combination.

Brightening Up Old Film.

The Princess Film Corporation, Malone, New York, asks:

> Will you kindly advise as to what is best solution for brightening up and prolonging the life of used film; also to keep it moist and flexible.

There were a number of film renovating solutions on the market at one time, but whether they are still in business in these troublous times I am not informed. Two of them were the Wm. Rhodes Film Company, Retreat Avenue, Hartford, Conn., who made the "Magic Film Cleaning Fluid," and the Githcal Chemical Company, 220 West 42nd street, New York City, who made a film cleaning compound. The name of the latter no longer appears in the telephone directory, and they have presumably gone out of business. There was a film laundrying process conducted by Colonel Forth, 406 South Fifth avenue, Louisville, Ky., but we have heard nothing from him in quite some time. You may clean up used film by using any one of several film cleaners, such as the Mortimer, made by the Mortimer Film Cleaning Company, Portland, Maine, or the Leland Film Cleaner, made by the Leland Company, Montpelier, Vt. A fluid goes with the outfit of the Leland Company, and that particular cleaner is still made, I am sure. You may keep your film pliable by storing them in closed shelves with pans of water underneath. Some add about one part of glycerine to thirty parts of water, but I am of the opinion that the benefit of this is purely imaginary. If any one knows anything which will help these gentlemen solve their problem, let them communicate directly with the Princess Film Corporation, or else send it to the department.

The Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically—Natural and Unnatural Endings.

NOTHING gives the finish to an orchestral setting like clear endings and clean attacks. And on the other hand, nothing tries the patience of the patrons so sorely as the chopping off of the music in the middle of a measure and commencing the new number in an extraneous key. The science of picture fitting has advanced materially in this respect, and almost all large orchestras and many of the smaller combinations make it a point to segue without a perceptible break.

When the picture is accompanied by a special musical score there should be no interruption and few endings in the playing of it providing the arranger knew what he was doing. Key sequence is usually followed with suitable modulations to join non-related keys. The score provides the only adequate musical setting from the standpoint of perfect continuity.

It is nearly impossible to select music suitable for certain scenes and at the same time with key sequence when those numbers must be picked from a published library. There is sure to be a clashing of inharmonious keys upon the change of scenes unless the piece be accurately timed to finish on a given phrase which has a cadence relative to the following number. Accurate timing depends largely upon the operator's speed of projection, and frequently the labors of the musical director are lost through the careless manipulation of the operating machine.

Sometimes the characteristic tempo of a selection is changed to fit the duration of the scene. This is musical distortion of the worst kind, and should be frowned upon by all those who profess a true love of the art of music.

Recently a musical director was called upon to fit a feature hurriedly, and, with a supercilious bravado, exclaimed, "It is no trouble to fit pictures. Pick out any old number and play it according to the action and tempo of your picture." We wonder how he would adjust a Spanish habanera to an interior scene showing a fond mother putting her child to bed.

We know some leaders that time every item in their library as they buy it, marking the duration in minutes and seconds upon the outside of the piano cover. This is a good practice and wonderfully helpful in picture setting if you do not select your music from the standpoint of time only. Its adaptability and appropriateness must first be considered. The tendency is to pick out a number perhaps a half minute short and make it fit by dragging. This is an insult to the composer, and an affront to the musicians who are to be found in your audience.

To consider your cue is important, but it should not take precedence over a smooth change of music. It is always better to over-run the cue in finding a phrase upon which you can finish on the cadence than to sacrifice continuity and outrage the ears of your auditors by an abrupt break. A cadence frequently suggests itself as a possible ending just before a cue appears. If it be taken and held, with a slow diminuendo and the succeeding number be picked up pp, it gives a smoothness that detracts nothing from the picture.

The leaders of some of the smaller orchestral combinations have trained their players to finish on the tonic chord of every selection and make them hold it until the signal is given to start the new one. As the cue to change draws near the leader taps his music rack, which indicates that he is about to finish the number. He slows up the tempo, and as he comes to the end of the phrase he signals the orchestra to cut to the last chord. The only objection to this method is the tapping of the music rack. The sharp staccato sound thus made is a greater screen detractor than a bad segue, so that, although he effects a smooth change, he defeats the primary purpose intended. However, this mode of proceedure is to be highly recommended if the tapping can be eliminated.

There is yet another way to gain smoothness of sequence in picture setting which, so far as we have been informed, has not been tried. We claim it as a child of our brain, and offer it as a suggestion to those theaters that have large and somewhot unwieldy orchestras. It cannot be used effectively with every number because of the possibility of monotony, but when occasion arises to use such selections as "Liebestod," excerpts from "Parsival," "Othello," or parts of large suites or symphonies (where there is no stopping place) the plan might be found of some value.

The idea consists of a series of original endings, eight or sixteen measures in length, and written without any definite melody, but based solely on a chord construction which would fit into almost any number of the same or relative key. The best results could be obtained from three forms, viz; arpeggio, sustained chords, or color figures, with possible pauses.

Fig. 1, as shown below, will give an idea of the arpeggio form of an eight bar phrase (the last bar being omitted to conserve space) which could be used with any number, allegretto in character, and in the keys of D maj., G maj., or A maj. It would also be possible to attach it to one written in B minor if care were used in connecting the selection proper with the proposed ending.

You will note the excellence of the bass progression, as well as the neutral figure which serves as a melody. With a rall towards the finish this ending can be made most adaptable. Of course this piano illustration would be arranged for orchestra, and should receive a number for filing purposes. Although marked Allegretto tempo it could be used to finish pieces marked Andantino, Moderato or Andante Con Moto. Its parts should appear similar to Fig. 2, and should be pinned or attached to the phrase at a point where the leader expects to finish. Although the melody figures might not remotely resemble that found in the original ending the finale would be decent and complete.

The sustained chord formation can be utilized in much the same manner, but the writer's ingenuity will be taxed heavier to accomplish a truly musical phrase. The third form, which we have called color figures—for the want of something better—is probably the most effective and by all means the easiest to evolve, as can be seen by analyzing Fig. 3. This form can be made doubly effective when written for a special piece of music, such as Shubert's Unfinished Symphony. Here you find the dominant melody figure as shown in Fig. 4. can be used as the basis of Fig. 5, and attached to almost any part of this number, making a suitable ending.

The "Liebestod" of Wagner is another excellent example to experiment upon. How effective an original ending based upon the thematic treatment of this piece would prove! Frequently your scene forces you to stop at the letter N, which is a bad break requiring a finale to make a clean score. If you used "Liebestod" again for another feature, you might only have time to play to the letter H, and again your original finish would prove valuable.

We realize that this plan entails a lot of extra work on the part of the leader or his librarian, but if the endings are written as required from time to time, it is astonishing how soon you will have an adequate collection, ready for instant use. The strongest point of a good musical setting is the proper joining together of individual numbers which go to make it up. Every effort should be made to construct and direct the setting so that there is no perceptible break throughout the entire picture. To accomplish this you gain the first sixty per cent. of merit in the proper presentation of pictures musically.

Music at the Rialto.

During the week of June 30 Mr. S. L. Rothapfel offered one of the biggest bills for the money that we have seen in New York Picturedom. It was not that there were more numbers than usual, but each number stood out as a feature in itself and at the same time blended so well into a composite whole. Mr. Rothapfel is only human and is prone to err once in a while, but when he gives us a programme of such excellence he is instantly forgiven for those little sins of omission and commission.

The Overture—Capriccio Italien by Tschaikowski—was beautifully rendered by the Rialto Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the incomparable Hugo Reisenfeld. Mr. Reisenfeld knows this number by heart and gets out of it everything obtainable.

Then followed the scenic showing the Island of Cuba in all its picturesqueness. The music selected for this was of Spanish atmosphere and made you feel as if you were actually present among the palms and the quaint people of the Cuban Isle.

Miss Annie Rosner followed with an aria from "La Forza Del Destino." This opera of Verdi's is seldom heard though it merits a prominent place in the galaxy of famed works. Miss Rosner showed to excellent advantage in this number. She is gaining poise, and never have we heard better vocalization from this talented singer. the selection of this solo was a happy one, as it linked the scenic with the Animated Weekly, which dealt so much with the Italian troops and their good works. Mr. Rothapfel divided his Weekly into A and B numbers showing the "Fighting Along the Piave."

These pictures were taken by the official cinematographers of the Royal Italian Army in a territory along the Piave River, where the Italians have just inflicted such a crushing defeat upon the Austrian forces. They are shown here through the courtesy of the Italo-North-American-Commercial Union, official agents for the Italian government.

Carrying out the Italian idea, "La Donna e Mobile" from Rigoletto was well sung by Carlos Mejia. This young man is new to us, but his stage presence and perfect breath control carried the audience by storm. His voice is light, but very sweet, and the easy manner which he uses is distinctly pleasing.

The feature called "The Claws of the Hun" was well played, principally by the organist. Our friend Arthur Depew officiated at the consul, and any picture is in good hands when he has charge of it. The Victrola, playing "Over There" from back stage, was admirably timed and worked out in exact synchrony. This is a new development in picture playing that is fast coming to the fore as a pleasing innovation.

Selections from "Miss Springtime" were played as an Entr'acte with brother Enston wielding the baton. His predilection is to dynamic effects which spoil his masterorship and distorts his interpretation. There is enough noise in the pictorial without dragging it into a spot where it does not belong. Tempo should be well defined at the beginning of each new movement not four measures afterwards.

The comedy and the organ solo closed the show.

American Federation of Musicians.

The American Federation of Musicians held their twenty-third annual convention in Chicago recently, when the constitution, by-laws, and standing resolutions were amended and ratified by that body. Commencing May 13 and lasting a week it was in all respects and from all angles the most successful, the most important, and the most beneficial of all previous conventions. This was not surprising, as the Chicago convention had the benefit of the experience gained in the twenty-two which preceded it.

No time was wasted in useless parliamentary camouflage nor was debate needlessly restricted; every delegate had a full and fair opportunity to express his views on any subject or question brought up. Much of the splendid work of the convention from the practical viewpoint, was due to the masterful handling of the routine by the presiding officer.

Lieut. John Philip Sousa was present with a consolidated band of five hundred instrumentalists and assisted at the flag raising which took place on the lake front. He was cheered to the echo when the band started "The Star Spangled Banner" as Old Glory was unfurled to the breeze. The twenty thousand people present, reverently and with uncovered heads, joined in singing the national anthem. The sight was indeed inspiring, and showed the true patriotic feeling which prevailed in that immense assemblage.

Year by year the A. F. of M. is moving forward in progressive lines and eliminating the dead wood which clutters up the machinery of adequate service. Those laws that have stood the test of time and experiment are retained. New resolutions are adopted that fit new conditions that arise from time to time. It is not the intention of the A. F. of M. to regard their laws as did the Medes and Persians. So many exigencies arise that must be handled by the local board of directors that wide scope is given to the discretion of the executive heads. But when a ruling is asked for, many times throughout hte country, the national committee puts it into resolution form to be voted into the constitution if deemed advisable.

Never before has there been that oneness of purpose that so marked the proceedings of the twenty-third convention, and never before has the future held so many promising good things for the American Federation of Musicians.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

LET'S GET A DIVORCE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "I'll Think of You" from "The Rainbow Girl" by Hirsch, "Chiffonette"—Atherton or "Baby Sweetheart's Serenade"—Corri.

The picture is somewhat light, but you will need a hurry in the first reel. Sweet music will be most appropriate and you will have a chance to use Tosti's "Good-bye" if you deem it advisable, to couple this number filled with so many varied associations, with the scene beginning at the cue "T—But Spring Cannot Last." Close the picture with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

NEIGHBORS (World Film—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest "Innamorata"—Marchetti, "Dodola"—Frey, or "The Way of Love" Cremieux.

This is an amusing comedy drama with a New England atmosphere. The opening is very sad, but beginning with the "T—The End of School Days," light music can be used to contrast the gloomy opening. You will need a popular Two-step and a joyous Allegro. There are some children scenes that require close attention, for your music being generally light will present difficulties in properly portraying them. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film Exchange.

SAY, YOUNG FELLOW (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

This is one of the usual fire and dash comedies of Douglas Fairbanks fame. He does the usual hair-raising stunts and the action is fast throughout. Light music will be required with some special numbers that are almost direct cues. In the second reel you will need either "School Days" by Edwards or "I Can't Do that Sum" from Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland." Fairbanks has a habit of whistling "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms," which occurs in the second and third reels. It is suggested that the orchestra stop playing and allow the piccolo to play it as a solo, synchronizing it to the screen action. You will also need a misterioso, a hurry and an agitato to meet the picture demands. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

TANGLED LIVES (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Pathetic. Suggest "Silent Sorrows"—Borch, "Elysium"—Speaks, or "Evensong"—Martin.

The character of this picture is an emotional drama dealing with the eternal triangle. It shows us the home life of the wealthy and also gives us a glimpse into the scientist's laboratory. Open with the theme. Follow up with a valse lento and continue into a pastorale number. The music should be kept light until the third reel, when some dramatic music is needed, followed by a misterioso. You will need a storm furioso and a dramatic agitato. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

TINSEL (World Five Reels)—Theme Moderato Pastorale. Suggest "Mountain Song"—Borch, "Pastel Menuet"—Paradis, or "Whispering Willows"—Herbert.

This is a society drama with scenes of action in the homes of the wealthy. Open with the theme followed by a light intermezzo. You will then require a sad number, followed by a gavotte. From this point the music follows in light treatment until the beginning of the third reel when you will need some dramatic stuff. The last reel is intensely sad and a long pathetic would play it nicely. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film Exchange.

VAMP, THE (Paramount—Five Reels) Theme Moderato Gracioso. Suggest "Tulips"—Miles, "Basket of Roses"—Albers, or "Bowl of Pansies"—Reynard.

This picture is a light drama and will not need too much heavy music. The atmospheric in parts is Irish and you will find room for an Irish love song and a typical jig. There is also a march necessary, and we would suggest "Pershing's March" or "Over There." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

Hurley Plan Helped by Films

Moving Pictures Are Paving the Way for the Introduction Of All Kinds of American Goods in Foreign Countries.

THE address of Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board before the National Security League in Chicago last week is fresh evidence of the need to freely export American films, according to president Paul H. Cromelin of the Inter-Ocean Film. In this talk Mr. Hurley laid special stress on the utilization after the war of the great merchant marine now budding.

"This merchant marine, declared Chairman Hurley, must not be allowed to go to rot in peace time," said Mr. Cromelin. "The Chairman told the business men that they must plant American wares so successfully in the foreign markets that all the new ships would keep busy.

"Meantime the American film is acting as publicity agent for this superb idea. It is showing in all neutral lands, familiarizing them with American hustle and go—which is made possible by American success-tools. The demand for these tools is sure to follow in the lands where ambitious men are forging to the front. This, I think, takes in every land!

Establish American supremacy thus and the orders for American goods will flow in. And what channel other than our films could get such a result? A paid advertising campaign that would attain anything like it would cost our manufacturers a billion dollars. The films do this very patriotic work gratis, and it will pay Mr. Hurley and every American interested in post-bellum problems to see that they get every shipping facility to-day that can be secured."

Bengar Company to Handle Selig Product

Colonel Selig Closes Long-Term Contract for the Exploitation of His Brand in Foreign Markets.

As A result of numerous conferences between Colonel William N. Selig, Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and Ben Blumenthal, of Export and Import Film Co., Inc., offices have been opened in New York City to facilitate the movement of Seligs throughout the world.

The recent contract entered into by Messrs. Garrett, Blumenthal and Selig gives full control of all Selig productions of the past and for four years to come to the Bengar Pictures, Inc. This applies to all territories of the world, excluding the United States, Canada and Great Britain. Every civilized country has been entered and thoroughly canvassed by representatives of this exporting house and from the catalogue of Selig productions outgoing shipments are being carried by practically every boat leaving our shores.

Colonel Selig came to New York a few days after Mr. Garrett and Mr. Blumenthal's return from the Selig plant in Chicago, and during the several weeks of his stay here some far-reaching plans have been formulated. The new offices in the Godfrey Building are the scene of continuous activity and both Messrs. Garrett, Blumenthal and Selig are enthusiastic over their plans for the fall. The Colonel brought along three new feature productions that he predicts will start tongues to wagging after the trade showing they are giving shortly. These were produced after conferring with Mr. Garrett and Mr. Blumenthal on the international popularity and appeal of the subjects.

Foreign News and Comment.

José Dontai, director and assistant general manager of the Cinematográfica Sud-Americana, has just arrived in town. For the benefit of those unfamiliar with the importance of this South American exchange, we will give here a brief outline of its activities. Its capital amounts to $1,000,000 Argentinian currency (about $400,000 in American money) and it covers the territory comprised within the republics of Argentina, Chile, Peru and Uruguay, with headquarters in Buenos Aires and branch offices or agencies in the following cities: Rosario, Tucumán, Mendoza, Cordoba, Bahia Blanca; Santiago, Valparaiso, Concepción, Iquique, Antofagasta, Punta Arenas, Coquimbo; Lima and Montevideo.

It handles, on an exclusive arrangement, the whole output of the Universal, Gaumont, Tespi and Gladiator companies, in addition to whatever special productions it may deem suitable for its market.

The Sud-Americana, as presently organized, has been in business during the past three years. Atilio Liberti is the president of the corporation and Alejandro Gomez, one of the directors, acts as the general manager. Mr. Liberti, the founder of the firm, is a Buenos Aires millionaire, and his name appears on the board of directors of one or two local banks and many commercial enterprises.

During the past year the Sud-Americana has been working in combination with the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., a New York concern covering the same territory. Their combined program consists of Universal, World, Selig, Gaumont, Paralta, Tespi, Gladiator, First National Exhibitors' Circuit (including the new Chaplins), Billy West and numerous special productions.

We understand that Mr. Dontai's visit is connected with the purchase, in large quantities, of program and special pictures. He is a veteran of the moving picture industry and has kept in close touch during the past eleven years with the producing markets of the world.

Mr. Dontai will remain in town for two or three months and will probably leave here a permanent buying representative.

Expressing Films Uncertain Business

Exhibitors and Distributors Suffering Because of Poor Service Under Congested Conditions and Inexperienced Employees.

BOTH distributors and exhibitors are suffering through increasingly poor service from the express companies in the essential matter of delivering films and posters to the showmen and returning them to exchanges. Here in the East conditions are exceptionally bad, from four days to a week being required to deliver films to Philadelphia and to New England cities centering around Boston.

A World representative found general complaint at all of the big distributing firms called upon, and none of the men in charge had any suggestion to offer that might give any hope of improving the situation. Before railroads became congested and the express lines fell under Government control films were handled at "treasury value" and had precedence over many other articles of merchandise.

In these days films take their chances it seems, and the chance is in most instances a very poor one. Often films are delivered by the express company to the exhibitor without the posters, although invoices are always marked "two on one" to indicate a double shipment. Again the posters will arrive and no films will come. Frequently neither films nor paper reach destination, and the exhibitor suffers from a "dark" house and the annoyance of making explanations that, by the patron, are not always accepted.

It is a real detriment to an exhibitor to have his house closed for even one day. The matter of "starting all over again" often means the loss of money aside from the total loss of receipts on the day the house is forced, by indifferent express service, to remain dark. Then, too, the distributor loses in rentals and delay in having films and advertising matter returned to the exchange.

Here in New York some distributors are sending their films by parcel post as the best expedient. Some of them serve Philadelphia and Boston by special messenger, films packed in trunks with the proper label conspicuously displayed, setting forth the contents, being now accepted as baggage; but this service entails an enormous expense on consecutive service, involving, as it does, the salary of a messenger and the round-trip ticket required to carry man and baggage.

The express companies are suffering from the inroads of the draft, and inexperienced help is contributing to the poor service. Perhaps when the employees become more efficient there will follow some relief, but just at present shipment of films by express involves in every instance an element of luck that makes the outcome hazardous and unsatisfactory.

Toronto Theaters Try Group Advertising

Daily News Successfully Printing Directory Containing Announcements of Thirty-Four Houses.

TORONTO exhibitors are doing more newspaper advertising than ever before and with apparent results. By an arrangement with the Daily News no less than thirty-four local theaters are using a tabulated column daily which serves as a directory of current attractions at the respective houses. This directory gives the name and address of each of the theaters, the name of the feature and the name of the star. The lay-out of this column permits quick reference to each theater on the list and each house gets a neat display in alphabetical order. This is one of the best newspaper stunts for the average exhibitor yet seen in local film circles. The daily columns is entirely in addition to the "News Photoplay Calendar" which occupies large space in the theatrical section of the Saturday edition of each week. Each of the thirty-four theaters is given approximately forty lines in tabulated form for the names of features, comedies, serials, etc., which are booked for each day during the succeeding week. The Saturday Calendar occupies a spread of almost a whole page. There is considerable work in connection with compiling this calendar each week but, although the cost is small to each exhibitor, the paper finds that the feature is a paying proposition.

In addition to the Calendar, a number of the local picture theaters are also using special display space for individual advertisements. These "ads" entitle a theater to special reading notices and reviews. The Daily News has shown its willingness to co-operate with the theaters by offering to publish all real news concerning the various local houses, such as alteration, special performances, unusual incidents, changes in personnel and changes in policy.

Following the apparent success of the Photoplay Calendar in the Daily News, a similar calendar was recently started by the Star Weekly which is entitled "Photoplay Presentations for the Week." In this calendar has been listed the attractions of the week at more than a dozen different moving picture theaters of Toronto. The Star Weekly and the Sunday World also carried display advertisements of a number of the larger picture theaters regularly and each of these papers also carried many advance notices for the various houses.

The plan of The Daily News is so unusual and so successful, however, that it has aroused wide attention and interest.

Private John A. Bell, U. S. A.

WHEN one looks with admiration upon the sturdy ranks of khaki-clad boys swinging through the city's streets to the triumphant notes of some popular air and the accompanying thump, thump, thump of the big bass drum and feels a quickening of one's patriotic pulses, the thought occurs: "Where do they all come from?" In a general way we know that in those ranks are blacksmiths, clerks, bookkeepers, salesmen, farmers—men from every commercial field, but it is difficult, sometimes, to hark back from that husky, upstanding, hard-eyed six-footer on the extreme left of the front rank with the smooth-voiced, obliging young fellow who used to sell you your collars and neckties at your favorite "gents' furnishing store." But that's the way it is working out in Uncle Sam's great army of democracy.

John A. Bell.

We know what we are talking about, for all this leads up to the subject of this sketch, John Bell, first office boy, then copy chaser and later mail clerk in the office of the Moving Picture World, but who is now a private in the Regular Army, and on his way to France. John was born and brought up in Brooklyn, and, as he grew to manhood, he ran more to nerves and sinews—an irrepressible spirit that knew no restraint. In the process of growing up John got a common school education and then went to work, first with the Film Index and then with the Moving Picture World, beginning back in 1909.

Amid all the trials that beset a boy on his first job, John never lost his spirit or his nerve. Naturally he made mistakes, but he also made friends, so that while he regularly "got the goat," at some time or other of every one with whom he come in contact, he still held his job and did a lot of good work, too. Now that he has joined the army and is off for the war we are sounding his virtues and laughing at his mistakes and adventures. He is one of the great army, and will make a daring soldier. Good luck to him!

BENNETT JOURNEYS TO CALIFORNIA.

Mr. Bennett will remain at the California studios for three or four weeks.

TORRES TO SUMMER IN LOS ANGELES.

Ramirez Torres, chief of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left New York July 8 for Los Angeles, where he will be associated with the studios on the West coast that are producing pictures for Pathe. It is expected Mr. Torres will return to New York in September.

Motion Pictures---An Essential

By G. Warren Landon

The Screen Which Pictures Things as They Are Serves the Nation Usefully and is an Absolute Essential to Victory

THEIRS not to reason why, theirs but to do and die" may be all right from the standpoint of patriotic devotion to an ideal. And yet, if we will but reason together, perhaps it may come to pass that fewer of us will have to "die" in this holacaust which is setting the world afire. It is in this spirit that this article is written.

No thinking man to-day would be apt to question the immensity of the motion picture business. Starting as a mere "peep show" some twenty years ago, it has developed with such swift and enormous strides that to-day it is rated as the fifth largest industry in the world. The entire record of commercial history shows no such achievement as this; it indicates that the motion picture business is one to be reckoned with indeed.

There are those of course who do not like motion pictures and who oppose them; but they are so badly in the minority as to be utterly swamped. It is a case where majority rules.

In the United States there are to-day approximately about fifteen thousand motion picture theaters. We have a population of about one hundred and ten millions of people. To be conservative, let us assume that only 5 per cent. of this population attend the theaters every day. Here we have an army of five and one half million paying toll at the box office daily, a large percentage of whom pay a war tax. Is this not helpful to the Government? Is it not an essential?

The saloon—whether rightly or wrongly—has been termed "the poor man's club"—we hold no brief for it. The moving picture theater may justly be termed the poor man's theater.

By this reference we do not mean the man who is in needy circumstances—the underpaid and underfed—but those of modest means; the men and women who constitute the bone and sinew of the Nation.

Is amusement an essential to them? Is it not an essential at the front where must be furnished surcease from the strain and hardships which are ever present? Theatrical troupes are being taken abroad and new ideas are continually being evolved for the amusement of the soldiers. That is as it should be; but, we ask, are there no hardships borne by those who remain behind, in many cases beset by the most refined of cruelties—uncertainty? What of them? Is not amusement a necessity? Is not the moving picture an essential?

To our mind no field of entertainment is so wide and varied in its scope. "As a man thinketh so is he in his heart," and it is "up to him" as to what he gets out of the "pictures." But we venture to say that he who is of a receptive mind and a seeker after knowledge, is on a higher level of development to-day because of the advent of motion pictures.

We either progress or retrogress. There is no standing still; and any thing that makes for the uplift of the human race is an essential. We believe the motion picture qualifies.

Life is not all beer and skittles and the game we are playing is no child's play. We cannot afford to let it become "all double drill and no canteen" else we will go stale in the playing with madness jibbering close at hand. Rest is an essential. Do the motion pictures provide it? Let us see.

You enter a "movie" theater. If it be of the more pretentious kind you are in luxurious surroundings; a good seat seldom costs over thirty cents—less for matinees. After sitting through the entire show of about two hours, what is the result?

You have sat in a large auditorium where, most of the time, the lights have been subdued. Your tired eyes are soothed and you incline to relaxation. The cares of the work-a-day world slip from your shoulders. The audience is not demonstrative except for patriotic subjects. You rest while before your eyes is spread the scroll of the world—the launching of a battleship, a religious ceremony in India, salmon fishing on the Columbia river, an arctic scene, the Panama canal, etc. And through it all your spirit has been soothed and ministered to by music. And when you emerge you have been rested, you have been entertained and instructed, you have seen things. Is this not an essential?

To consider the material side, one has but to refer to the magnificent showing made by the allied motion picture and theatrical team in the recent Red Cross drive when they finished second and raised over a million dollars for the cause—Some Essential?

But all this pales into insignificance besides the word Propaganda. Here the strength of the motion picture is so patent that it should be without argument.

It isn't to speak for the moving picture profession in all its branches that this is set down. Producers, exhibitors, operators, machine manufacturer, all have "come across" strong. We do hold a brief, however, for the message which the silent drama has been constantly delivering ever since we "went in."

The fiat has gone forth, our "hat is in the ring," and grim visaged war is at our threshold. The press keeps us well informed, but all the printer's ink in the world cannot picture a situation as the eye can vizualize it.

Are motion pictures essential? Go to the theater and see. Every night, every where, war pictures of actual events are shown. Watch the audience as "Black Jack" Pershing appears, or the marching and drilling of our boys, or the launching of a battleship with the masterbuilder—Schwab—on the job. See how the audience "rise" to it. Hear their applause as "Old Glory" is flung to the breeze. And realize that this is going on every day throughout our land and that every thrill of patriotic fervor strengthens purpose and thought—and that thoughts are things. Knowing this, can it be doubted that motion pictures are an essential?

Joseph Choate's dying message was: "For God's sake, hurry up," and throughout the land is being preached the sermon of Wake up, America!

We are going to win the war, but it is no pink tea. Some of us don't know we are in it yet. We must all wake up and stay awake.

Drive home to the American people—hit them through the eyes—the terror and magnitude of this war, and it will keep them roused to a sense of their obligations and serve as an inspiration.

No one thing can win for us. Co-operation and co-ordination will do it. We need every ounce of help; and that which continually mirrors on the mind the true inwardness of things and pictures them as they are, serves the Nation and is one of the greatest essentials for victory.

Of such is the motion picture.

SAILORS THANK WILLIAM FOX.

Three thousand sailors at the United States naval base at San Pedro, Cal., have telegraphed a vote of thanks to William Fox for his help in staging a mammoth vaudeville entertainment recently given for the jackies under the auspices of the Stage Women's War Relief. Mr. Fox, as soon as he was informed that Frank Lloyd, director of William Farnum, was to be stage manager of the entertainment, wired Sol Wurtzel, manager of the William Fox coast studios, to do everything possible to make the vaudeville a success. The result was that a small army of Fox carpenters and electricians were soon on the spot, erecting stage and scenery for the production. Those from the William Fox studios at Hollywood, who were on the program were William Farnum, Gladys Brockwell, William Burress, Herbert Heyes, A. W. Fremont, Tom Mix, the William Fox string quartet and a number of others.

ABEL TO BE FOX SPECIAL REPESENTATIVE.

Sydney E. Abel, who has had wide experience as a film salesman, has become identified with the Fox Film Corporation as a special representative, it is announced from the William Fox offices.

Mr. Abel, who had been special representative of Select Pictures since the organization of that concern, is one of the best known film men on Broadway and brings to his new work qualities of salesmanship that make him a particularly valuable aide.

Olive Tell Introduced to "Secret Strangers"

Metro's Newest Star Begins Rehearsals of Picture Adapted From the Kate Jordan Play.

By Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the property men stood on a step ladder, balanced himself on his right foot and drove a nail into the wall. From an adjoining set where Ethel Barrymore and her company were "taking" a scene of "Our Mrs. McChesny" came the sound of sharp commands, then a loud babble of voices and the splutter of the lights. At the table in the center of the poor young artist's garret home Director John C. Ince and the head electrician held an animated conversation over the importance of a brass candle stick. A carpenter stepped back hurriedly and knocked down a screen with a loud crash. The property man balanced himself at a more dangerous angle and drove in another nail, this time directly over Olive Tell's head; but the newest Metro star paid not the slightest attention to him or to any of the other distracting noises about her.

Olive Tell.

It was the wait between the rehearsal and the "taking" of the first scene of the screen version of Kate Jordan's play, "Secret Strangers," and the actress was improving the time by running over her most important bits of business with the villain. For the moment, everything else ceased to exist.

"This work requires remarkable powers of concentration, doesn't it?"

The actress dipped a large puff into a box of powder and applied it carefully to the sides of her face and as carefully avoided the tip of her nose. "Indeed it does!" she replied. "If one can't shut out everything but the thoughts one is told to think it is useless to try to become a screen actress. Here am I starting rehearsals on this Metro picture which means so much to me, and I'm having a regular fight with myself all the time not to jump up and run away. My sister Alma opens tonight in Marjorie Rambeau's part in 'Eyes of Youth' at the Maxine Elliott Theater, and I'm so anxious to be with her and help her all I can! She took the part on short notice, you know."

Director Ince helped himself to one of the crackers that formed a part of the poor young artist's meager supper and smiled reassuringly at sister Olive: "Don't worry about your sister; she's one of the Tell girls and you can always tell about them beforehand."

"Thank you, Mr. Ince. I hope you can foretell a certain secret connected with 'Secret Strangers.'"

"It's no secret at all; you've never had a part you like better and you're going to be a success in it. . . . Got that candlestick fixed, electrician? Everybody ready, please!"

Once more the opening scene was acted; this time accompanied by the steady grind of the cameraman, and the several pairs of eyes that were focused on the two people within the dingy garret searched keenly for the slightest flaw to show itself, as a slice of life, a bit of human tragedy, was brought into being. And right here is a phase of screen acting worthy of being noted: Actors on the speaking stage are called upon to give the result of weeks of preparation before a theaterfull of people who are in the most receptive mood and quick to show their approval when pleased. Every aid that can possibly spur an artist on to do his best is at hand. As the play moves forward the men and women on the stage feel the subtle influence that comes over the footlights and lets them know, at each step of the performance, the sort of impression the play is making. With the fall of the final curtain comes a popular verdict that is not to be changed by the notices in the morning papers.

The conditions under which the screen actor puts forth his best efforts are entirely different. He is obliged to throw himself into the strongest emotions for a very brief space of time, and always under the influence of a number of human beings for whom the magic of illusion holds no secrets.

As the camera ceased grinding the indignant young woman who had just shown the villain the door instantly relaxed, nodded a smiling goodbye and hurried toward the stairway, followed by a chorus of good wishes for her sister's debut.

Horstmann and Schaefer Candidates

Boston and Chicago Men Rivals for League Presidency at National League Convention.

Boston, July 16.

THE annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was formally opened at 11.45 this forenoon at the Lenox Hotel. About 100 exhibitors were present. The indications at the beginning of the session were that it would be an uneventful meeting.

The leading candidates for president were Horstmann, of Boston, and Schaefer, of Chicago. The St. Louis boosters for the 1919 convention were out in force.

Mutt and Jeff Open Booking Bases

Fox Company Announces That Beginning July 28 Eighteen-Week-Old Subjects Will be so Released.

A DEPARTURE in the policy of selling the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons has just been put into effect by the Fox Film Corporation. Hereafter all Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons that are eighteen weeks old will be sold on an open booking, non-contract basis.

The first Mutt and Jeff cartoon to come under this ruling is "The Decoy," which was released March 24. This film will be eighteen weeks old July 28 and will be open to non-contract bookings. After August 4, "Back to the Balkans" will be in the same category, and, of course, every week thereafter will see a Mutt and Jeff cartoon put on a non-contract basis.

This policy has been adopted as a result of a demand from exhibitors. There also has been a change in the nature of the cartoons. They are becoming more topical in their subjects; in fact, the most recent titles are as up to the minute as an afternoon newspaper. As examples of this timeliness these subjects are pointed out: "The Seventy-five Mile Gun," "Meeting Theda Bara," "Hunting the U-boats," "Joining the Tanks," "Helping McAdoo," and "My Four Years in Matrimony."

GOLDWYN BUYS "A PERFECT LADY."

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just purchased from Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf the motion picture rights to their stage success, "A Perfect Lady," and to Madge Kennedy falls the good fortune of having this as one of her first big Goldwyn pictures of the fall season.

"A Perfect Lady" was one of Rose Stahl's biggest successes in recent years and enjoyed the advantages of a run in New York at the Hudson theater and was played in the principal cities of North America by Miss Stahl on tour.

Goldwyn plans to begin production of "A Perfect Lady" within the next few weeks.

As a play "A Perfect Lady" was first presented by the Henry B. Harris estate, and in Miss Stahl's supporting cast were such well known players as Ned Sparks, Harry C. Browne and Beatrice Noyes. Miss Kennedy's role will differ greatly from any she has had since her entry into motion pictures a year ago.

LESSER GETS ELEVEN MORE STATES.

Supplementing his former contract for eleven western states on "Hearts of the World," Sol L. Lesser, president of All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has secured rights for the following additional territory on the Griffith subject: Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota. Mr. Lesser's territory on this production now includes all states west of the Mississippi River. This is said to establish a record for state right productions, not only in the amount of territory involved, but also by reason of the prices paid.

HOSPITAL WINS RUTH ROLAND'S $300 AWARD.

Ruth Roland has received $300 from a New York fashion magazine in payment of designs of a riding habit made by her. Just to prove it was not stage money Ruth turned over the check to Fannie Ward's Convalescent Soldiers' Hospital.

Exchangemen Take Action Against Thieves

New York Managers Organize and Will Prosecute Offenders to the Limit.

A DETERMINED effort to wipe out the organized bands of film thieves who for years have caused an enormous loss to the industry as the result of their depredations is now being made made by the big producers. Acting in concert, these companies have taken steps to run to earth all individuals engaged in the traffic going on in stolen films and place them behind prison bars.

It is said the film thief never has been so active as in the last few months. Every company has experienced the loss of valuable films which in a mysterious way later turn up in foreign countries. That the thieves have been able to laugh at efforts to apprehend them has been due entirely to the fact that no concerted action has been made to bring them to justice.

A meeting of all of the exchange managers of New York and vicinity was recently held at the offices of Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of the Universal. Before the meeting ended there had been formed an organization to safeguard the interests of the various film companies.

Although some of the solutions to the theft problem will affect only the New York exchanges they will be utilized the country over should they prove practical.

According to the announcement made by Joe Brandt following the meeting there is every possibility that the film companies will pursue the same methods in running down film thefts as are used by the big hotels in running down the signers of fraudulent checks. Each theft will be given individual attention and unremitting efforts will be made to trace the criminal. In this way, should the latter be working independently, he can be placed where no further loss will be imposed upon the industry, in so far as he is concerned. Should he prove to be a member of one of the organized bands believed to be back of the systemized thievery ways will be found to obtain evidence against every one of its members.

One of the subjects discussed at the meeting was the advisability of having one delivery company handle the shipments of film in the greater city, so that a certain amount of protection would be afforded the exchanges in the matter of losses.

Two committees were appointed, one to meet with the exhibitors and discuss the questions with them and the other to consider securing a detective agency to run down film thieves. The first comprises Joe Brandt, Universal; Edward Saunders, Metro; Lou Rogers, Paramount, and Sam Eckman, Goldwyn.

Joe Partridge, V. L. S. E., and Lou Rogers will look after the securing of police and private detective protection.

It is believed most of the stolen films are being smuggled into South America through Mexico. Although a strict watch is maintained at all the customs points, there are hundreds of miles of unwatched and unprotected border which make this pernicious traffic possible.

Porter Using Illuminated Advertising

Simplex Distributor Follows Up Installation in New Quarters by Establishing a Supply Trade Precedent.

FOLLOWING his recent removal from 1482 Broadway, New York, to the eleventh floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, B. F. Porter, the exclusive distributor for Simplex projectors in New York City, Long Island and northern New Jersey, instituted a mode of advertising used by no other accessory supply house in the country. This has been made possible by the recent installation on the roof of the Godfrey building of a large electric display known as the "Talking Sign."

Quick to seize upon the advantages afforded by this latest development of illuminated advertising signs, he arranged upon settlement in his new quarters for a series of messages to be flashed every night from the roof of the Godfrey building. The first announced his change of address and was followed by others, which left little doubt in the minds of the pedestrians at Broadway and Forty-second street, seven blocks away, of his progressive methods. People saw against a background of black sky announcements like "Projecting the Kaiser to Hell at the Broadway theatre on Porter's Simplex Machine."

As a part of his quick service idea Mr. Porter has installed a large show case for a complete display of all Simplex parts. In this silent salesman are seventy compartments where the exhibitor can see at a glance the six hundred machine parts. The customer who does not know their names can thus easily point out what is needed for replacement in his machine.

On the floor of the new salesroom are three Simplex machines, two enameled and one in goldleaf. Mr. Porter expects shortly to have assembled ten machines of different types. In the wall cases there is a complete supply of lenses and reels. He now has in stock 30,000 carbons, part of which are in a storeroom in the rear of the salesroom, which faces Seventh avenue.

Sullivan Retires from Mutual

Former Assistant General Manager to Take Rest Before Deciding on Future Course.

DENIS J. SULLIVAN, for three years an executive of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces his resignation effective July 13. Mr. Sullivan had the title of assistant general manager, the title of general manager of the Mutual always being carried by the president of the concern.

"I shall take a few weeks, probably a couple of months, of vacationing and then be ready to take up and decide upon a number of film offers which have been put before me," said Mr. Sullivan. "I am glad to say that I can look upon the strenuous years I have put in with Mutual and allied concerns with considerable satisfaction—and let me say I most sincerely and fully appreciate the co-operation, support and effective service of a force of able and capable men."

Mr. Sullivan first entered the employ of the Mutual Film Corporation as a salesman traveling out of the Milwaukee office. This was a sort of preparatory course planned by John R. Freuler, to familiarize him with the business so that he could go forward with the Freuler projects which were soon to be launched. In a few months Mr. Sullivan became general manager of the North American Film Corporation and was Mr. Freuler's chief executive in the distribution of the serial "The Diamond from the Sky." The selling of the serial gave Mr. Sullivan similar supervision of the campaigns on the Helen Holmes serials sold through Mutual exchanges.

Probably the largest single project with which Mr. Sullivan has been connected in the film industry was the marketing of the Charles Chaplin comedies.

Sheldon Negotiating for More Players

Mutual President Will Add to His Roster Other Names in Addition to Hayakawa, Kane and Goodrich.

WITH Sessue Hayakawa at work on the third of his series of eight special productions under direction of Haworth Pictures Corporation, Gail Kane producing the first of her series of dramas for Gail Kane Productions at a New York studio and Edna Goodrich completing her second picture in New York, James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces that important negotiations are in progress which will bring other important stars into affiliation with the Mutual.

Mr. Sheldon, during his brief incumbency of the presidency of the Mutual, has, in addition to the negotiations enumerated, consummated arrangements for the release of Outing-Chester's series of one-reel adventure pictures. He has moved the Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice a week news reel, from Chicago to New York and perfected plans for more rapid distribution of the news release.

"In reorganizing the Mutual releasing schedule," said Mr. Sheldon in his New York office the other day, "we are arranging for productions of the highest merit and most certain box office value. In the selection of productions and of series of productions for Mutual release, we are keeping to the forefront the selling problems of the motion picture exhibitor. The pictures which come to the screen over Mutual's name will be exhibitor profitmakers."

SCHMIDT, E. J., IS NOW SMITH.

E. J. Schmidt is no longer Schmidt. An American clear down to his marrow bones, and on both sides of his family for a couple of generations back, he has decided that the name Smith is plenty good enough for him and hereafter his friends, if they value his friendship, will call him Smith. Smith, as Schmidt, has been manager of Universal's exchange at Cleveland for the last few years. With the entrance of the United States into the war, he promptly took the stand that Germany and he had absolutely nothing in common—not even the name he inherited. So Schmidt petitioned the courts to relieve him of the burden and permission was shortly forthcoming.

Laemmle Goes After Summer Closers

Universal Executive Making Determined Effort to Reach Every Exhibitor Who Shuts Down in Warm Weather.

A NATIONWIDE campaign urging exhibitors to keep their theaters open during the summer months has been inaugurated by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Conducted under the supervision of Carl Laemmle, a determined effort is being made to reach every exhibitor who in years past has made a practice of closing his doors with the coming of the first warm days and only throwing them open once more after Labor Day.

It is Universal's claim that every man who shuts his theater for the summer gives aid and comfort to the enemies of this industry. These ill-wishers of moving pictures are aiding in a way those who would see them classed as non-essential.

Particular attention is being paid to those exhibitors who, according to the records on file at the various Universal exchanges, are "winter showmen." To these men is being sent literature outlining the harm they are unwittingly doing to the industry. In addition to this Universal is distributing circular matter which undertakes to disprove the fallacy that the moving picture patron ceases to care for picture entertainment during warm weather.

"Speaking for Universal, we have so many negatives ahead that we could stop producing for six months without falling behind on release dates," says Mr. Laemmle. "But we're not going to shut up shop, because it would have a bad effect everywhere. The same is probably true of the other producers. In scores of ways the war is causing us all to suffer hardships and losses but, after all, we are at war and so have certain duties to perform.

"A straightforward, serious-minded, successful exhibitor, who has always given me the Simon Pure facts about the exhibition end of the moving picture business, recently told me that so far as he was concerned there is just as much profit to be made during the summer as there is any other time.

"According to this showman, any exhibitor who possesses real showmanship can make as much money at one time of the year as another, with the single exception of about two weeks in the spring.

"Universal has gone into the 'Keep-Your-Theater-Open' campaign with every ounce of energy it possesses. We propose to hammer away at this idea if for no other reason than to give the Government a living screen on which to flash its win-the-war propaganda. Only those men who ardently desire to have the industry classed as a non-essential will oppose this movement."

Rothapfel to Stage "America's Answer"

Government's Successor to "Pershing's Crusaders" Goes on at the Cohan Theater, July 29.

AT the request of Charles S. Hart, head of the Committee on Public Information's film division, S. L. Rothapfel will stage "America's Answer," the Government war picture which is to be released as a successor to "Pershing's Crusaders." The picture will be presented to the public for the first time on July 29 at the George M. Cohan Theater. The assembling and titling of the various scenes which show the progress of America's military activities have just been completed, and Mr. Rothapfel started work on the details of his presentation on Monday, July 15. He will devise the stage setting, create the lighting effects, and arrange the music score which will accompany the picture. The notable success which Mr. Rothapfel has achieved in stirring his audiences at the Rivoli and the Rialto to enthusiastic demonstrations during the presentation of war pictures and news events in general led the Committee on Public Information to select him for the same sort of work in staging "America's Answer."

Fairbanks to Make a "Pep" Film

It Will be for the Cantonments and Will Show Relation of Health and Courage.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS will stage a propaganda scenario for the exclusive use of the various cantonments and has already mailed it to Washington, with the office of Major W. F. Snow, War Department, as its destination. Before starting production the Artcraft star believed that inasmuch as his propaganda picture was requested by Major General W. C. Gorgas, Surgeon General of the United States Army through Major Snow of the War Department, it was the proper procedure to have their approval and official sanction of the scenario before putting it in production.

"For weeks Joseph Henaberry and Ted Reed, with Douglas, have been building their story based on a theme that athletics lead to clean living, which in turn has a decided mental influence," said John Fairbanks, business manager of the company. "A man with a clean mind has a good morale, which is nothing more than pep—enthusiasm and zeal. To sum it all up, courage.

"This theme is applied to the soldier who deliberately sets out to do himself an injury, that will prevent him from taking part in military activities. This fellow is not clever. His mind is unhealthy and through the lack of courage is a coward."

Copies of this Fairbanks preachment, camouflaged in an entertaining comedy-dramatic picture, will be shipped to every training camp of the United States and Allied nations. A special preview will first be held in Washington. Some of the scenes will include views of the 40,000 troops stationed at Camp Kearney, California. Permission will first be secured for this privilege to photograph Uncle Sam's boys.

Frank Reicher Engaged by World

WORLD PICTURES points with pride to the engagement of Frank Reicher, who is to direct Louise Huff in her second World picture, "The Song of the Heart." Frank Reicher's career antedating his motion picture experience is connected with the brightest spots in the history of the theater, covering the past fifteen years. Beginning as a child his first work in the theater was playing original roles in productions of Ibsen under the direction of the author himself.

Frank Reicher.

Reicher's career in America, one might say, began with the presentation, at the Savoy theater, New York, of Frances Hodgson Burnett's drama, "That Man and I," in which Robert Hilliard was the star. Following this he was seen in over thirty-five original Broadway productions, in which he was employed by Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Liebler & Co., the Shuberts and other prominent managers and producers. He then became stage director, and played prominent roles in productions of the late Henry B. Harris, such as "The Heights," "On the Eve" and "A Matter of Money." He directed Elsie Ferguson in "Dolly Madison" and Hedwig Reicher in "On the Eve." His greatest piece of stage directing was in Percy MacKaye's fantastic play, "The Scare Crow," which was adapted from Hawthorne's "Mosses from an Old Manse." This was the story of "Feather Top." Mr. Reicher not alone directed this, but scored an enormous success in the title role.

On the death of Henry B. Harris he was engaged by Jesse L. Lasky, from which time his moving picture experience dates. His record as a motion picture director includes the picturizing of "The Claim," with Edith Storey; "The American Widow," with Ethel Barrymore; "Trouble Buster," with Vivian Martin; "Sacrifice," with Margaret Illington; "Pudd'n-Head Wilson," with Theodore Roberts; "Public Opinion" and "The Case of Becky," with Blanche Sweet; "Alien Souls," with Sessue Hayakawa; "For the Defense," with Fannie Ward; "Castles for Two," with Marie Doro, and "The Only Road," with Viola Dana.

GEFFEN—GREENFIELD.

Lewis S. Geffen, assistant publicity man for the Rivoli and the Rialto, left Friday, July 12, on a combined honeymoon and vacation in Kennebunkport, Me. He was married on that day to Miss Anne Greenfield of 830 Kelly street, the Bronx. Mr. Geffen has been on Mr. Rothapfel's publicity staff ever since the Rivoli was opened and has won a large circle of friends in the theatrical and newspaper world.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THE advertising devices employed by exchanges for inducing exhibitors to attend competitive trade shows of forthcoming productions are often more ingenious and resourceful than those displayed by the exhibitor to attract the public. About the limit is reached, though, by an exchange holding a trade show in the West End a few weeks ago in offering first-run exhibitions of the films shown free of charge. As a sop to exhibitors to attend the trade show it is harmless enough, but as a trade precedent dangerous. Publicity stunts of this character are best left to the tea trade.

"On Trial," the first of the G. K. Like other Essanay productions the Spoor specials will be distributed on this side by Film Booking Offices, Ltd.

Hostile air-raids are a remote possibility in New York, nevertheless it is perhaps interesting to note that London exhibitors are acting in close co-operation with the Metropolitan police when occasion demands it. In all cases the motto, "Carry On," is the exhibitors' plan, even if the barrage fire of surrounding anti-aircraft batteries do provide unexpected "effects" to the picture. During the several raids at night time on London there has never yet been anything in the nature of a panic at picture theaters. The English kinema audience is perhaps too accustomed to "thrills" to treat air-raids with much more than contemptuous familiarity.

It is not unlikely that certain people in London inwardly rejoiced when the announcement that the filmed experiences of Ambassador Gerard, "My Four Years in Germany," appeared in the newspaper as having been lost in a torpedoed merchantman. Cold and fleeting comfort to the friends of the Fatherland, who declared that this film should not be shown in Great Britain so close upon the revelations of Prince Lichnowsky. One of five copies of the entire unexpurgated production as it appeared in the States has already been shown to Government officials and a few members of the trade.

The Italian film, "Christus," was shown at Christ Church, Westminster during Easter, the first time a production of this character has been shown in a London church. The Rev. R. J. Campbell handed over the collection to the exhibitors of the film at the Philharmonic Hall, not as a payment for the loan of the picture, but as a token of goodwill.

Members of the Exhibitors' Association in the Tyneside area are much perturbed that showmen not identified as members of the association should reap benefits of its work and propaganda. Australian Notes

By Thomas H. Imrie.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia,
May 14, 1918.

THE officials of the Federal Censor Board are formulating a plan whereby all films will be personally viewed by a member of the Board before being passed for exhibition. Under the old system a detailed synopsis of each picture was submitted by the importers, and the film judged by that, though in doubtful cases a screening had to be given before the Board. According to Mr. Jensen, Minister for Customs, and chief of the censors, this system has been found unsatisfactory, and the new rule will take effect this month.

A War Precautions Regulation issued over a year ago prohibited the screening of any film showing the governments of any of the Allies in a bad light, or containing any scene likely to prejudice the public against the people of any of the Allied nations. Under this Act many pictures were banned, including among others "The Cheat" (Paramount) and "Sold for Marriage" (Triangle). The fact that Russia is now out of the war has allowed the release of several films dealing with the intrigue and atrocities in that country prior to the great conflict, and which were held up by the Customs authorities.

To date "Anton the Terrible," "The Sowers" and "Panthea" have been released, while others will make their appearance shortly.

CHANGES IN REGAL FILMS STAFF.

Regal Films, Limited, Canadian distributors of Goldwyn, World, Paralta and other pictures in the Dominion, have made a number of staff changes in the Canadian West. H. L. Nathanson has become manager of the Winnipeg branch, while M. Rose has become special representative for Western Canada. Manager Nathanson reports that prospects for the fall in his territory never looked better. A fine grain crop is expected and conditions on every hand are prosperous. The exhibitors are getting good admission prices and patronage during the warm weather has continued fairly heavy.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

"MISSING"—what a picture, best in months, and what a big burst at the close with the allied flags coming over the top, as if to capture the house as they did, with applause seldom heard in a picture house. Well, it takes a Griffith, an Ince and a Blackton to take from the juvenile ranks such young men as Robert Harron, Charles Ray and now young Robert Gordon, of the "Huckleberry Finn" class, who is the hero in this tremendous picture distinctly English, in all its theme and photography. Being a war picture in a way, it is good to see it so well done, and with new angles. It, too, is a credit to James Young, who directed it under supervision of Mr. Blackton, who gives us here his very best picture with, of course, the exception of "The Battle Cry of Peace," which was some spectacle. One scene was most impressive—the convalescent ward in the home of a wealthy country gentleman, played by Thomas Meighan, who being a semi-cripple, turns over his estate to the crown for this use. In "Over the Top" I, too, saw Tom Forman in a government camp down South when we fancied him "over there." To go back to the play! This is indeed a message to the women at home, but what a cat of a sister! One man near me actually hissed her. Sylvia Breamer as the heroine demonstrated the true spirit of loyalty, courage and sacrifice. What an inspiration this picture is, for war brides especially!

A trade showing of "A Romance of the Underworld" called us to the Fenway the other day, and for an hour or, more we had quite an unusual series of pictures. For those who have never gone slumming in New York here we get it pictured true to life—the real stuff—at a safe distance. Catherine Calvert, David Powell and Eugene O'Brien (some trio) were splendid all through. They depicted life as it is amid such surroundings, and through it all was the gentle influence of the sister just home from a convent only to face a situation most trying. Whether or no this picture has any lessons is a matter of opinion, but it was so different from the average and so well done that it appeals and why should not the public get a glimpse inside the lines? It certainly shows the evils of dope, and that is one lesson for the young men in front. With a comedy put on the same program to follow this very serious picture I should recommend it for city showings anyhow.

So Ethel Barrymore is to be seen in Emma McChesney. Good for Metro in doing this, for, as I recall the play, it will make some hit, especially as Miss Barrymore played it. I hope they will not cut this line relating to the business side of Emma: "Why, she could sell pretzels in London!"

I went twice to see "The Only Road" and enjoyed it better the second time, because at the first look at it there was a bunch of jibbering fans back of me, bent on disturbing the peace and which the ushers did not try to control. Little Dana has a good leading man in Casson Ferguson, and it was good to see Edythe Chapman, so long with Lasky, playing a sympathetic and somewhat dramatic part as the widow. She is versatile to a degree. Again, why such a title? What had it to do with play, plot or surroundings? "A Long Lost Daughter" would have been better. However, the play's the thing, and this went well.

"Clover's Rebellion," an old picture, but ever good, filled the house on a recent Sunday night, for Anita Stewart is popular and has not been seen of late in new pictures as this was, to most of the house. To James Oliver Curwood belongs the credit for story and directing of details. This had some of the funniest scenes ever seen here, over the Ford machine, owned by the "poor but honest" young doctor, played by "Rudy" Cameron. Here we have Charles Stevenson, the veteran stage player, once husband of Kate Claxton, and in support of Leslie Carter many years. He is graceful and fills in well. Eulalie Jensen and Julia Swayne Gordon, that pair of Vitagraph beauties; Brinsley Shaw and William Dunn were in the cast. Good for repeat years hence.

We all liked "De Luxe Annie" over here, for it was not only well directed and photographed, but it had good suspense, and the best of us like that sort of thing. Some did not like it to have Eugene O'Brien play the tough, but he turned out a pretty good sort after all. Frank Mills, like Milton Sills, is a leading man who pleases all, and of course Normal Talmadge will put anything over. Here we get the book agent dope—that is, when it involves a pretty girl and an easy man prey. Miss Talmadge in this does a fine piece of work in a Jekyll and Hyde part, never slipping up. On the same program at the Exeter Mrs. Ayer gave us that fantastic little play, "Prunella," and this went strong with crowded houses, many little ones attending the matinee. Strikes me this is rather better than "The Bluebird," done by the same master hand, yet differing somewhat. Marguerite Clark, who created the part at Winthrop Ames' Theater with Wallace Eddinger, or was it Ernest Glendenning? (always get them mixed) made a favorable impression, but it seemed a bit highbrow for the average. On the screen, however, we feel differently about it owing to the tremendous possibilities for visualization. We can see where this might not take in small communities, yet should be shown as something vastly different anyhow.

"Cheating Cheaters" ought to be a fine picture for Clara Kimball Young and we are pleased to note that Otis Skinner has begun his screen work in "Kismet" out in Denver for the National Film. Glad also to note that Paramount has captured Fred Stone, who is sure to draw in any picture, and there is the only Caruso!

"Believe Me, Xantippe," naturally drew here, where it was written and first produced as a play by the John Craigs at the Castle Square. So successful was it that Mary Young (Mrs. Craig) was engaged for the New York production, with John Barrymore playing John Craig's part. It has not lost any of its popularity on the screen. "Wally" Reid has a congenial part and fits in well. Ann Little lacks sparkle enough to play this daring little heroine, and she rarely "lights up." James Cruze made up well as the case-hardened criminal. This is the kind of picture the great American public likes—pure comedy, much punch, human, red-blooded, a taste of high life surrounding the trio of clubmen, and, of course, the happy ending. If this is not a go everywhere there is something wrong with the theater advertising it. Written as it was by a Harvard man during his college days and a prize winner put out by Paramount with a selected cast it is some picture.

Clara Kimball Young, ever a picture, is more than that in "The Reason Why," though the title is misleading, for there was no good reason why the mother should hide the fact of her motherhood, it being legitimate, and it was a poor reason, costing the life of the child and nothing was gained by it. My companion said: "What a little fool!—why, Frank Losee would have forgiven her at the outset, as her beauty wins, anyhow." You see, folks in front use names of players rather than cast names and this is good, for we learn to know their faces as on the speaking stage. Losee as Markrute was a likeable man, and it is good to see Milton Sills where he belongs and in support of such a star. This picture gives joy to femininity, as Clara wears many gowns straight from Fifth avenue. Glad to see Kate Lester amid such surroundings and in "Select" company. Fine photography. Little Eldean Steuart was a pathetic chap.

"True Blue," for William Farnum, had some good touches and a lot of wild and woolly atmosphere suited to the talents of this Fox player, who is personally popular with all fans. On the same program at the Park we had an excellent Bushman and Bayne picture in "Social Quicksands"—a good summer story well done showing something a bit new in plot. The society butterfly of the type disliked by the sturdy hero plans to convert him and make him like her personally anyhow, so she goes at it with vigor, posing as a thief and winning his sympathy and all the rest only to turn the tables at a social function. Good picture.

Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore make a dandy pair, and we are glad the latter is being appreciated by the powers, as he has ever been by the public. In "The Fair Pretender" we get a good farce with one or two melodramatic moments and a mild satire on the society bluff. Director Miller has done his best to make it go and preserved the atmosphere well. Good, clean picture and diverting these days, when we see so much depicting the war.

Promoters of many advertised articles of commerce, in other lines of industry, have out-thought the picture magnates in one seemingly important essential. Catch phrases, or selling slogans, are identified with many trade marks, very often suggesting the advertised article without even recalling to mind the brand name.

For instance: A certain outpouring of condensed milk (we can't for the life of us think of the brand), hails from "Contented Cows." One of the best automobiles for joy-riding is "The Car Without a Conscience." Certain booze performs its appointed task "Without a Headache" and, similarly, it is well known that beer opened Hell Gate to navigation.

Now that we may expect California grape-squeezers to follow the brewers and distillers into movie making, let us hail them as possible exponents of the combination trade-phrase and grade-mark exploitation for their productions. These may help, by way of suggestions:

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

Cigarettes will win the war.

About all the boys do "over there," back here, or on the high seas, is smoke the paper calumet.

We know this because we read the advertisements in daily papers. In these works of art Uncle Sam's land and seas forces are illustrated as heroic background for the close-up of a cigarette package.

Co-incidently we observe that the Fifth and Well Known Industry is closely associated with and deeply concerned about this drive to smoke out the Hun.

In the first place publicity men, Chesterfields of the game, have surrendered their Bull Durham to the needs of better shooter. They will turn with delight to the cigarette announcements as they sense the imagination of the pen-and-ink illustrators of Canal Street Egyptian bovine.

Their penance makes every bag of Bull a Trophy of the publicists Prettiest sacrifice in foregoing their Dieties—the Bull, rampant. There's nothing Picayune about the press agent, Nestor of boosters, and many big Mogul of filmdom may attribute his success to his Lucky Strike in landing the right mimeographer.

In the win-the-war "drive" cigarette advertisements are featuring the big guns and the high spots of the Well Known industry. There's the Monroe Salisbury brand, pictured in the foreground with a dug-out acting as the target for bursting shells . . . "makes it more pleasant while you wait" declares the text.

The Mecca Building Brandt (ouch!), appear as life-buoys for the gun-crew on a ship that day launched in Bayonne. Richmond Straight Cuts (smoked by film editors), do similar service to the marines, according to the near-tobacco nearer-artists.

The advertisements recall that soldiers are like a Camel in some respects—they can go many a Milo without a drink but they must be accompanied by their Fatima. That's Natural. The boys go Pall Mall (London pronunciation, please), "over the top" and are never in serious Straights if they have their smokettes.

There Hassen't been a case recorded where the Black and White soldiers of Pershing or sailors of Sims have failed to make good. It's only fair to attribute a share of the cause to cigarettes.

And when the Hun cries "kamerad" (connivingly thinking the Yanks will believe they are offering a new brand of "smokes") the Yanks show they are not selfish—they give the Hun the "butts"—of their guns!

"A Flying Start" Gets Away for Universal August 5

THE first episode of Universal's newest serial, "The Brass Bullet," entitled "A Flying Start" heads Universal subjects scheduled for release during the week of August 5. According to the announcements by Universal its newest serial effort literally lives on the title of its initial chapter in that it gets off to a flying start.

The cast assembled for "The Brass Bullet" is said to be easily the strongest that has yet appeared in a Universal serial. The players appearing in the stellar roles include such performers as Juanita Hansen, Jack Mulhall, Joseph Gerard, Ashton Dearholt and Hal Cooley.

Among the comedies which are programmed for the week are "It Can't Be Done," a Nestor, featuring Lee Kohlmar, the popular vaudeville artist; "Fools and Fires," an L-Ko, which gives Billy Armstrong and Rube Miller an opportunity to display their amusing talents, and "Don't Shoot!" a Lyons-Moran Star Comedy.

Another of the two-reel western productions which Universal reports as meeting with hearty receptions and scheduled for release during the week is "The Trail of No Return." This short subject features Neal Hart and Eileen Sedgwick, and is a fine example of the frontier story.

Special announcements concerning the Bluebird and Special Attraction features for the week will be issued by Universal shortly.

Barrymore Finishes "On the Quiet."

John Barrymore has completed "On the Quiet," the picturization of the play by Augustus Thomas which will mark his reappearance in the field of motion pictures as a star of Paramount productions. Under the supervision of Chester Withey, who directed the picture, the film is now in the course of final preparation for the screen and the announcement of the release date may be expected within the next few weeks.

"Secret Strings" Chosen For Olive Tell's First

MAXWELL KARGER production manager of Metro's eastern studios, has selected "Secret Strings" as the initial production for Olive Tell. Originally a short magazine story from the pen of Kate Jordan it was later converted into play form for Lou Tellegen, and its scenarioization has been made by June Mathis.

"Secret Strings" is a story that is rich in adventure, romance, intrigue, with a strong love interest throughout. It is one of the best screen mediums that Metro has yet secured.

John Ince has been appointed by Mr. Karger to direct Miss Tell and her company, and actual work before the camera has begun.

William J. Kelly has been engaged to play opposite Miss Tell. He will have the role formerly played by Lou Tellegen in the stage production.

Continuing Demand for "Zeppelin L-21."

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" continues to set the fast pace it established some weeks ago as a most timely short-length war feature, says General Film Company. It pictures the aerial raids on London and the sensational manner in which Zeppelins were eliminated as a vital factor in the war by a daring British aviator.

Big Advertising Campaign For Pathe's "Hands Up"

CONTRACTS just signed by Mr. Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., assure to "Hands Up" the new Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland stars, and which will be released on August 18, the most pretentious direct-to-the-public advertising campaign which has ever been conducted on a Pathe serial.

Practically every city and town of any size in the entire United States will be extensively posted with what competent critics declare to be a model twenty-four sheet, printed in six colors from a sketch by Burton Rice. The poster shows the Phantom Rider, the imagination captivating mystery character of the serial, with Ruth Roland in his arms, escaping from pursuing Indians, his big black horse coming at top speed almost directly at the observer. To illustrate the care used to make this poster the best of its kind it is only necessary to state that 100 printings were necessary to bring out the proper shadings of color.

As the posters will all be on the boards by the 5th of August this will assure a sufficient amount of time prior to the release to arouse public interest in the serial. Present indications are that many exhibitors will take advantage of the campaign to tie it up to their own theaters through advertising in local newspapers and bill posting of their own, thus following the example of successful merchandisers in other lines who make use of national advertising on goods they stock to direct buyers to their establishments.

The list of advertising material embraces one, three and six sheet posters on each episode; the usual photographic lobby display; a general herald in two colors, following the same general layout as the herald which was so successful on "The House of Hate"; one column newspaper cuts of Ruth Roland and George Chesebro and also mats; a two column cut of Miss Roland with mat; scene cuts and mats; black and white photos of Ruth Roland, George Chesebro, Easter Walters and the Phantom Rider.

Essanay Issues Block of Snakeville Comedies

BEGINNING August 10, Essanay will issue a new series of the Snakeville comedies. This is the third block of ten pictures put out on these Western comedies, which feature Slippery Slim, Mustang Pete, and Sophie Clutts.

They will be released through the General Film Company. The first twenty now on the market have been received with such enthusiasm, according to exhibitors and the releasing organization, that it was deemed advisable to issue a third set.

They are swift moving slapstick comedies of fifteen minutes in lenth, and have been found excellent subjects to run in combination with feature productions to enliven a night's program.

Among those to be issued in the third are "When Slippery Slim Went for the Eggs," "Others Started, but Sophie Finished," "Slippery Slim Gets Square," "Snakeville's Twins," "Snakeville's Beauty Parlor," and "Versus Sledge Hammers."

Universal Working to Get Negatives Ahead

ACTING upon instructions issued by Carl Laemmle the producing units at Universal City are hard at work on subjects which are to be scheduled for release during the coming autumn and winter. With all plans for the most aggressive sales drive in the history of that organization already completed it is the desire of the Universal executives to be even further ahead in negatives than is now the case.

Information issued from the office of the general manager at Universal City states that Monroe Salisbury now has a new director, William Wolbert, and a new leading woman, Adda Gleason. The picture on which Salisbury is at work has been given the title of "That Devil Bateese," and affords the Universal player an opportunity to return to his most congenial roles.

Edith Roberts, having finished "The Deciding Kiss," is at work on a screen version of "The Doings of Diana," by Rex Taylor.

The working title of the production in which Mae Murray is being starred under the direction of Robert Leonard is "Merry Mary McGuire," and among the cast will be found William V. Mong.

Ruth Clifford has started a production under the direction of Rupert Julian, the tentative title of which is "Mating Time." The story is by Elliot J. Clawson, Rupert Julian and Fred Myton. Kenneth Harlan is the leading man.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have a new leading woman in Dot DeVore, a former musical comedy singer.

Little Zoe Rae has been started in "Sinbad, the Sailor," a unique story adapted from the Arabian Knights. Priscilla Dean is working as the star in a story entitled "Joan of the Apaches," written by Harvey Gates and produced by Joseph DeGrasse.

Allen Holubar has started production on a story of his own for Dorothy Phillips. It is entitled provisionally "Till We Meet Again."

Douglas Gerrard is at work on a sensational subject which has not been named as yet. The story was written by Sidney Toler.

Scene from "Petticoats and Politics" (Plaza-Hodkinson).

Anita King in "Petticoats and Politics" Is First Plaza

THE home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that Anita King is to be the first star whose productions will be released under the new section of Hodkinson service as Plaza Pictures. It has been published that this addition to Hodkinson service would consist of three star series.

The Anita King series, which, it is understood, will consist of eight pictures, commences with "Petticoats and Politics."

This production is a particularly happy one for Miss King, inasmuch as it gives her an opportunity to display that athletic ability which has won her fame in the past.

In "Petticoats and Politics," which is a satirical comedy on the development of woman suffrage in a small Nevada town, Miss King is given an opportunity of handling her six-shooter and racing over Western deserts, as well as participating in several tense scenes. A thread of humor runs through the story.

Several other productions following Miss King's initial offering are already completed, and the Hodkinson Corporation assures exhibitors that there will be no chance of a delay in release dates.

THE Diamond comedies released by General Film Company, produced by Diamond Film Company, of New Orleans, and directed by Frank P. Donovan, have been booked over the Loew circuit, two playing a New York theater on a recent Saturday and Sunday. The Saenger Amusement Company in the South has also booked these comedies for their fifty-two theaters for one week runs.

Chester Beecroft has secured the exclusive foreign agency for these comedies, and is now offering them to European buyers from his office at 501 Fifth avenue, New York.

The Diamond Film Company has a large daylight studio situated on the famous Bayou St. John. The studio is capable of accommodating ten directors, all working at one time. They have laboratories, projecting rooms, cutting and negative departments, jungles, carpenter and property shops, water tanks, and practically everything that a modern studio should have.

Director Donovan and General Manager William J. Hannon are installing new ideas in the plant that they gleaned in a recent trip to New York. Mr. Hannon has had picture experience, having been a producer and the owner of the Nola Feature Company, which the Diamond Company bought, although this company has no connection whatever with Nola. The Diamond is desirous of obtaining good scenarios from experienced writers, for which they will pay the regular rates. They want stories that feature a girl and comedian of the better class, with a little farce comedy intermingled. William Morgan Hannon is scenario editor of the Diamond comedies, and was formerly editor of the Nola Films. He is also the author of books on scenario writing. Scripts should be addressed to him.

Miss Fisher in Comedy of Clothes Heads Mutual List

MARGARITA FISHER heads Mutual's schedule for the week of July 22 in "Impossible Susan," a typical five-reel Fisher comedy-drama, dealing cleverly and originally with the question of whether a woman makes the clothes or clothes makes the woman. The picture casts Miss Fisher as an unsophisticated, completely awkward country girl, who, upon the death of her father, turns to a distant relative who has been for years housekeeper to a rich young bachelor. The relative secures the consent of her employer to bring Susan into the house, and he, convinced that "clothes makes the woman," agrees with an intimate friend, a tailor to fashionable women, to test his theory.

"On Her Account," the Strand comedy released on July 23, is a clever appeal for money for the American Red Cross. It deals with the troubles of an unbusinesslike bride, whose bank balance is constantly overdrawn. Her husband lets her go to jail to teach her a lesson, but he gets a $100 fine from the court when it is revealed that the offending check has been drawn in favor of the American Red Cross.

"A White Wilderness" is the fifth of the Outing-Chester adventure pictures of the series available at Mutual exchanges. It is scheduled for July 28. The picture is of a cameraman's visit to the ice fields of British Columbia, two hundred square miles of snow and ice, glaciers, towering mountain peaks and unexplored wilderness.

Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice a week news reel, is to be released hereafter by exchanges upon receipt. It carries the latest events up to the hour of closing in New York, where the editorial offices of the news weekly are now located.

Fay Tincher in "Susie Behave" (World).

Fay Tincher Says Writers Are Overlooking Comedies

FAY TINCHER, the famous comedienne, who is producing a series of two-reel comedies for distribution by World-Pictures, says that everybody writes for five-reel features and overlooks the great chance for comedy stories, for which there is a great demand.

"I am reliably informed" says Miss Tincher, "that at least a thousand stories find their way into the hands of scenario editors each week and out of this great mass of manuscripts less than fifteen are produced. Everybody who has seen a half dozen pictures is positive that they can write better stories than are shown on the screen.

"This peculiar mental process is true of the legitimate stage as well and my only regret is that these same writers do not turn their efforts toward the comedy end of the industry. The hardest thing in the world to find outside of sudden riches is a good script that can be converted into a two-reel comedy. I can assure any writer that he will have an immediate reading of any script that he sends me, and I am sure that other stars appearing in comedies will do the same. The one thing for the author to bear in mind is to confine the scenes to a limited number of sets, as a two-reel comedy has to depend upon situations instead of scenic environment."

Butte's Rialto Pulls Chaplin Stunt.

A novel publicity stunt put over in conjunction with the showing of Charlie Chaplin's initial First National attraction, "A Dog's Life," was the means of securing considerable space in the news columns of local newspapers for the Rialto theater of Butte, Mont. The stunt consisted of holding a "Charlie Chaplin Imitation Contest" following a performance of "A Dog's Life."

Scores of Butte youngsters responded to the invitation of the Rialto's manager to compete for the prizes which were offered for the three most accurate imitations of the famous Chaplin eccentricities, the merits of each contestant's performance being decided by the audience's applause.

The stunt was a big success from a business-getting standpoint, for friends and relatives of the embryo comedians turned out en masse to cheer their favorites.

Irene Castle Leads Pathe For the Week of July 28

IRENE CASTLE'S "The First Law" is the important feature of the program released for the week starting July 28. Antonio Moreno is Mrs. Castle's leading man in this play. "The First Law" is based upon the novel written by Gilson Willets, who wrote "Hands Up," the new Pathe serial, and who is now regularly engaged by Pathe. The story is swift moving, and has to do with a girl who marries a scoundrel, believing herself in love with him. This marriage is kept secret, and only becomes known when the girl, realizing the madness of her step, confesses to the man she comes to love. She is attacked by her husband, and shoots in self-defense. She believes she has killed him, and falls an easy victim to the scrupulous machinations of a villainous detective. How she escapes from her predicament is cleverly and ingeniously told in the concluding part of the play.

The comedy feature on the program is supplied by Toto and a bevy of girls in "Beach Nuts," which abounds in mirth-provoking situations.

The twelfth and concluding part of "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British war review, is called "The Canadians at Vimy Ridge."

The seventh part of the Post Travel series is called "The East Indians in British Guiana."

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 62 will be released on July 31, and Hearst-Pathe News No. 63 on August 3.

Broadway Star Preparing New Wolfville Tale Series

A NEW series of Wolfville Tales is being prepared for General Film Company release in the west coast studios of the Broadway Star Features Company. The first subject will be the "Wooing of Riley." It is being filmed under the direction of Robert N. Bradbury, one of the best known authorities upon western stories in the film world. He is being assisted by Ed Gibson, who has had years of experience in the west.

Patricia Palmer, who has been playing leading feminine roles in the Wolfville and western O. Henry stories, will continue to be the feminine lead of the series. She will play the part of Faro Nell in the "Wooing of Riley." Robert E. Burns, the popular "Cherokee Hall" of the other Wolfville Tales, will again delineate this chivalric gentleman gambler. The comedy roles will be played by Kate Price and Otto Lederer, both of whom are well known for their work with Vitagraph. William Lester, the "Doc Peets" of other Wolfville Tales, will appear in the new series as the sheriff.

Oceangoing Screen Craft Are Scarce.

That it is as hard for a motion picture producer to take pictures of sea scenes on any large boats as it is for an alien enemy to take snapshots in a cantonment became evident last week when World-Pictures was endeavoring to take the "water stuff" for the second Louise Huff picture, "The Sea Waif," which Frank Reicher is directing. A number of the important scenes in this picture called for the use of a large ship off the Jersey coast, but when attempts were made to secure such a boat it was discovered that Government regulations regarding the use of boats for industry at the present time made it almost impossible to secure the desired craft. However, a ruling was finally secured under which the director was enabled to shoot the scenes.

The title of "The Sea Waif" was changed from "The Song of the Heart," as originally intended, in order to avoid conflict with a previous picture bearing the latter title.

Post Travel Pictures Going Strong.

Backed up by the co-operation of more than forty big city newspapers the Post Travel series, a weekly release by Pathe, is said to have obtained more bookings than any scenic or travel series ever released by this company. Pathe's sales department reports every print working. Unusually beautiful one sheets have been provided for lobby display.

The title of the release for July 21 is "East Indians of Trinidad."

Famous Players-Lasky Plans Exploitation of Lila Lee

THAT within three months Lila Lee, the new Paramount star, who is now appearing in her first motion picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," will be as well known as any star of the screen, is the promise of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Within three months every man, woman and child in America will know who Lila Lee is, will know her story, will know what she is going to do in pictures," said one of the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization last week. "And not only will they know about her, but they will flock to the theater that shows her photoplay. Over a dozen national magazines have already displayed her picture on the front cover and last week her picture was on four different publications on the newsstands.

"A big exploitation plan, details of which we are not in a position to give at this time, is now well under way for Miss Lee. There are several new things in the way of publicity which are being used and designed to make her name a household word. A great deal of routine publicity has already been evidenced. Photos, stories, advertisements and special articles are appearing in daily newspapers throughout the country as well as in national magazines of every description. The motion picture 'fan' magazines will carry her photo on the front cover. Special articles in many publications have been arranged for, some of them having already appeared.

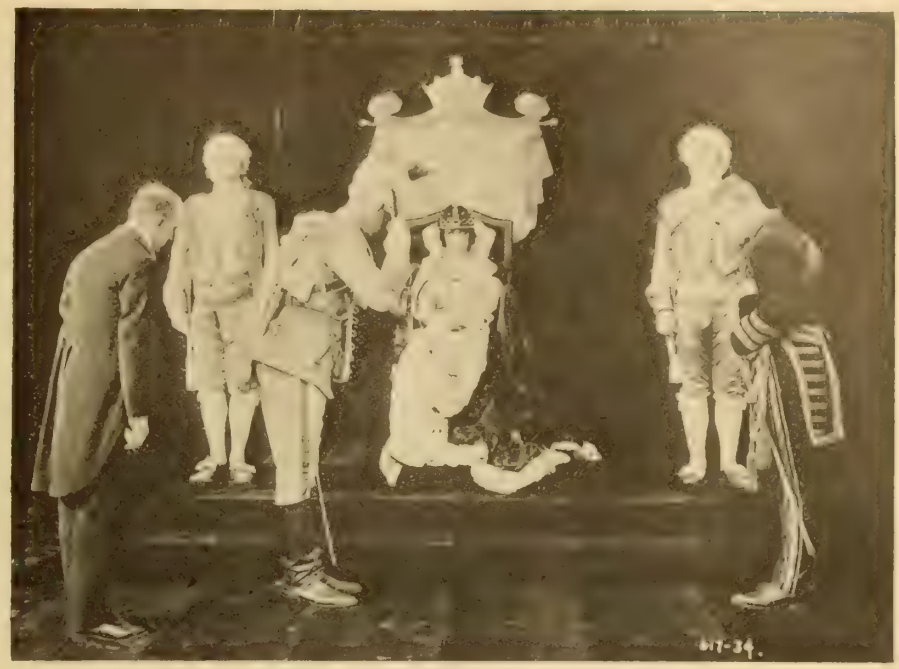
"Magazine and Sunday sections of newspapers will carry feature articles and layouts on Lila Lee. A rotogravure photographic section will be published in thirty-three newspapers in the largest cities of the country.

"Exclusive stories with illustrations have been sent to all newspapers of importance. These stories tell of Miss Lee's discovery by Gus Edwards eight years ago and of her later discovery by Jesse L. Lasky, who is now engaged in making of her one of the greatest stars in the firmament of films. This story of her life, which reads like fiction, is so unusual that it is bound to arouse interest."

Lockwood to Appear in Screen Classics, Inc.

THAT Harold Lockwood's appearances as a star in the productions of Screen Classics, Inc., distributed by Metro, under which banner future Lockwood vehicles, beginning with the recently completed, "A King in Khaki," are to be presented, will be made under the most auspicious circumstances is indicated in an announcement of the arrangements which have been made to cover Mr. Lockwood's activities in the East, where he arrived with members of his company last week for an indefinite stay.

The Lockwood company is occupying the Bacon-Backer studios at 230 West Thirty-eighth street, New York. It is a new plant with every facility known to modern picture making.



"Pals First" has been selected as the next vehicle, and the production of it has already been started. It is a romantic drama, based on Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the name, and is recalled as having been presented on the speaking stage, with William Courtenay and Thomas A. Wise playing the leading roles, in an adaptation of the printed work prepared by Leon Wilson Dodd.

The production of the picture is in charge of Edwin Carewe, who has staged many Metro releases and who is considered one of the genuinely successful directors for the screen. He put on "Cora," starring Emily Stevens, the first Metro picture to be marketed, and has been with Metro practically ever since.

Antonio Gaudio, whose efforts in photographing Lockwood's Metro releases in the last two years have won him wide recognition, will act as cameraman.

Miss Kenyon Honored at West Point.

Doris Kenyon, star of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., took time enough off from the screening of "The Inn of the Blue Moon" to spend the week-end at West Point. Miss Kenyon was chaperoned by Brigadier-General and Mrs. Eli Hoyle, of the Coast Defense. General Hoyle was formerly adjutant at West Point. The entire cadet corps was turned out to honor the former adjutant and the moving picture star. Miss Kenyon was the guest of honor at a dinner party followed by a dance given by Major Densmore Nelson, in charge of the cavalry at West Point.

Roy Stewart Is Cupid's Messenger in Triangle Western

THE first release on the Triangle program for July 21 is "By Proxy," third in a series of the Henry Wallace Phillips' "Red Saunders" stories, and all who have read it will want to see Roy Stewart's interpretation of the "happy go lucky" Westerner. "False Ambition" is the second release for the week, and features Alma Rubens as an Oriental fortune teller.

None of the depressing moments which so frequently prevail in Western plays are apparent in "By Proxy." It tells of the clean, clear, brisk West, with lots of fun, and a romance in which, through mistaken identity, "Red" Saunders, the friend of a pal in distress, at last wins for himself a bride. Roy Stewart is again "Red" Saunders, with Maude Wayne as Lindy, the heroine. Like its predecessors this play was directed by Cliff Smith, with photography by Steve Rounds.

The second release on the Triangle program for the week features Alma Rubens in a production directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton, "False Ambition," from a story by E. Magnus Ingleton. It is a story of contrasting personalities; of conflicting emotions. The mystically attractive personality of Judith is her misfortune. This highly tempered, dark eyed beauty unconsciously creates her own calamity only to be saved from ruin by the decree of fate, which finally, through love, awakens her to a realization that she possesses a soul.

Alam Rubens is Judith, and she is supported by a cast of unusual length, including Peggy Pearce, Edward Peil, Lee Phelps, and Lee Hill. The photography of this production is said to be exceptional. Jack McKensie was the cameraman.

Entertainment Needed for Soldiers' Families at Home

IT is announced by General Sales Manager William Stoermer of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation that several new and important releases will shortly be added to the company's program.

"I find," says Mr. Stoermer, "that the demand for domestic subjects is strong. There is a revulsion among exhibitors against war stuff, as it is called, unless it is of an exceptionally interesting and important nature.

"These remarks of mine," continues Mr. Stoermer, "are based upon reports from our exchanges. While it is true that war is the uppermost thought in all our minds, it is also true that the mind needs relaxation and relief. Look at the efforts that are being made to amuse our soldiers in France. Do you not also think that the people at home need to be entertained and amused? I do and so do most of us, I think, who give the matter a little sober reflection.

"Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war, and there is much mental suffering at home of a heroic nature to be alleviated.

"I would like to take the opportunity of stating that the American Standard stands only for clean subjects. The screen must be kept pure, inspiring and uplifting in teaching. Sex subjects as such no longer find a vogue in the motion picture theater. We must all endeavor to show the finer and nobler things of life in our pictures. This is no time for derogating human nature, but rather one for endeavoring to exalt it."

Von der Goltz Should Be Authority on "Prussian Cur"

Captain Horst Von der Goltz, who appears personally in the William Fox production of "The Prussian Cur," and upon whose revelations of the German spy system in America the picture is largely based, has had a career that fairly bristles with adventure. Von der Goltz, during a period of ten years, served the Kaiser as a secret agent in Europe, Mexico, Canada and the United States, and now, in "The Prussian Cur," he exposes the whole vast system of intrigue and espionage to which he formerly belonged.

The former secret agent, in the role of Otto Goltz, portrays on the screen the inside workings of the "invisible embassy" which Count von Bernstorff left in America when he was sent home, also the insidious propaganda which was set on foot by the ex-ambassador while he was representing Germany in the United States.

Von der Goltz, according to his own confession at the trial in New York of Capt. Hans Tauscher, was closely associated in these intrigues with Franz von Papen, formerly German military attache in this country. It was because Von Papen betrayed him to the English Government and almost caused his execution as a spy that Von der Goltz, as he declares, turned against his former masters and determined upon a complete exposure of the secret methods of Berlin.

Coming to America at the time of the Madero uprising in Mexico, he entered the United States army, later deserting and joining the Mexican revolutionists. He eventually drifted into the service of Villa, and left the forces of "Pancho" only when summoned to Washington to take up the work of Bernstorff and Von Papen in "Educating the American Public."

When the plot to blow up the Welland Canal in Canada was hatched, Von der Goltz was the man chosen to lead the expedition. The attempt ended in failure and Von der Goltz fled to England on a forged passport bearing the name of "Bridgeman Taylor." Later, when Von Papen was sent home to Germany, papers found on him by British officials implicated Von der Goltz in alleged acts of espionage against England, and the spy was arrested and thrown into the Tower of London. For fifteen months he faced the penalty of death, but was finally released in order that he might go to America and testify against his former colleagues in the trial of Captain Tauscher.

Captain Von der Goltz has laid bare, in "The Prussian Cur," the huge mass of secret information which he gained during his long period of service with America's arch-foe.

Scene from "The Girl from Bohemia" (Pathe).

Local Color Rampant in Pathe's "Girl from Bohemia"

SINCE newspapers of general circulation and the nationally sold magazines have been very generous in the past two or three years in affording gratuitous publicity to the alleged Bohemians who inhabit Washington Square, McDougall Alley, West Fourth street, Sheridan Square, and many other parts of old Greenwich village in New York the interest in Irene Castle's Pathe play, "The Girl from Bohemia," will be by no means local. New Yorkers who know their New York are inclined to scoff at the stories of the peculiar "painters, poets, and posturers who live in old Fourteenth street."

Be all that as it may there is a certain glamour still hovering over these men and women who propose to live the life idyllic in the neighborhood described as America's "Latin" quarter. The scene of "The Girl from Bohemia" is laid in the neighborhood of Greenwich village, and picturizes the adventures of a heroine who proves she is a regular woman in spite of fads and foibles.

"The Girl from Bohemia" will follow Mrs. Castle's "The First Law." Further interest centers about both these pictures, for they are the last to be taken in which the widow of the dancer-aviator appears.

Coombs to Support Catherine Calvert.

Guy Coombs, formerly leading man for Madame Petrova and other stellar luminaries of the screen, will appear opposite Catherine Calvert in "The Girl with a Past," by Paul Armstrong, now being produced by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. Miss Calvert is Mr. Armstrong's widow and starred in some of his most successful dramas, including "A Romance of the Underworld." She is now being featured in a screen adaptation of his play. All of the interiors of "The Girl with a Past" are being taken in the Biograph Studios in the Bronx. Some picturesque exteriors have been filmed in the last fortnight in the northern part of New Jersey. The story is a romantic one, replete with thrills and dramatic incident.

Paramount Issues Five Productions in August

FIVE feature productions, in nearly all of which comedy is the dominant element, are embodied in the Paramount release schedule for the month of August. Three of them are Thomas H. Ince productions starring Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, while Pauline Frederick and Billie Burke will be seen as the respective stars of the two others.

"A Nine o'Clock Town," issued August 5, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Charles Ray, was both written and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Jane Novak again appears as Mr. Ray's leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Otto Hoffman, Gertrude Claire, Catherine Young and Dorcas Mathews.

Victorien Sardou's famous play, "Fedora," first played by Mme. Bernhardt in Paris and later in this country by Fanny Davenport and in grand opera by Mme. Cavalieri, will be found to be admirably suited to the dramatic talents of Pauline Frederick. This August 12 release was directed by Edward Jose. Alfred Hickman, Jere Austin, W. L. Abingdon and Wilmuth Merkyll comprise the cast.

Billie Burke's starring vehicle is "In Pursuit of Polly." Izola Forrester and Mann Page wrote the story from which Eve Unsell prepared the scenario. Thomas Meighan appears as Miss Burke's leading man and in the cast are Alfred Hickman, Frank Losee, A. J. Herbert, William David and Ben Deely. Chester Withey directed.

Under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, R. William Neill directed Dorothy Dalton in "Green Eyes," which will be released August 26. In the cast are Jack Holt, Emory Johnson, Doris Lee, Robert McKim and Clyde Benson.

In "Coals of Fire," also set for release August 26, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Enid Bennett, Fred Niblo makes his screen bow in the leading male role. Victor L. Schertzinger directed. Melbourne MacDowell, Billy Elmer, Virginia Southern, John P. Lockney and Donald MacDonald are in the cast.

"Smiling Sammy" a Near-Star.

Smiling Sammy, the colored lad who has been so prominent in recent Baby Marie Osborne pictures made by Diando, attains almost stellar importance in "Winning Grandma," the Baby Marie picture to be released by Pathe August 18. To see this little tike beating up the beautiful grand square piano in the home of a wealthy granddame is a circus in itself.

Julius Stern Engages Avery to Direct L-Ko's

Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Comedy Company, announces that Charles Avery has been engaged to direct some of the forthcoming pictures to be filmed by that organization. Avery is one of the industry's veteran comedy directors and comes to L-Ko with a long string of screen successes to his credit. Given his original opportunity by D. W. Griffith, Mr. Stern's new producer later became affiliated with the Keystone organization.

No less than thirty-one of the vehicles in which Roscoe Arbuckle has appeared were directed by Avery. He also produced the Hogan series in which Charlie Murray was starred. Probably the most notable comedy for which this director was responsible was "The Submarine Pirate," in which was featured Sid Chaplin, brother of the famous Charlie. Sid Chaplin appeared in six other Avery-directed pictures.

Immed'ately prior to his L-Ko connection Avery was affiliated with Mack Sennet. The name of his first picture, which is now in course of production, has not as yet been announced by the head of the L-Ko company.

Mutual Reports Advance Bookings for Hayakawas

Samuel Rork, general sales manager of Haworth Pictures Corporation, who is selling direct to exhibitors in the more important cities of the United States for first-run release in leading theaters the Hayakawa series of eight specials in five and six parts, to be released by Mutual, points to bookings already contracted as evidence of the Japanese star's popularity.

"Hayakawa's success is absolute," said Mr. Rork. "It is due to the subtle genius of an artist who has studied American life and manners and who has ability to make the most of strong contrasts between them and Japanese thought and custom.

"A short time ago I booked the series of Hayakawa specials with W. H. Clune of Los Angeles. Mr. Clune told me that he considered Hayakawa the most finished actor on the screen, and his opinion is supported by most of the big theater managers of the country with whom I have come in contact. Mr. Clune said:

" 'Hayakawa has been an instantaneous success in my territory, and the reason isn't hard to establish. I doubt whether the star's genius would have won him recogniation so wide as that he now enjoys had he appeared on the American stage in Japanese costume, interpreting Japanese drama, though his success in Japan was as complete as has been his triumph in the United States.'

"The first two of the Hayakawa series, 'His Birthright' and 'The Temple of Dusk," have been completed, and the star is now at work in Los Angeles on his third picture."

What Fox is Doing at Studios East and West

FIVE William Fox productions are now at work in the East and at the William Fox studios at Hollywood. In the West Director Robert Thornby has just taken Jewel Carmen, the Fox star, and a company of players to Huntington Lake, where scenes will be filmed for "Lawless Love," which is adapted from a magazine story by Max Brand of the same name.

William Farnum and Director Frank Lloyd and a company of thirty are now in the Grand Canyon in Arizona filming scenes in the Zane Grey story, "The Rainbow Trail," which is sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," another Zane Grey story just completed by Mr. Farnum.

Director J. Gordon Edwards has started on "The She-Devil," his twenty-eight production for William Fox, and while Gladys Brockwell is away on a vacation Director Edward LeSaint is busy cutting "Kultur."

Director Lynn Reynolds is in the second week of the filming of "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," in which Tom Mix will be starred. In the cast supporting Mix are Kathleen Connors, Dick LaReno, Charles LeMoyne, Jack W. Dill, Val Paul and Maude Emory.

In the East a big production directed by Richard Stanton has just been finished. George Walsh has completed "Under the Yankee Flag." Peggy Hyland is working on "Bonnie Annie Laurie." "The Liar" is the title of a drama which Virginia Pearson has in working at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn. "The Prussian Cur," a big production directed by R. A. Walsh, has been completed.

Mutt and Jeff Go After U-Boats.

Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, has solved the problem of ridding the United States coast of the U-boats which have been destroying commerce. One of Fisher's latest Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons has for its title "Hunting the U-boats," and in this picture Mutt and Jeff are shown exercising a little aquatic hate on the Kaiser's Fusileers of Frightfulness. The picture is right up to the minute.

Essanay's "Young America" Strikes Patriotic Keynote

YOUNG AMERICA," the George K. Spoor feature which now is in the course of production at the Essanay studios, is a particularly timely play, inasmuch as it strikes the patriotic keynote of the American youth.

It shows that inherent love for the flag and country in every boy's heart no matter what his condition or station in life. While it deals with particular boys, yet they are embodiments of the typical American youth, fun loving, full of mischief, and sometimes overstepping the boundary lines, yet concealing an undercurrent of honor and loyalty that quickly responds either to individual kindness or the great moments such as call the boys to service of the nation.

The leading character is the village bad boy, a lad who has run wild since early boyhood, seemingly impossible to train or control. According to conventional standards he appears to have no code of honor or loyalty, yet there is hidden in his heart a love for his dog, for which he is willing to risk his life, and a devotion and loyalty to his "companion in crime," for which he is ready at all times to throw down the gauntlet of battle or to sacrifice his liberty.

Then comes the touch of the woman who understands him, and the blossoming of all the inherent good in the lad because of her kindness to the dog that everyone else scorns and kicks.

Finally comes the emergency of the threat to his country, when all the enthusiasm and manliness of a boy rapidly approaching mature years springs to the front in the determination to protect his flag and his country against all enemies at all costs.

Nothing more typical of boyhood and of the life and psychology of young America could be exemplified than by this photoplay. The boys in the picture are as truly alive and human as are Huckleberry Finn or Tom Sawyer, given to the same mischievousness, and stimulated by the same motives to good or evil.

Kerrigan Reissues Sold For Several Territories

AS an indication of the demand for short length subjects in which stars of present day popularity appear, the Arrow Film Corporation points to the fact that the following buyers have already contracted for the series of ten two reel and thirty single reel reissues of J. Warren Kerrigan subjects: Benjamin Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Standard Film Service, Cleveland and Detroit, for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky; E. & H. Film Distribting Company, Atlanta, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina. and V. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis, for Indiana.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow, announces that a novel method of sales and exploitation is being pursued by this organization. Before accepting a series of reissues, inquiry is made among theaters and exchanges as to the popularity of the productions, and based upon the answers received, the policy and method of sale is determined. If the answers indicate that any specific star or character of productions is not in demand in more than two-thirds of the United States the Arrow does not exploit the release.

Famous Players Makes a Correction.

In the recent extensive advertising of the coming year's productions of the Faous Players-Lasky Corporation to be released under the Paramount and Artcraft trademarks, which was placed in all the trade papers, the authorship of "The Man from Painted Post," an Artcraft picture in which Douglas Fairbanks appeared, was credited to John Emerson and Anita Loos. This was an error. The story was written and produced by Joseph Henaberry.

Pathe Plans Sales Reel for "Hands Up."

Pathe will issue a special sales reel on the new serial "Hands Up" it is announced. This will be shown to exhibitors throughout the United States the latter part of July. It comprises views of the special paper and other advertising aids, scenes from the opening episodes of the serial, which is the first one of western atmosphere to be issued by Pathe, and shots of the stars, Ruth Roland and George Chesebro, and of the heavy exterior sets are included.

Elinor Field.

Elinor Field to Star In One-Reel Strands

ELINOR FIELD, vivacious, pretty and seventeen, has been selected by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to star in motion pictures. A year ago Elinor, her hair in curls, was a student at a Los Angeles high school, and a good student, too. She attracted attention in an amateur theatrical and was urged to enter screen work.

She got into a comedy stock company as an extra and the director quickly saw her possibilities. She was given more important parts in the cast with each successive production. Her charming mannerisms and the intelligence of her efforts won her quick recognition.

Now Mr. Sheldon announces that Miss Field will be starred in Mutual Strand comedies, the one-reel farces which have been so distinctly successful during the last year.

"She's just the girl we've been looking for," said Mr. Sheldon after his attention had been called to Miss Field's work and he had viewed some of the things she had done. "She does comedy just the way that we want comedy done for the Strands."

Miss Field will work under the direction of Scott Sidney, who has been responsible to a large degree for the quality and character of the Mutual Strands.

"Her Moment" Ready for Release.

The immediate release of Samuel H. London's "Her Moment," the seven-part dramatic production, with Anna Luther starred, is promised by General Film Company. Prints for the feature have already been supplied the thirty exchanges in the United States and Canada, and pre-release showings are now being held for the benefit of exhibitors. Advance bookings for "Her Moment" have come up to General Film expectations, and are said to promise a wide popularity for the feature, declared to be a most unusual problem play.

Diando Annexes "Folly" Beauty.

Mildred Reardon, whose bright eyes and shapely figure will be remember by those who may have attended Monsieur Ziegfeld's classical entertainment, "The Follies," is making her debut in the films at Diando studios in Los Angeles.

Sherry to Release Keeney's "Out of the Night" Aug. 4

AUGUST 4 has been tentatively set as the date for the third release of the William L. Sherry Service, "Out of the Night," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, a Frank A. Keeney production. Mr. Sherry is distributing all of the Keeney pictures and all of the pictures which are being produced by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. The picture by Mr. Sheldon is said to be one of exceptional interest, and is alive with thrilling incidents and highly dramatic situations. As in all the other Keeney pictures thus far produced, Catherine Calvert is featured. Herbert Rawlinson, one of the best known leading men of the screen, plays the part opposite her. The production was made under the direction of James Kirkwood, who directs all of the Keeney pictures. Mr. Sheldon was the author of "The Forbidden Path," one of Theda Bara's greatest successes.

The service newly organized by Mr. Sherry released June 30 its first picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," a Keeney production. A week later the initial production of Miss Kenyon as the head of her own company, "The Street of Seven Stars," was released. The demand for both pictures has been remarkably good, Mr. Sherry says, in spite of the general lassitude of the summer season.

"Reports from exhibitors show that the class of pictures I am now handling are going over big with the public," says Mr. Sherry. "They are not only quality pictures, but pictures with a punch and a real, human appeal. I had been assured by my various exchange managers even before I began actual distribution that exhibitors were clamoring for high-class productions, and were willing to pay the price provided they got the goods. My whole effort was directed to the end that exhibitors should be supplied with the kind of pictures they want, because they are more intimately familiar than anybody else with the kind of picture the public wants. The producer or the distributor may have his own opinion as to what the people should have, but he cannot feel the pulse of the public as exhibitors can. Therefore the surest criterion of the proper kind of picture for the producer to make and the distributor to handle is to be found in the needs of the exhibitor, and the general purveyor of pictures who studies these needs the most carefully is the one who meets with the greatest success."

The next Kenyon release will be "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, a picturesque story replete with dramatic incident and liberally spiced with thrills. The fictional rights have been disposed of to one of the leading American magazines.

"Fedora" With Frederick To Be Released August 12

WITH the release of "Fedora" on the Paramount schedule on August 12 the public again will have an opportunity of seeing Pauline Frederick in a Sardou role. The prestige of Sardou as a contributor to the French stage may be compared in a certain sense to that of Shakespeare as a creator of English drama.

"Fedora" was written for Mme. Bernhardt, and was produced by her in Paris in 1882. Fanny Davenport produced the play with immense success at the Fourteenth Street theater, New York, on October 1, 1883, and it was her starring vehicle for four years thereafter. Subsequently it was set to music and Mme. Cavalieri sang the title role at the Metropolitan Opera House in December, 1906.

The story is a tragic portrayal of the intrigue which permeated Russian court life during the last century. The work of adapting it to the screen was intrusted to Charles E. Whittaker, who spent many years in Russia. Finally, the directing of the production was placed in the hands of Edward Jose, the veteran French actor and stage director. The result of their combined efforts is a production said to be of the greatest dramatic intensity and supremely artistic in every respect.

Marion Davies Company Returns from Washington

THE Marion Davies Company, which is making "The Burden of Proof" under the direction of Julius Steger, has returned from Washington, where the first week's filming was done, and established itself in the Norma Talmadge studio on East Forty-eighth street, New York.

"The Burden of Proof" is to be the second of Marion Davies' series of Select Pictures. The large cast which has been gathered by Supervising Director Steger has been completed by the addition of Eloise Clement, who, on account of her success on the stage and screen, has been engaged for a highly dramatic role; Fred Hearn, who will be assistant director, as well as having a prominent part; Mary Richards, who will again be seen in one of the dowager roles for which she has made a reputation, and Edwin Stanley.

These, together with Miss Davies, John Merkyle, leading man, and L. Rogers Lytton, complete the group of actors in "The Burden of Proof." Acting with Mr. Steger, who has entire charge of the production, is John G. Adolphi, co-director. The camera work is entrusted to the experienced hands of Andre Barlartier.

"Cleopatra" Makes Hit in Chicago.

"The most successful run in Chicago this season," is the verdict of J. R. Grainger, Fox Film Corporation special representative, in commenting on the showing of "Cleopatra," the William Fox-Theda Bara spectacle-drama in the Windy City.

"Cleopatra," which has been playing to capacity houses since it was first shown at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, early in June, has established a record for Chicago for the length of its run. The big picture's run at the Colonial was a record in itself, but now it is booked for three weeks downtown, at the Rose and Boston theaters.

To show the repeating value of the big spectacle, Mr. Grainger cites the fact that the Lubliner & Trinz and the Archer Brothers' circuit of theaters have booked "Cleopatra" for forty-eight days return engagements. Managers of several neighborhood houses have complained that they did not book the picture long enough for its first run, and are taking it on for a second and a third showing.

Ebony Has New Studio.

The Ebony Film Corporation has established its summer studio quarters in Fond du Lac, Wis., where it is making a series of comedies for General Film Company. Increased facilities for the production of Ebony comedies is announced as one reason for the move from Chicago, to which the company will return at the close of the summer season.

"A Black and Tan Mix-Up" is released this week by General Film, and other subjects in the new series will be ready shortly.

Louise Glaum Starts Fourth Paralta.

Louise Glaum, Paralta star, has begun the filming of another production. As with her three previous Paralta Plays, she will be directed by Wallace Worsley. The working title is "A Law Unto Herself," which will, however, probably be changed before release. A fine supporting cast includes Joseph J. Dowling, Edward Coxen, Sam de Grasse, Elvira Weil, Roy Laidlaw and Jess Herring.

L. Guy Wilky will photograph the production, which is being produced at the Brunton studios.

Atlantic City Backgrounds for Emmy Wehlen Subject

DIRECTOR Charles J. Brabin has taken Emmy Wehlen and the Metro company supporting her in "The Bonded Wife" down to Atlantic City to film several scenes depicting life at one of our American seacoast vacation resorts. Lois and Arthur Zellner wrote "The Bonded Wife" and June Mathis made the scenario.

It is these particular scenes upon which the whole crux of the play hinges. It is here that Doris Morse—Miss Wehlen—comes incognito after leaving the wealthy home of her father, Digby Morse, which is played by Frank Currier, tired of the luxury with which she has been surrounded and desirous of just being one of a group for a change; and it is here that she meets Phil Hazzard, impersonated for the screen by Creighton Hale, and her entire life's interest is changed.

Miss Wehlen, during this portion of the play, will have an opportunity for that beauty of costuming for which she is so well known, and included in her list of distinctly smart and charming frocks are some recent Paris importations; and Miss Wehlen's bathing suits are really a whole picture in themselves, the star having had them made and hand-painted in accordance with her own original designs.

Chaplin Gets Australia's Cake.

For the first time in its history The Green Room Magazine of Australia has given the historical "Green Room cake" to a man in appreciation of his work. That man is Charlie Chaplin, the famous million-dollar comedian; the work, "A Dog's Life."

The Green Room cake is a real cake of huge proportions, which for a number of years has been given to an actress, either of the stage or films, for some special achievement in her art. The ovation given to Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" recently in Sydney was so great, however, that the proprietors of the magazine decided to depart from the usual custom of giving only to an actress, and so Charlie "took the cake."

The cake is on its way from the Antipodes, and its arrival at the Chaplin studios is looked forward to with keen interest.

"The Fallen Angel" (Fox).

Depicting the temptation, the fall and the disillusionment of a girl who preferred luxury to honor, "The Fallen Angel," with Jewel Carmen as the star, is announced as the latest of the William Fox Special Feature releases. "The Fallen Angel" is based on one of the most famous of Gouverneur Morris's stories, "You Can't Get Away With It," which created a sensation recently when published in magazine and book form. The scenario was written by Bennett Cole and the picture was directed by Robert Thornby, this being the first production directed for William Fox by Mr. Thornby.

Miss Carmen is supported by a particularly capable cast in "The Fallen Angel," the other players being Charles Clary, L. C. Shumway, Herbert Heyes, Daisy Robinson and Lavine Monsch.

Snappy Titles for Outing-Chesters.

"Entertainment value," the well-known punch, has been put into the series of Mutual's one-reel Outing-Chester adventure pictures with clever and original subtitles. These titles were written by Katharine Hilliker on the order of the present-day popular magazine caption. The conventional dryly worded descriptive matter of this type of picture is disguised in clever, entertaining chatter, which tells the audience as much as the more laborious and serious caption did, but in a much more vivid way. The titles are semi-humorous and snappy.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Runs Month in Boston

THE first United States official war film, "Pershing's Crusaders," compiled under the direction of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has completed an engagement of four consecutive weeks at Gordon's Olympia theater, Boston. The run of the big war film at the Boston theater proved an emphatic success, capacity business having prevailed throughout the entire engagement.

N. H. Gordon, who controls the New England franchise of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has made arrangements to feature "Pershing's Crusaders" in the entire string of theaters which he operates throughout the New England states, after which he will distribute the picture generally throughout his territory.

Mr. Gordon reports keen interest among New England showmen in "Pershing's Crusaders," and declares that he anticipates a record-breaking demand for the picture, basing his judgment upon the scores of inquiries that are pouring into his office daily from exhibitors in his territory seeking booking reservations for the film.

Author of Fox Picture Praises Gladys Brockwell

ON learning that William Fox intended to star Gladys Brockwell in "The Strange Woman," the Broadway stage success the picture rights to which Mr. Fox has just bought, William J. Hurlbut, the author, wrote a letter to the Fox Film Corporation stating that he could think of no screen actress whom he would rather have interpret his play than Miss Brockwell. Work on "The Strange Woman," for which, it is understood, Mr. Fox paid many thousands of dollars, will begin soon at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal.

When "The Strange Woman" was produced on the stage three years ago it ran a full season on Broadway. Then it duplicated its New York success on the road, playing to capacity audiences in all the big cities. So successful was it as a stage production that several motion picture producers tried to buy it.

In his letter Mr Hurlbut said he had seen Miss Brockwell in nearly all of her pictures and had been struck with her ability to portray her roles in such a manner that every side of the character was made to stand out vividly

Louise Glaum Finishes "Wedlock."

Louise Glaum's Paralta Play "Wedlock" is an original story written for her by Denison Clift.

In many of Miss Glaum's former subjects she was handicapped by her roles being of such a nature as to create a distate in the minds of her audience, but in "Wedlock" she portrays a character which holds the sympathy of the audience throughout the entire action.

The production was made at the Brunton Studios in California, under the direction of Wallace Worsley who has surrounded Miss Glaum with an exceptional cast in a production mounted in the same lavish manner which has won praise for Paralta Plays.

Pirate Chief Plays in "Pirate's Gold."

Albert Hart, who claims to have played more pirate's roles on the legitimate stage than any other actor, is cast for his first pirate's role on the screen in the new World-Picture, "Pirate's Gold," in which Montagu Love is starred. Before Mr. Hart entered pictures he was constantly playing the part of a bold buccaneer, and in fact no musical comedy or other production which had a part for a disciple of the skull and crossbones was considered complete unless Mr. Hart lent his presence to the Broadway production.

It gave R. B. McIntyre, casting director, a great deal of satisfaction to engage Hart for the part of the pirate chief. Hart, too, was pleased, and remarked that after being pictured in a hundred roles this was his first chance to get back to first principles.

L-Ko to Feature Chinaman.

A genuine Oriental makes a bid for popularity in the comedy field in the L-Ko comedy, "A Clean Sweep." His name is Chai Hong, and according to Julius Stern, head of the L-Ko aggregation, he is due to make a decided impression on photoplay fans. Chai Hong has a style peculiarly his own. More important is the fact that he admits never having been filled with the ambition to imitate Charlie Chaplin.

The L-Ko's new comedian enacts the role of a Celestial laundry magnate, who helps to run smoothly the course of true love as it exists between the daughter of a neighboring "lady barber" and the son of a nearby butcher.

A series of other comedies with L-Ko's Oriental comedian in the stellar roles are now in course of production.

"That's Him" Lloyd's Next.

Pathe announces "That's Him" as the next Lloyd released after "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," which has a heavy advance booking. Other coming Lloyd comedies are "Bride and Gloom," August 18, and "Two Scrambled," on September 1.

Kerrigan Now Working on "A Burglar For a Night"

J. WARREN KERRIGAN, under the direction of Ernest Warde, is making for Paralta "A Burglar for a Night." Kerrigan has the support of such screen players as Charles French, William Elmer, Robert Brower, Herbert Prior, Lois Wilson, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Norma Roamero. The story is from the typewriter of F. McGrew Willis. The scenario is the work of Mace Bishop.

Mr. Kerrigan is given a chance to prove that he is a mighty handy young man in a fistic encounter and before the end of the five reels of celluloid romance and adventure he proves conclusively that he is a thoroughly active young New Yorker who likes a fight of any sort.

Chambers' Novel for Elsie Ferguson.

Elsie Ferguson will be seen in a picturization of a widely discussed novel, "The Danger Mark," released by Artcraft July 29. Robert W. Chambers, the author, based his story upon the delicate and often abused subject of heredity, and his method of treatment of the topic which has proved the undoing of so many of the foremost writers of fiction is declared to be both novel and plausible. With the added skill of Charles Maigne, who wrote the scenario, and Hugh Ford, who directed, the picture promises much.

There are many capable players who appear in Miss Ferguson's support. These include Mahlon Hamilton as leading man, Gertrude McCoy, Crauford Kent, Maud Turner Gordon, Edward Burns and W. T. Carlton.

Norma Talmadge Cast Complete.

Director Sydney A. Franklin has completed the cast of principals for Norma Talmadge's Select Picture, to follow "The Safety Curtain." Miss Talmadge has been at work on this production during the past two weeks, the first week having been spent in studio work and the second partly upon location.

Supporting Miss Talmadge in her role of Lucille Westbrook, a small-town girl of gentle birth and breeding, will be Eugene O'Brien, as leading man; Ramsey Wallace, in the heavy role; E. A. Warren, in a character part, and Jobyna Howland, in the role of a smart society vamp.

Next week Miss Talmadge and her company will be working at Bear Mountain, on the Hudson.

Alperstein Closes Big Deal with Sidney Garrett

THE entire foreign rights to the Leah Baird serial, now in the making, were disposed of in one deal. In the closing of the contract for the world rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the Western Photoplays, Inc., announces that the entire transaction involves a sum well in the six figures. In giving his immediate check for $10,000 to bind the deal, Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, acquired final and full control of these rights.

The screening of the first three episodes were enough to justify highest expectations, and, in fact, if the words of these two usually very conservative film men are quoted correctly, this coming serial is the peer of any previous production in the serial line. Leah Baird's well-known penchant for beautiful gowns and attractive wardrobe is satisfied as never before.

Charles Hutchinson, who shares honors with Sheldon Lewis in the principal male support of Miss Baird, does some thrilling and sensational work. In fact Mr. Hutchinson is claimed to have set a mark for other screen daredevils to shoot at for some time to come. His athletic feats in water and up mountain sides are spectacular in the extreme.

A trade screening of the first five episodes is now being arranged. This will be held under the joint auspices of the Western Photoplays, Inc., and the house of J. Frank Brockliss, as a great many foreign dealers are particularly anxious to get an immediate outline of the character of the story.

Hampton Directs Kerrigan For Hodkinson Service

"A BURGLAR for a Night," the production which J. Warren Kerrigan is now completing for Paralta, under the direction of Jesse D. Hampton, will be the last he will make for the company. In the future Kerrigan will be under the sole direction of Mr. Hampton, and his productions will be made, for the time being, in the Ince studios until such time as a personal studio can be built for him.

The Hampton-Kerrigan productions will continue to be released through the Hodkinson Corporation as part of the Hodkinson service.

Mr. Hampton, believing that stars should be supported by adequate and suitable stories in addition to capable and intelligent direction, states that he has his plans for Kerrigan productions laid out two years in advance. He intends to give him a perfectly balanced program of release.

The second story is a New York comedy drama, the third is a heart-interest story of the Wisconsin-Canadian woods, the fourth is of New York City, and the fifth an Alaskan drama. Mr. Hampton's ideas in producing pictures, with Kerrigan and the other stars which he will acquire later, are in accord with those of W. W. Hodkinson.

First Moreno-Holloway Serial Started.

Work is already well started on the Vitagraph serial in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are to be featured, according to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. Mr. Moreno arrived at the company's studios in Hollywood the last week in June and plans for starting work, under direction of Paul Hurst, were so well laid that not much time was lost in getting under way.

In this serial a large number of the players who figured in "The Woman in the Web," the greater portion of which was directed by Mr. Hurst, will be made. The cast will include among the principal players Chet Ryan, brother of Joe Ryan, and a noted rider; Barney Furey and Frank Jonasson.

Farrar Off to Wyoming to Make Goldwyn's "Hell Cat"

FOR her second Goldwyn production Geraldine Farrar makes the longest jump in her motion picture career, going direct from New York to Cody, Wyoming. On Sunday, July 14, the international celebrity left on the Twentieth Century Limited, accompanied by Lou-Tellegen, her husband; Reginald Barker, her director; a complete technical staff, a Goldwyn publicity representative and her personal attendants.

Goldwyn sent a man ahead to select locations and to make all necessary arrangements, enabling Miss Farrar and Mr. Barker to begin work the day of arrival. Geraldine Farrar is a star who abhors rest and inactivity, and it is at her expressed wish that no time be lost.

She is enthusiastic over the prospect of the long stay in the Far West she adores and is equally sanguine over the success of the play chosen for her. It is "The Hell Cat," written especially for her by Willard Mack, editorial director of Goldwyn Pictures.

The story is described as absolutely modern in treatment and theme, and provides Geraldine Farrar with a strenuous role highly charged with emotional crises. In no sense is the star restricted in the matter of clothes, for the action of the play enables her to wear the splendid attire of today for which she is famous.

The strongest cast to be obtained will surround Miss Farrar as "The Hell Cat," chief of whom will be Milton Sills and Thomas Santschi, engaged by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, on his recent trip to the Coast. They will come from Los Angeles, meeting Miss Farrar and her company in Cody.

Johnson's Cannibal Pictures To Be Shown on Broadway

A MOST STARTLING series of film presentations will soon be shown to Broadway audiences when the Martin Johnson picturization of life in the South Sea Islands will be presented at the Rivoli, starting Sunday, July 21.

Probably no more hazardous adventure has been undertaken than this expedition, in which Mr. Johnson was accompanied by his wife, into the heart of the cannibal section of this enchanting tropical country.

Truly remarkable as these pictures are said to be from the artistic standpoint their greatest merit lies in their startling portrayal of actual living conditions and customs of those queer peoples who are the only known race of cannibals now living, and it was only after being captured, wounded several times, and finally rescued through the medium of a British man-of-war, that Mr. Johnson and his wife were able to emerge alive. Mr. Johnson will lecture at each presentation.

What National Aims to Do in the Next Twelve Months

WILLIAM PARSONS, creator of the National Film Corporation of America and star in his own comedy productions, under the title of Capitol Comedies, when he arrived from Los Angeles recently, brought with him the concluding part of "Tarzan of the Apes," which is a continuation of Edgar Rice Burroughs' first novel and the completing chapters of the highly original and sensational story which is now being distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Just what distribution form the new Tarzan subjejct will have Mr. Parsons has not announced, but out of the volume of offers the National Film Company has already received some concrete arrangement will emanate and a later announcement will be made.

Mr. Parsons, in addition to the Tarzan print, brought with him seven completed Smiling Billy comedies. These are to be offered through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, the exchanges of which organization have been handling the Parsons subjects since their introduction.

Billie Rhodes will begin work on a series of five and six-reel features early in August, at the National studios, Hollywood.

The Australasian Films, Ltd., represented by Millard Johnson, has contracted for the entire output of Parsons comedies, and other deals for foreign rights are pending.

All in all, the National Film Corporation of America contemplates producing during the forthcoming year twenty-six comedies with Smiling Bill Parsons, six or eight five-reel comedy dramas with Billie Rhodes and another special feature along the lines of "Tarzan."

"More Trouble" a Clean-Up.

Reports from Pathe's thirty branches throughout the United States indicate a cleanup on "More Trouble," the feature play in which Frank Keenan is said to have made the hit of his screen career. "More Trouble" is booked for every one of the big houses in Pacific Coast cities.

Graphic Shows Many Scenes of Fourth of July Celebration and Grand Splash of Nearly One Hundred United States Vessels on Same Day, While News Contains Views of New York's Former Mayor Who Met Death As An Aviator.

GAUMONT GRAPHIC No. 15 pictures the great loyalty parade in New York on July 4, when thousands of foreign born residents of the United States pledged their loyalty to the country of their adoption, and their willingness to fight side by side with native born Americans to free the world from Prussian militarism.

Another interesting feature shows scenes of the "greatest splash" in the world's history, when on the same date approximately 100 vessels of various types from the submarine chasing "eagles" to larger war vessels and cargo carriers were launched in the United States. The operation of the new anti-loafing law is also described

No. 16 of the Gaumont News shows a photograph of Major John Purroy Mitchel, former mayor of New York City, who fell to his death at Gerstner Aviation Field. Major Mitchel was a skilled aviator, but through some terrible accident became a martyr to the cause of civilization. In this same issue are shown many scenes of the training of aviators at Idora Park, California, also many other news subjects recently headlined in the daily papers, the wreck of the excursion steamer "Columbia," near Peoria, where a hundred lives were lost; the successful test of a giant bombing airplane, equipped with 400 horsepower Liberty motors; the visit of the Mexican Cabinet to southern California, where the representatives of the Carranza administration will learn up-to-date agricultural methods to be applied to Mexican farms; the entertainment by the soldier boys of Camp Devens of thousands of navy lads; the shattering of swimming records by fair California mermaids.

Among the Official War Pictures is a subject which shows how the trench fever, contracted from the bite of the "cootie," has been overcome by inoculation, also the splendid care taken of our wounded soldiers is shown in an American Red Cross hospital situated near Neuilly.

"My Husband's Friend" Now Handled by Arrow

THROUGH arrangements with the Rialto Film Corporation, a reissued, revised edition of the five reel drama, "The House of Mirrors," now entitled "My Husband's Friend," with Frank Miller in a prominent role, is being offered to State Rights buyers by the Arrow Film Corporation.

The addition of this production to the list of attractions exploited by the Arrow Film Corporation makes a total of seven five or more reel photoplays offered to State Right buyers by the Arrow Film Corporation since the middle of June.

"My Husband's Friend" under the title of "The House of Mirrors" was released by the Mutual Film Corporation as a special.

Of the fourteen territorial State Right Divisions in the United States, nine have already been disposed of. The Arrow Film Corporation is also offering the attraction to foreign buyers.

Author of Novel Had Photoplayer in Mind

WHEN Zane Grey wrote "The Light of Western Stars" he is said to have had in mind as his cowboy hero Dustin Farnum. The author's own words state, "The man was a cowboy, and his entrance recalled vividly that of Dustin Farnum in the first act of 'The Virginian'."

When the motion picture rights to this story were secured by Harry A. Sherman it was obvious from the foregoing passage just whom he should select as the star of the production. And it is claimed that Dustin Farnum has realized Zane Grey's conception of him in the film production that has now been completed. Every scene in the picture is enacted in the exact location described by the author.

Petrova's W. S. S. Tour Shows Wonderful Results

ACCORDING to a report rendered to the National War Saving Stamp department, Madame Petrova on her personal appearance tour of the principal cities has already sold $224,000 worth of War Saving Stamps. In Houston the crowds attending the Liberty and Queen Theaters are said to have been so great that an entire block was roped off in front of the Hotel Bender. Madame Petrova sold stamps from a fire truck, mounting a ladder to indicate the progress of the sales. At Fort Worth, she was presented by Manager Levy of the Hippodrome with a diamond and platinum brooch. Manager Levy also turned over the entire proceeds of both afternoon and evening performance to the purchase of war saving stamps.

Tourneur Protests Use of "Photoplay" Promiscuously

MAURICE TOURNEUR, the independent producer, who has completed his production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," which is to be released by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., protests against the indiscriminate use of the word "photoplay."

Says Mr. Tourneur," We see the word used in various ways, as 'photoplay comedy,' 'photoplay farce,' 'photoplay tragedy,' and so on, all of which are as wrong as the theatrical use of drama comedy, drama farce or drama tragedy would be. Why not photofarce, photocomedy or other combinations?

"Again, the use of 'photoplay' to cover all forms of silent drama, from that written originally for the screen to the adapted drama and novel, is not correct.

"Personally, I don't think photoplay is the word we have been awaiting to describe the motion picture drama. Why not try to get a better one?

"The movies have brought many words and new uses of old words to the language, as fade-out, switchback, cut-back, iris, register, shoot (othewise to photograph), screenization, scenario, script and continuity and we need a bigger word to describe the output.

"Movies is, of course, hardly a word to be used professionally. It only indicates something that moves. Surely the screen drama is something more than that now. Not that I dislike the Americanism of the word. It is rather a term of endearment, indicating the hold of the motion picture play upon the heart of the masses. We will never be able to get away from it."

"The Hand of Vengeance" Is a Red-Blooded Serial

IN a recent statement attributed to Edward L. Hyman, who is engaged in patriotic work in connection with training camp activities managing a motion picture theater at Camp Gordon, is the remark that soldier boys are the harshest critics, that they insist on clean "he-man" stories.

The Gaumont Company claim in this connection, realizing the appeal of the better class of pictures to real men and their families, are making only this class of productions, and that their new serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is above all else a man's story, although it will appeal just as strongly to a man's wife, his children and his parents; and that it is red-blooded and absolutely clean, and the principal character is a man who befriends the oppressed.

Dustin Farnum Competes In Rodeo at San Jose

DUSTIN FARNUM was among the participants at the Fourth of July rodeo at San Jose, Cal., where he proved to be a formidable competitor in the way of frontier sports and pastimes. Mr. Farnum's decision to enter the rodeo contests was a last minute affair. An equine ambulance was chartered in Los Angeles, and Mr. Farnum's rodeo horse, "Majesty," was started on its 450-mile journey a day in advance. Zane Grey, the novelist, whose book, "The Light of Western Stars," has just been filmed, with Farnum in the leading part, and Harry A. Sherman made the trip in Mr. Farnum's car.

Newspapers Praise "Stolen Orders."

Loew's Theater Renamed Savoy.

NEWARK.—It has been definitely decided, according to M. M. Kridel, to rename the Loew house situated at 99 Springfield Avenue, the Savoy Theater. "If nothing unforseen happens, the Savoy will be opened to the public August 3," said Mr. Kridel, when seen Thursday at his Goodwin Theater, 8633 Broad Street.

Workmen are now busily engaged in redecorating and renovating the showhouse. A new organ is being installed as are also new projection machines and other equipment. The corporate name of the concern that will run the showhouse is the J. & K. Enterprises, Inc. The firm has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $25,000. Simon W. Seley, of 700 Broad Street, is named as statutory agent, and the incorporators include Isadore A. Stern, Charles J. Simons, and E. L. Polack. The resident manager of the theater will be Frank Jeffrys.

The Carlton is one of the William Fox showhouses. Mr. Crook succeeds Louis P. DeWolfe, one of the most popular men connected with the local film industry. Mr. DeWolfe will enjoy a much-needed vacation, after which he will probably become connected with one of the Fox houses in another city.

Unauthorized "Four Minute" Speakers.

Ben E. Chapin, chairman of the New Jersey Division of the Four Minute Men, and other prominent members of the state body, are working to stop unauthorized persons, who speak in theaters and public places under the organization's name. These unauthorized men, it is declared, defeat the main purpose of the organization by delivering long-winded speeches, instead of the short, snappy talk desired. Mr. Chapin declared that Newark theater managers complained to him about the length of time some speakers took to deliver their talks, and it is now evident that in the future only authorized Four Minute Men will be permitted to speak in the theaters.

Cincinnati Theaters May Raise Admissions

Downtown Houses Consider Making Prices Fifteen Cents Including War Tax—Due to Increased Cost of Operation—Looking Forward to Heavy Winter Expenses, Especially in Heating.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—A general increase in the price of admission to moving picture houses in Cincinnati is being seriously discussed by leading exhibitors, as a result of the increasing expense of operation due to the demands for higher wages, higher film rentals, and prospective heavy winter expenses, especially in heating. Cincinnati theaters have been moderate in their admission charges, as evidenced by the fact that most of the downtown houses still maintain the old charge of ten cents plus war tax. It has been suggested that a charge of 15 cents, including the war tax, by all of the theaters in the business district would meet with popular approval by eliminating the bother of pennies for the tax, and would at the same time give the exhibitors some additional revenue.

Rotarians Show "Fit to Fight" Film.

The Rotary Club, of Cincinnati, has gone temporarily into the moving picture exhibition business. The Government picture produced as a means of education on the dangers which are run by the young man who is not careful to keep clear of vice, "Fit to Fight," was shown under the auspices of the Rotarians before two large audiences at the Hotel Sinton on the evening of July 11, a medical lecture by a doctor who is a member of the organization accompanying the picture.

Gerard Picture Well Received at Grand.

The success with which "My Four Years in Germany," the film version of Ambassador Gerard's book, has met in Cincinnati was such that at the Grand arrangements were promptly made for a second week's run, and at the end of the second week a third week was provided for, as the attendance continued to hold up to capacity. The increasing interest in the picture lent by its effectiveness as a counter to German propaganda has led many stores and other business concerns to make arrangements to have their employees see the film. When attendance and admission figures for the run are compiled it will take a place among the most popular films which have been shown in Cincinnati.

Grand Opens Under New Management.

ROCHESTER.—The Grand Theater, located on Plymouth Avenue, and within a few minutes of the busy downtown section, is again open and under new management. The Grand, under the ownership and management of George L. Tyler, and later, W. H. TenBroeck, did a very good business. The Grand is a one story building, built of pressed brick and seats about 1,000. It is hoped that under the management of J. Thompson, who is now in charge, the theater will again enjoy the prosperity that it once had and which it ought to have now.

Family Theater Escapes Serious Fire.

The Family Theater at Albion, near Rochester, narrowly escaped a serious fire last Friday. A night policeman discovered an incipient blaze and turned in an alarm. Rochester Manager Goes to Cleveland.

William B. McCallum, until recently manager of Fay's Theater, Rochester, has assumed the management of the Liberty and Gordon Square Theaters in Cleveland, Ohio. It is understood that he has been given an interest in the business of the two houses. It is not known who will succeed Mr. McCallum at Fay's. Mr. McCallum is probably one of the best known theater managers in this section of the country and is widely known in many other sections of the country. He formerly called Rochester his home, but left here years ago. During his absence he owned and managed theaters in several cities. When he was induced to come back here to manage the Avon, now Fay's, he did what it was said no one else could have done; that was to turn the tide of public patronage back to the Avon and put the house on the road to success again.

Goldberg Mistaken for James Gerard.

LOUISVILLE.—Joe Goldberg, of this city, who has long been associated with amusement enterprises and the local picture theaters and exchanges, for some time past has been traveling through the state and other states in which the Big Features Rights Corporation has state rights on features. For some weeks he has been presenting James Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," and in that connection has appeared on the stages and given a preliminary talk concerning the picture. However, upon mounting the stage of one of the small town theaters, he was greeted with loud and long applause. He was at a loss to account for it until after leaving the stage, when he learned that the rumor had been passed through the city that Gerard himself would deliver a talk, and that he had been mistaken for Gerard.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Strand theater celebrated its first anniversary on July 4 with an elaborate program, which attracted an audience that jammed the spacious theater and extended far onto the pavement, where hundreds stood patiently awaiting an opportunity to gain an entrance. The feature photoplay was "The Kaiser's Shadow," with Dorothy Dalton in the leading role, and the entire program took on the nature of a patriotic demonstration. One of the most impressive ceremonies in connection with the celebration of the Strand's natal day was the unveiling of a bronze tablet erected by the Saenger Amusement Company in honor of the employees of the company who have entered the service of their country. There are forty-seven names of men and women of the Saenger organization on the tablet. Its unveiling occurred after the regular show of the evening, and D. D. Griffith's Picture Transferred.

DETROIT.—"Hearts of the World," which played a very successful two weeks' engagement at the Washington Theater, Detroit, was transferred for exhibition to the Detroit Opera House, effective July 7. The Dawn Masterplay Company own this picture for Michigan and also leased the theater for the summer months, so in the event that business holding up as well their percentage of profit will be much greater. At the Opera House, the prices are practically the same as at the Washington—from 25 cents to $1.50—but instead of four shows only two shows daily are being given. Business at the new location has been very good and indications are that it will remain there for at least four or five weeks.

Capital City Complains of Express Delay

Washington Exchange Managers' Association Says Service to Certain Virginia Towns is Worse Since Companies Amalgamated—Suggest Shipment of Films by Boat to Several Points.

By C. L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The members of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association are having difficulty in getting films to and from certain Virginia towns, more so now since the amalgamation of the express companies, and are asking the exhibitors to co-operate with them to the fullest possible extent that a greater degree of efficiency will be possible in handling the situation.

The association has been informed that the best way to move films to these Virginia points is to have them properly marked. If merely turned over to the express company the films will go via all rail, and several days of delay ensue in getting them to destination. Each exchange has been notified by the association to send films for Phoebus, Hampton, Fort Monroe, and Newport News marked "via boat to Old Point Comfort—will call;" for Portsmouth and Berkley, "via boat to Norfolk—will call," and for Norfolk, "via boat."

Under this arrangement it will be necessary for the exhibitors to call for their films at the boat, but they will get quicker deliveries. The managers ask also that in returning films to the exchanges exhibitors carry the films to the boat and mark them for Washington "via boat."

There are many exhibitors who believe that the parcel post will give better service, but it must be remembered that mailed matter goes all rail, and the same delays will ensue as if the films were sent via the Southern Express.

Lust Issues Stock Lithographs.

Washington.—To meet the needs of the exhibitors in this territory, Sidney B. Lust, of the Super-Films Attractions, Inc., has had made up one and three-sheets for stock use in connection with the exhibition of Hart and Fairbanks productions. These lithographs have spaces over which a flyer announcing the name of the play may be placed. These will be found to be very handy when the exhibitor fails to get his paper along with the show. There has been a great deal of complaint against the non-arrival of paper to advertise productions, and Mr. Lust believes that keeping these stock sheets on hand will aid exhibitors.

Dallas Trade Letter

Gerard's Picture Going Strong.

DALLAS, TEX.—Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" is still going great, according to First National Circuit folks. President E. H. Hulsey reports an even better inquiry and larger list of bookings on this feature since announcement of the release of "Pershing's Crusaders" through First National. The latter picture was first shown in Texas at Del Rio and Amarillo, with other dates in the big towns closely following.

Valdez Reports Business Good.

L. M. Valdez, of the Royal opera house, Laredo, Tex., passed through Dallas during the second week in July en route to New York. Mr. Valdez reports a very successful season with his theater during the last several months, and booked some future attractions while here. He planned to remain in the East for some two weeks on a business mission. He says border conditions are much more satisfactory, with a far more pacific and settled character prevailing.

Many Bookings on Metro's War Film.

Dallas. — Manager LeRoy Bickel, of Metro, is all "hopped up" over "To Hell With the Kaiser," and reports bookings on that big war feature just rolling into the office. A private screening of the picture was put on locally during the second week in July, and the impression created was in full keeping with the advance notices telegraphed Texas exhibitors from the East a week earlier. The feature was shown first at Dallas and Houston among Texas houses early in July, and made a distinct hit.

Dallas Vitagraph Office Wins Cup.

Dallas.—The Vitagraph general manager's cup, a massive piece of gold and silver art work, is resting on General Manager J. B. Dugger's desk in Dallas. The Dallas office won it in the recent contest open to branch offices in the United States and Canada.

The Vitagraph office staff, by the way, will have a big fried chicken and watermelon banquet next week at the expense of the Boston branch. Boston recently challenged any Western branch for an eight months' business contest to end July 1. J. B. Drugger took up the challenge, and a $50 purse was agreed on. The Dallas branch won in a walk, and the "eats" are on Boston.

Abandon Cross Country Auto Trip.

A transcontinental automobile trip from San Antonio to New York was abandoned by William Epstein and Walter McCombs at Dallas after completing the first lap. The two Texas exhibitors who have recently sold their Princess and Royal theaters at San Antonio to William Lytle, of the Empire, are going into business in Mexico, so it is rumored. They started for New York overland early in July.

The motorists got as far as Waco, when they were overtaken by a swift running street car. Their automobile was badly bunged up, and had to make a trip to the dry dock, but they luckily escaped injuries. Driving on to Dallas they narrowly avoided a similar accident. They were so disgusted that they put the car in storage here and bought railroad tickets for New York.

With the Exhibitors.

C. J. Mussellman, of the Grand theater, and John Paxton, of the Parisian theater, of Paris, Texas, passed through Dallas last week motoring to south Texas. They will end their tour at the State Exhibitors' Convention at Galveston.

W. J. Lytle's big Empire airdome at Del Rio, which cost $20,000, has been opened. The theater in the border city is well patronized by United States troops stationed there.

Charles Kimball, of the American theater, McKinney, was in town a few days ago looking for live stuff.

C. H. Cornes, of the Palace, Farmersville, was a film row visitor. He booked the new Vitagraph serial, "The Fight for Millions."

E. J. Lampkin, of the Colonial, Greenville, and R. L. Moore, of the Morris at Vernon, shook hands along film row last week.

The Jefferson theater, Dallas, Roy Stinnett, manager, which has run vaudeville and pictures during the season, will keep open through the summer with pictures only.

Ed. Eames has opened the Liberty theater at Austin. He will run pictures with vaudeville.

San Angelo has a new Liberty theater. It was opened by Sam Nestor last week.

Triangle Exchange Takes Larger Quarters

Increase in Business Necessitates Moving Into Bigger Offices—Now Occupies Entire Second Floor of Building at 86 Golden Gate Avenue—Is Under Management of Ben F. Simpson.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Triangle Distributing Corporation has moved from the quarters at 111 Golden Gate avenue, which it has occupied since entering the local field, to a splendidly appointed new home at 86 Golden Gate avenue, where the entire upper floor of a two-story fireproof building has been taken over. The structure was built especially for the film trade, and the Triangle offices were planned in detail before construction work on the building was commenced, permitting the incorporation of many ideas that make for comfort, economy, and efficiency.

The cashier's office, stenographic rooms, reception room, and the private office of Manager Ben. F. Simpson extend the full length of the Golden Gate avenue frontage, and may each be reached independently from an outside passage way, or directly from the office of the manager. The lighting facilities are ideal, the rooms being flooded with sunshine throughout the day. The shipping room is located at the head of the stairs at the rear, and off this is the inspection room. The latter is lighted by a large window on the Jones street side, augmented by a large skylight, while a battery of electric fixtures above the tables will afford perfect artificial lighting when night work is necessary.

In the center of the big room is located the advertising department, with facilities for accommodating huge quantities of posters, photographs, and slides, the stock mostly in demand being adjoining the shipping room. The exchange has been planned with the idea of eliminating unnecessary steps, and in arrangement and appointments ranks with the largest and finest to be found on the Pacific coast. It covers a floor space of about five thousand square feet, and is the nearest film exchange on Film Row to Market street, the leading thoroughfare of the city. Manager Ben F. Simpson selected and planned the new quarters.

Parex Film Opens Office.

The Parex Film Corporation has opened an exchange at 180 Golden Gate avenue in the quarters recently vacated by the Western Feature Film Company under the management of Charles I. Luntz, until recently with the Fox Film Corporation. The first releases of this concern are at hand, and several bookings have been made on the "Romance of the Underworld" following a trade showing.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Going Big.

The limited engagement of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Columbia theater, the only film attraction booked for the season at this house, has been a great success, and inquiries are pouring in from all parts of the state in regard to where and how it can be booked. The fact that it is being booked throughout the country, with the exception of California, by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is causing some confusion, but exhibitors are being advised through the press and otherwise that this and other productions of the United States Government may be secured through the Film Division of the State Council of Defense, Sol L. Lesser, chairman. Military officials are placing musicians at the disposal of exhibitors showing this picture, and are doing everything in their power to make it a success wherever shown. The first Allied Nations Official War Review, which is distributed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., outside of California, has been received by the Film Division of the State Council of Defense, and franchises are now being sold for the showing of these.

Bergh Visits San Francisco.

Douglas H. Bergh, personal representative of George Kleine, is visiting the local office of the George Kleine system, after having visited the branches in the Northwest. He is very much pleased with the showing being made by this office under the direction of M. J. Cohen, and declared that all of the Western branches are doing a good business. In speaking of business conditions throughout the country he stated that it was his observation that theaters in the large cities were doing a heavy business, some the best on record, while country houses were suffering, and was not surprised when told of the number of small houses closed in this territory.

Lesser to Handle Digest Film.

Sol L. Lesser has completed arrangement for the distribution in this territory of "Topics of the Day," a film weekly selected by the Literary Digest. The first release is expected at an early date.

News From Seattle

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Draft Taking Film Employees Fast.

SEATTLE.—As prophesied in last week's issue in the East Seattle news letter the demand for young men by the Government will soon leave Seattle exchanges run by women, except for the managers and the road men, and the women are already beginning to take a hand at those two jobs. Miss Jo Donnelly, of the Bee Hive Exchange, represents the women in the manager's class, and Miss Cornelia Ahlgren, who was employed this week by Melvin G. Weinstock, manager of L. J. Schlaifer's Attractions, will soon be demonstrating what a woman can do at selling film in the Pacific Northwest.

The film managers are losing more than their usual number of office help this week. W. P. Merwin, Mutual manager, loses two, A. W. Eden, Fox manager, three, and W. A. Mead, Universal manager, one. Emil Erickson, the "U" man who is leaving, has been summoned in the draft, and expects to be assigned to Camp Lewis. B. Rubin came up from the Paramount-Artcraft office to take his place. Mutual's shipping clerk, A. R. Hampton, has joined the Merchant Marine and has been assigned to the U. S. Steamship "Burnside." Mason Noice takes his place. R. A. Landstrom, who has been booker at the Seattle Fox office for the past two years, leaves this week for a two week's stay at the Non-Commissioned Officers' Training Camp at the University of Washington, before being assigned to Camp Lewis.

Vaughn, a Progressive Exhibitor.

C. G. Vaughn, manager of the Vogue Theater, Kelso, Washington, visited several Seattle exchanges this week. Mr. Vaughn is the kind of exhibitor the exchange man always welcomes with sincere cordiality; for, besides having a pleasing personality he runs his theater in an efficient, business-like way, and he is always willing to give the exchange man a square deal, even though he controls his town. Before Mr. Vaughn opened a house in Kelso, which has only 2,500 inhabitants, very poor prices were paid for films in that town, and many of the best pictures were never shown there. After he became a factor in the business of the town the prices of film went up; for he was willing to pay a reasonable price for them, and he ran his business in such a live manner that he soon put competitors out of business. He shows the best, and the results fully justify him in his "live and let live" policy; for he is making a bigger success of the motion picture business in Kelso than any other exhibitor has done before him.

Winstock Buys 14 Ivan Films.

Melvin G. Winstock, manager of the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, has bought 14 Ivan films for distribution in the Northwest territory. Mr. Winstock also announces that he has engaged traveling representatives to sell his pictures, one for Oregon and Washington, one for Montana, and one for Idaho. Besides Miss Ahlgren, the other two representatives are Arthur Winstock and Aubrey Chester.

Mrs. C. E. McKee is managing the Orpheum theater at Everett during the absence of Mr. McKee, at the convention of Rotary Clubs in Kansas City.

Cleveland News Letter

Alhambra Theater Being Remodeled.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Alhambra theater, one of the big first run houses of Cleveland, will be remodeled this summer, reopening about the middle of August. The principal improvement will be a balcony to seat 400. The work was started July 15, and in four weeks' time the management hopes to have the house open again.

Grabe and Sweek Home on Furlough.

Two Cleveland boys in the service of Uncle Sam were home for short furloughs the week of July 8. They were William J. Grabe, formerly of Pathe, who is now in the transport service between Washington and Philadelphia, and Joe Sweek, formerly of Kleine's, who is now in the Marines.

Shows the Spirit of Victory.

The war should bring every man able to work out of retirement, says Mark Greenbaum, of Cleveland, who when his son went to Camp Sherman with the national army, came forward and took his son's place as manager of the Alhambra theater.

"While I really hadn't quit work entirely, I was taking things easy," said Mr. Greenbaum. "So when Jack said he was going to war, I said I would take his place. There are thousand of men all over the country who have retired, and could be used to fill the places of our young boys who are now in the big fight.

"I propose to these men that they show their patriotism by getting back into the harness.

"The funny part of it was that while I was taking it easy I got rheumatism. Since I have been working hard again, that malady has not bothered me."

Allens Open Theater in Cobourg, Ontario

Concern Operating Many Motion Picture Houses in the Dominion Builds 500-Seat Structure in Town on Shore of Lake Ontario—Is Modern in Every Way.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO.—The Allens, operating a large number of moving picture theaters in Canada, opened a picture house in Cobourg, Ontario, on Thursday evening, June 27, with appropriate ceremony. The new theater, which will be called the Allen theater, has a seating capacity for 550 and is a model in every respect. Attending the opening were Ben Cronk, supervisor of theaters for the Allen interests, and Luigi Romanelli, director of the concert orchestra at the Allen theater, Toronto. An incident of the opening was a serenade in front of the theater by a Cobourg band.

The manager of the Allen theater, Cobourg, is Arthur Cauley, one of Cobourg's own sons. Cobourg is a prosperous town on the shore of Lake Ontario and is widely known as a summer resort for many Pittsburgh people, a number of whom have built handsome residences there. The place is not a summer resort exclusively, however, general activity being in evidence during both the winter and summer. The new theater started off with a great rush of business. The Allens have new theaters in course of construction in various cities of Canada, including Toronto and Edmonton.

Allen Employes Get Instruction Book.

Ben Cronk, general supervisor of theaters for Jules and J. J. Allen, the Toronto moving picture theatrical magnates and exchange proprietors, has issued a book of instructions for the guidance of all employees of the Allen Theaters in the Dominion. In various ways the book is a remarkable document. Mr. Cronk has a message, more or less personal, for each employee of a moving picture theater. He speaks to the cashier, the doorman, the chief usher, the usher and the maid. He places himself in their positions and his instructions are pointedly given. The title of the booklet is "Service."

Fire Film for Firemen's Benefit.

The members of the Montreal Fire Department have had a photoplay taken for presentation at the annual Firemen's Benefit performance at the Francais Theater. The picture, which is entitled "The Scorching Flame," replaced the amateur speaking play that was invariably presented in previous years. The feature was directed by Armand Robi who was also the writer of the scenario and the cameraman was Bert Mason who is associated with the Specialty Film Import, Limited. The firemen were assisted by players from the local French theaters, the National Francais and the Canadien Francais, while the sub-titles are in both English and French. The translations for the latter were arranged by Albert Beaulne, secretary of the Montreal Exhibitors' Association. Scenes were "shot" at different parks around the city including Parc Lafontaine, Longue Pointe and Dominion Park where the firemen went through various thrilling stunts which were later woven into the thread of the story.

Judge Denton Dismisses Ryan Suit.

Judge Denton dismissed the suit brought against the directors of the defunct Canadian National Features, Limited, by Sadie Weston Ryan for $375 which she claimed was due for salary under a contract by which she was to receive $75 per week for a year to appear in pictures. The Canadian National Features built a studio at Trenton, Ontario, and almost completed two five-reel features before it went into bankruptcy.

Buys Rights on 54 Comedy Pictures.

Superfeatures, Limited, Canadian distributors of many special productions, with offices in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and St. John, have purchased the Canadian rights for a number of comedy re-issues. The assortment includes twenty-nine one and two reel Charlie Chaplin releases and twenty-five Mack-Sennett and Keystone Comedies, the latter being two-reel releases.

Specialty to Make Recruit Picture.

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, Canadian distributors of Pathe releases, have been engaged to produce a military recruit picture for the Canadian Government. Cameramen will go from camp to camp in Canada for the purpose of taking views and the various scenes will be linked with a story. The work is being done under the immediate supervision of the Director of Public Information.

Opening of Allen's Theater Delayed.

Judging by present indications the opening of Allen's Bloor Street Theater, Toronto, will be delayed several weeks. The work of constructing the new house has been held up through shortages of both men and materials. It is expected that the theater will open some time in September at the latest.

He will return to Omaha, where he resided prior to taking charge of the local theater. During the week it developed that A. H. Blank and his associates of the General Amusement Company, owners of the Garden theater here, had purchased the Palace theater, one of the largest and finest of the local houses, from the group of capitalists who took the house over from J. Miloslowsky several weeks ago. Before the opening of the fall season Mr. Blank will make needed improvements in one house. He now controls eight of the finest theaters in the middle west, three at Davenport, one at Marshalltown, two in Des Moines and two in Omaha.

Army Men at Showing of "The Unbeliever"

Management of Forrest Theater Entertains Officers at Initial Presentation of George Kleine's Production in Philadelphia—Patriotic Prologue to Picture Receives High Praise.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA.—The initial presentation of "The Unbeliever," at the Forrest Theater on July 1, was marked by a most impressive attendance of military officers who greatly praised the patriotic introduction to "The Unbeliever," an Edison production, played to remarkable business during the past week and the procedure of the prologues as arranged by J. Berger, manager of the Kleine Exchange, was favorably received; being as follows: First: Dim house lights—roosters, crowing effects—simultaneous with rising of curtain. Second: sentry on duty, pacing back and forth on the stage. Break of dawn—light effects used—camp scene—tents—Marines scattered about presumably asleep—one loud beat of drum effecting cannon report. Third: bugle sounds reveille—Marines rise—attention—raising of Flag. Fourth: Monk enters—walks to center of stage, rests hand on shoulder of Marine and recites "Semper Fidelis" poem—soft music, violin solo, "Lorraine"—Monk exits. Fifth: as soon as Monk disappears, orchestra commences playing vamp of song, 'Somewhere in France is the Lily"—Nurse enters, sings two verses, two choruses—nurse exits. Sixth: Marines move forward with colors, at attention; orchestra plays Semper Fidelis March, Buglers join in solo; when finished command is given for Marines to exit, during which time orchestra plays refrain of "Just Like Washington Crossed the Delaware, so will Pershing Cross the Rhine." House curtain drops—screen lowered, presentation of picture proceeds.

The event of the year took place when Manager Robert Lynch, of the Philadelphia Metro Exchange, took his entire force of employees out to Langhorne, Pa., for the annual outing. Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Wonders Has Fine Record.

BALTIMORE.—Someone asked Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson Theater, 418 Baltimore Street, recently, how he liked Baltimore. Mr. Wonders answered, "How can I help but like it when I have had some of the best years of my career here."

Mr. Wonders came to Baltimore about seven years ago, and took hold of the Wilson Theater when it was opened. He has successfully managed this playhouse for that length of time despite the fact that he is in the heart of film row and has keen competition on all sides.

In addition to his duties as manager of the Wilson, he acted as exalted ruler of the Baltimore lodge of the Elks for several years, has charge of the arrangements for bringing the pictures of ten film companies before the Maryland Censor Board for censoring and is the Baltimore representative of a Philadelphia lithographing company.

When he retired as exalted ruler of the Elks, they presented him with a life membership card in a neat silver case. He was the Baltimore representative to the Elks convention recently held at Atlantic City.

As his most recent honor, he has been appointed a Deputy Automobile Commissioner by Automobile Commissioner Baughman of Maryland and his term will last while Governor Harrington remains in office.

New Pilot for General Film.

The management of the Baltimore General Film Exchange is now in the hands of Hernon Edmonds. Mr. Edmonds has been associated with General's Baltimore office for six years in various capacities. When L. Rosenthal resigned several weeks ago he was succeeded by J. E. Flax as manager of the branch. Mr. Flax recently left Baltimore to take charge of a Southern territory and was succeeded by Mr. Edmonds. Mr. Rosenthal is now associated with the American Grocers' Association.

Price Has Unique Advertising Scheme.

Everybody on the street laughed. They couldn't help it when they saw Arthur B. Price, the Baltimore Metro representative, riding down the street with, "To Hell with the Kaiser," pasted on the windshield of his automobile. Mr. Price states that he originated the idea when he clipped the page bearing the title of the play out of the Moving Picture World, and after trimming the title, pasted it on the wind shield.

"The idea is putting the phrase in the minds of the public," said Mr. Price, "so that when the play is put on in Baltimore, the title will be familiar in the minds of the people."

Pinched in the Finish.

The above caption might very aptly be used concerning the person who acted the part of the Kaiser to advertise Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," which was booked by L. A. DeHoff for a return week's engagement at the Garden Theater, Lexington Street at Park Avenue, during the week of July 8. Mr. DeHoff had his "Kaiser in the Cage" being driven around the streets as usual when the following, as told by the Evening Sun, happened on Wednesday, July 10:

"Kaiser" Must Get Job.

"The 'Kaiser,' who has been riding around town this week in an iron cage, was arrested this afternoon and transferred to a more stationary cell at the Central Police Station. His real name is Teddy Hitzelberger, residing at 1435 West North Avenue. He has been acting as an advertisement for a local theater, and was arrested at the instance of George A. Mahone (head of the compulsory work bureau of Maryland), who charged him with being an idler. He was given 30 days in which to get a job."

Gerard's Film at Patriotic Fete.

At a big patriotic celebration which was held on the Fourth of July by the citizens of Towson, Md., which began at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and ended after nightfall, Gerard's picture, "My Four Years in Germany," was shown before a crowd of about 5,000. The picture was loaned for the occasion through the courtesy of L. A. DeHoff.

Clever Feature at the Parkway.

Between Bernard Depkin, Jr., the supervising manager of the Parkway Theater Company interest and Harry Lewy who takes moving pictures for various causes, a very clever feature has been instituted at the Parkway Theater, 8-9 West North Avenue. Just after the screening of the news film, the screen remains blank for a few seconds. The audience gets impatient. Then a slide is flashed stating that the audience is requested to wait a moment that the feature is on the way, but has been delayed a few minutes in transit from the exchange. The screen is blank for a few more seconds then the picture made by Mr. Lewy is flashed. It shows a small boy getting the film from the exchange—he goes to street—sees man fixing watering hose—stops to look—hose bursts—all over kid and film—flash of Mr. Depkin in front of Parkway impatient—kid off with film—sees other kids fighting—gets into scrap—flash of Mr. Depkin—film out of box—tangled with boys—kid breaks away—and so on until the whole picture shows the film in the operating room being put on the projection machine and then the show in the theater resumes.

DeHoff Gives Lawn Party.

L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New Theater, gave a little lawn party at his home at Rognel Heights on the Fourth of July to which he invited many of his most intimate friends. A special program of pictures was screened for the occasion.

C., had refused to allow four-minute speakers to talk in his theater under the auspices of the United States Government and that his attitude had brought about action by the civic authorities and the Wilson Chamber of Commerce. It was further stated that the Wilson Daily Times had launched an editorial campaign in condemnation of the theater manager's action.

The Wilson Chamber of Commerce investigated the report, and Mr. Paradis was acquitted by a majority of the members of any intentional unpatriotism. Col. John F. Bruton, director of the Chamber of Commerce, president of the First National Bank of Wilson and director of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., was chairman of the committee that made the report that exonerated Mr. Paradis.

"THE DECIDING KISS"

Five-Reel Bluebird Offering Features Edith Roberts in Original Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is something distinctly novel in this amusing little story adapted by Bernard McConville from a book written by Ethel M. Kelly, and directed by Tod Browning. It is a gentle satire on a theory called "co-operative parentage," one of the numerous new methods of child-rearing usually indulged in by people who have no children of their own. At the same time the story itself is delightfully human, and intermingles humor and pathos effectively.

Edith Roberts, who got her early schooling in pictures with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in comedies, is here given her first opportunity in a longer picture. She plays the part of a young orphan girl living with her aged and infirm grandparents. As they are too old to look after her properly the girl, whose name is Eleanor Hamlin, is taken in charge by Beulah Page, who desires to try out her theories on raising children.

Miss Page is a rather severe young woman, and is engaged to Peter Bolling. Their friends, Jimmy Sears and his fiancee, also take part in the experiment. Eleanor arrives at her new home poorly dressed and pathetic in her distress over leaving her grandparents. In the course of the story Jimmy awakens her dawning womanhood by a too fervent kiss, and matters are complicated by the fact that she already thinks Peter is in love with her. After general misery all around, Eleanor flees once more to her grandparents, but later returns to forgive and be forgiven on Christmas eve. The story is splendidly presented, and Miss Roberts does well in the semi-juvenile role of Eleanor.

Others in the cast are Winifred Greenwood, Hal Cooley, and Thornton Church.

"LOVE WATCHES"

Vitagraph Screen Version of French Society Drama Proves Mildly Amusing.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BILLIE BURKE created the part of Jacqueline Cartaret when "Love Watches" was produced in this country on the spoken stage. The play belongs to the class of artificial French comedies that are nice without being naughty, and are dearly beloved of the matinee girl and others who are entertained by seeing the heroine display the most charming innocence while clad in an equally charming pair of silk pajamas. No better way to indicate the standing of the play can be employed than to again quote Abraham Lincoln's familiar remark, "If you like this sort of a thing, this is the sort of a thing you'll like." The story is always well-bred, nothing rude or crude ever intrudes, and the characters lead their small lives and suffer their little worries in a mildly amusing fashion. In its original form certain bits of native wit gave it considerable additional flavor, but the screen version produced by the Vitagraph as a Blue Ribbon Feature may be safely recommended to young persons of both sexes.

"Love Watches" was directed by Henri Houry, and acted by a cast with Corinne Griffith as Jacqueline. Good taste marks every detail of the picture. The locations, photography and general atmosphere are in keeping with the subject, and the acting is always up to requirements. The story is a familiar one. Treated seriously, it furnishes the grounds for two-thirds of the dramas seen on the Paris stage. Fitted to the lives of a number of rather negative persons the result is comedy.

Jacqueline has been given more than her share of aunts and uncles and money and innocence. When she marries and is led to believe that her husband is untrue to her she determines to pay him back in his own coin. The only man she feels she can trust is a harmless, young bookworm she has known all her life. When she runs away from home and goes to the bookworm he tries to kiss her, and she slaps his face. Her husband proves his innocence, and only laughs heartily when he learns the name of the man that his wife selected as his rival. Jacqueline is under the protection of the God of Love, and all is well with the young couple. Denton Vane, Edward Burns, Florence Deshon, Julia Swayne Gordon, and Alice Terry are prominent members of the cast.

"WEDLOCK."

Louise Glaum Featured in Five-Part Paralta Melodrama with Plenty of Action.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ACTION and plenty of it must have been the watchword of Denison Clift, the author of "Wedlock," a five-part Paralta melodrama directed by Wallace Worsley and featuring Louise Glaum. Screen patrons who look for revelation of character in a photoplay will be disappointed, but those who want a succession of exciting incidents, after the fashion of the dramas of Theodore Kramer and "The Fatal Wedding" school, will revel in "Wedlock." Most of the material has seen honorable service, and is still sure-fire when used in this grade of play. If this picture is advertised so that prospective patrons will know just the class it belongs to, it should have a good following. The star and her support give an earnest and effective performance, and the direction is of great assistance to their efforts.

The author starts off by making trouble for Margery Harding, his heroine, and never loses a chance to win sympathy for her all through the play. Margery is a telephone girl who marries a rich young chap and then gives him up when Lord Cecil Graydon, who is engaged to her husband's sister, threatens to break off the match on acount of the telephone girl's humble birth.

Granger Hollister, the husband, is willing to break his wife's heart in order to satisfy his mother's social ambitions, and poor Margery once more starts to fight the world for herself. Fate rewards her by making her the heiress of a wealthy old miner, and sees that Hollister gets his deserts also. He is sent to prison for fraud and, after serving time for three years, succeeds in escaping. Margery hides him when he is pursued by the officers, and finally manages to secure his pardon. By this time Hollister has had a little sense and some conception of right conduct knocked into him, and he is tickled to death to go back to his wife when he learns that she still loves him.

Denison Clift made the scenario for his story. John Gilbert, Herschel Mayall, Charles Gunn and Joseph J. Dowling are prominent in the cast.

"THE SERVICE STAR"

Madge Kennedy Does Comendable Work in Goldwyn Patriotic Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story written by Charles A. Logue and on which the five-part Goldwyn patriotic comedy-drama, "The Service Star," is based covers a situation which might or might not happen in real life, but which furnishes good entertainment if you don't think too hard. Madge Kennedy is the featured member of the cast, and does admirable work in a role which gives her ample opportunity for the display of versatility—she is truly charming in the more developed stage of a persecuted country orphan. The character, original in outline, is skillfully drawn, and there is much praise due Charles Miller for clever direction of a picture in which smoothness of action leaves no loophole for the development of awkward interpretation. Clarence Oliver plays opposite Miss Kennedy, and Maude Turner Gordon appears successfully in the role of the mother.

The story, which shows how an orphan girl who has all her life been ridiculed partly because of her awkwardness and partly because she has never had a sweetheart, finally turns after the manner of the familiar worm, and develops an unbelievable trait of character in which she poses as the wife of a famous aviator, and becomes entangled in the meshes of an absorbing lie. Finally dragged by force of circumstances into the home of the aviator's mother she uncovers the secret of the young man who, branded from birth by fear of firearms, has sent another man to France in his place, while his mother hangs a service star from her window. By accident the man's fear is overcome, and he enlists; but not before he has become betrothed to the girl whose presence in his home has been instrumental in bringing him to his senses. The picture forms a good patriotic number.

"A PAIR OF SILK STOCKINGS"

Constance Talmadge Is Fitted Perfectly in Select Production of Clever Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT is not every stage play that lends itself to the screen so easily and entertainingly as does the English comedy, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," written by Cyril Harcourt, and played with great success for an entire season at the Little theater, New York. Bright, well mannered and unconventional, it shows what a deal of innocent fun can be extracted from a number of surprising situations when good taste rules the entire proceedings. "Believe Me, Xantippe" is the only comedy that compares with "A Pair of Silk Stockings" in amusing qualities and its ready adaptability to the shadow stage.

Edith M. Kennedy, who made the scenario, has shown but one error of judgment. The opening episode connected with the Thornhill divorce case is entirely too long, and the trial scene is altogether too serious. It hurts the comedy air that should always be present. In the spoken play the divorce was explained briefly and humorously, and the spirit of the comedy was never lost. Once past this opening situation the screen version strikes the proper gait and strides smoothly along on its merry way.

The real interest in "A Pair of Silk Stockings" starts when Sam Thornhill, the divorced man, finds himself a member of a house party and his wife turns up at the same place. Sam still loves Mollie. He is made-up to take part in an amateur theatrical performance when the happy thought strikes him to hide in his wife's room and plead with her to forgive him.

Mollie is occupying the room of an absent officer. After she has retired the officer enters the room by the window, not wishing to disturb the house at midnight, and is found there by his sweetheart. Thornhill is discovered hiding in a closet, taken for a burglar; a cloth is fastened over his head and his hands are tied with a pair of Mollie's stockings. The comic complications are many and have been devised with great cleverness.

Constance Talmadge fits the part of Mollie perfectly, and the other members of the Select cast are equal to all demands. The fact that not one of them is the least bit English can readily be overlooked. Harrison Ford as Sam Thornhill, Wanda Hawley as Pamela and Louis Willoughby as Captain Jack Bagnal lead the supporting company. Walter Edwards' splendid direction and the artistic photography by James C. Van Tress should not be forgotten.

"A FIGHT FOR MILLIONS."

First Two Numbers of New Vitagraph Serial Packed with Thrills.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE of these days the ancient order of thieves and cutthroats will stop trying to kill William Duncan. Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady have started him off again in a death-defying career in a new Vitagraph serial, "A Fight for Millions," and the first two numbers give promise of an assorted collection of thrills that will chase a continual procession of delightful shivers up and down the spinal column of the most hardened serial fan. Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan are the leading members of the star's support. Duncan is directing the photoplay.

The first number is called "The Snare." The part played by William Duncan is known as Bob Hardy, a mining expert who is in love with Jean Benton, the character taken by Edith Johnson. Jean's father left a fortune in mining property, when he died, and two of the girl's distant relatives are anxious to marry her and get possession of her money. One of the men, Jacob Lawless, is a western outlaw; the other, Walter Hyde, is a product of the East, outwardly a gentleman, a scoundrel at heart.

All the parties concerned come east to hear the Benton will read. Everything is left to Jean provided that in one year she marry either one of her cousins. The reading of the will over, the villains start to get busy. Lawless has a letter from Jean that Hyde thinks he must see, so he gets a wire noose around the Westerner's neck, in a novel manner, and chokes him into insensibility. Quick action is the cue after that, and the second part fairly hums with it, "Flames of Peril" it is called, and Bob is shot while leading a horse across a narrow bridge over a gorge and takes a long drop into the water below. Edith Johnson also shows her nerve and muscle in this instalment.

"THE CITY OF DIM FACES."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EVERYTHING in the way of correct atmosphere and competent acting has been done for "The City of Dim Faces," a Paramount photoplay featuring the Japanese tragic actor Sessue Hayakawa. Written by Frances Marion and directed by George Melford, it is bound to hold the attention of all classes of spectators, whether or no they approve of a love affair between an American girl and a half-breed Oriental. Most persons will accept the story for the sake of Hayakawa's dramatic impersonation of Jang Lung, a young Chinese-American who first answers to the call of his Oriental blood when he is jilted by Marcell Mathews, and tries to sell the girl into virtual slavery. The instinct of the white race, inherited from his mother, triumphs in the end, and he saves Marcell at the cost of his own life, promising her that their souls shall be united in the future beyond the grave.

Elizabeth Mendall, the mother of Jang, was a governess in the home of Wing Lung and greatly attached to Wing's motherless little girl when the wealthy Chinaman offered her marriage. The woman accepted and a son was born of the union. This son fulfilled his father's wish, and combined most of the best traits of both races. He is taken away from his mother when very young, and never learns he is part American until just before his death. After Marcell crosses his path, his life become a tragedy. He loves her devotedly, but the alien blood in his veins keeps them apart, although the girl returns his love at first.

Doris Pawn, Marin Sais, James Cruze and Winter Hall are the chief members of the supporting company.

"THE DANGER MARK."

Elsie Ferguson Splendid in Fine Artcraft Production of Robert W. Chambers' Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

TIME was when a Robert W. Chambers story meant a novel of excellent quality. Of late years, this gifted writer has been concerned principally with the quantity of his output. "The Danger Mark" does not belong to the period of his best production, but the plot has considerable strength, and the character of the heroine, Geraldine Seagrave, affords Elsie Ferguson an opportunity for fine emotional acting. Directed by Hugh Ford, the scenario by Charles Maigne, this Artcraft production never loses the air of good breeding and refinement essential to all its scenes.

To sum the matter up in a few words: Elsie Ferguson, Hugh Ford and the Artcraft production have done more for "The Danger Mark" than the Chambers story has done for them. It is by no means a perfect piece of construction. The latter half of the story sags badly, but the star almost succeeds in concealing this defect by the force of her acting and the charm of her personality.

"The Danger Mark" is temperance propaganda. Geraldine Seagrave comes from a line of wealthy but dissipated ancestors. She and her brother are brought up in seclusion, after the death of their father. Geraldine first shows her craving for alcohol by pouring cologne on lumps of sugar and eating them. The night of her coming-out party she is induced to drink champagne to excess, and almost loses the man she loves in consequence. At the end of the story she proves to herself that she has conquered her appetite and then only will she consent to renew her engagement. There is another thread to the story, which takes up a large portion of the action and concerns a young girl who has trusted everything to a man's honor and is saved from disgrace by the determination of Geraldine.

Mahlon Hamilton as Duane Mallett, Gertrude McCoy as Sylvia Mallett, Crauford Kent as Jack Dysart, Maud Turner Gordon as Kathleen Severn, Edward Burns as Scott Seagrave and W. F. Carlton as Colonel Mallett complete a strong cast.

"HER PRICE"

Virginia Pearson Featured in Five-Reel Fox Offering of Emotional Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Fox subject, featuring Virginia Pearson in the role of Marcia Calhoun, is a story of woman's ambition, her weakness in the hour of temptation, and her subsequent bitterness over her own course followed by hatred and a desire for revenge. That happiness comes to her at last is perhaps not exactly her due, but the average observer will be glad to see her get it because she is after all a woman. Then, also, the close brings out the picture of a real man who tries to right a wrong committed by his own brother.

In the opening scene Marcia is seen in New York, where she came from the South to earn a living with her voice. She is a delicately reared girl and practically without funds. Her voice is so promising that a manager offers her a contract if she will procure a year's training in Italy. At her wits' end for money to go there, and burning with the ambition to become a great singer, she yields to the advances of Philip Bradley. The latter takes her to Italy and after three months there casts her off. Marcia struggles on and wins success. In Paris Robert Carroll falls in love with her, but on learning her story leaves her. She sets out to get revenge upon Bradley but on returning to America learns that he is dead. In her anger she brings about the financial ruin of his brother, John Bradley. The latter in spite of what she has done says he will devote his life to making her happy.

Such a story contains so much of human frailty and grief that it is not to be called a pleasant one; yet it has been strongly brought out by the director, Edmund Lawrence, and will have much force with an audience. Miss Pearson does excellent work as Marcia. Others in the cast are Edward Rosen, Victor Sutherland, Henri Leone and Paul Stanton.

"THE TWO ORPHANS"

Fox Releases Five-Reel "1918 Version" of Famous Old Heart Interest Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THEDA BARA and Jean Sothern play the roles of the two orphaned girls in this release of Fox's production of "The Two Orphans," described as the 1918 version. It is justly celebrated as a melodrama the world over, and probably contains as well contrived a mixture of tears and smiles and thrills as any play ever put on the boards. In screen form it holds the old-time power, and there are moments when the melodrama rises to the full dignity of drama.

The story interest is strong from the first. It opens with the coming of Henrietta and Louise to Paris from the provinces. They are intercepted by tools of the villainous Marquise de Presles, who carry off Henrietta and leave the blind girl, Louise, to wander on the Paris street. Here begins a wonderful contrast of conditions in which the girls find themselves. Henrietta is spirited away to a party being given by the nobility. She is made sport of by the marquis and his friends, but the hero, Chevalier de Vaudrey, comes to her rescue and fights a duel in her behalf. Louise in the meantime has fallen in with a family of beggars and thieves, of which the odious Mother Frochard is the head. Many incidents occur, and there are numerous tense moments before the two are reunited.

The story is quite obvious in its heart appeal, but none the less gripping for that. It is interesting to see Theda Bara in this role again, and Jean Sothern is pleasing as well in the part of the blind girl. Herbert Brenon does some fine work as Pierre. Others in the cast are William E. Shay, Frank Goldsmith, Gertrude Berkley, F. L. Fernandez, John Daly Murphy, Sheridan Block and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh.

The big moments of the original play have been carefully brought out and even strengthened in the screen version.

"HELL'S END"

William Desmond Shows to Advantage in Five-Part Triangle Reformation Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of this Triangle picture was not selected to offer any ray of hope to the Kaiser. "Hell's End" does not refer to the non-existence of the infernal regions, but to a tenement district in New York noted for the toughness of its character. In this section of the city lives Jack Donovan, Mary Flynn and her brother Jimmie. The parents of all three children are poor, but the head of the house of Flynn works his way up to affluence, and one day Mary and her brother drive away from the old home in a carriage and Jack is left behind to grow up as best he can. He becomes the owner of the most notorious saloon in the neighborhood and the leader of a gang of crooks.

In the meantime Mary has blossomed into a society leader and her brother is known as a successful physician. Returning to "Hell's End" with a slumming party, Mary takes her friends into Jack's saloon and recognizes the proprietor as an old companion. Jack has never forgotten the little girl who kissed him good-bye, and his admiration for Mary arouses the jealousy of Belle Burns, a young woman of the district. Hank Dillon, a rival of Jack's for Belle's favor, starts a fight in the saloon, and Jack is struck over the head with a bottle. He is badly wounded, but Mary takes his case in charge and not only sees that he is restored physically, but effects his moral regeneration. After she has made a real man of him she accepts him as her husband.

The story works out on the screen much better than it reads. It has abundant movement and was directed intelligently by J. W. McLaughlin. Put in scenario form by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., from a story by A. Steve Richardson and photographed by S. S. Norton, "Hell's End" has William Desmond and Josie Sedgwick in the leads. Both are excellent. Louis Durham, Dorothy Hagar and Charles Dorian are also well chosen.

"MARKED CARDS"

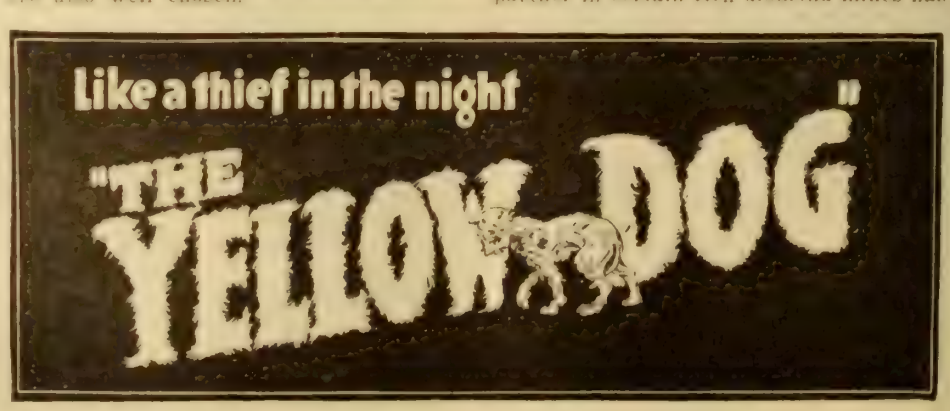
Five-Part Triangle Photoplay Presents Margery Wilson in Congenial Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WRITTEN by Adela Rogers St. John, the five-part Triangle photoplay, "Marked Cards," may be described as a sensational society drama. Its heroine, Ellen Shannon, is the daughter of a hod carrier who rises to power and wealth, and the young girl has a difficult time of it when she and Ted Breslin, one of the socially elect, fall in love with each other. Ted's mother objects to receiving Ellen as a daughter-in-law, and the boy hasn't the spirit to go against her wishes. Pat Shannon's girl goes to a finishing school to acquire polish, and young Breslin goes to the bad.

While under the influence of liquor he is drawn into a crooked card game and robbed with the aid of marked cards. As he is sleeping off his drunken stupor one of the gamblers is murdered by his companion. The guilty man thrusts the revolver into Ted's hand and accuses him of firing the fatal shot. He is arrested, tried, and is about to be found guilty when Ellen saves him by confessing that she was in a man's room in the hotel and saw the whole affair from across a court. Her presence in the hotel room is perfectly innocent, but the public have only her word for it, and her devotion in saving Ted at the risk of her reputation wins his mother's consent to the union of the Shannons and the Breslins.

"Marked Cards," it must be confessed, is not novel in material or overly well constructed. Its continuity is by Lanier Bartlett, and it was directed by D'Elba. Elgin Leslie was the cameraman. The picture has the advantage of being acted with considerable skill, Margery Wilson playing Ellen with conviction, the result of a clear understanding of the character. Wallace MacDonald is earnest and natural as Ted Breslin, and Lillian Langdon acts his mother after her thoroughly schooled method. Jack Curtis, Harvey Clark, Joe Bennett, Lee Philips and Rae Godfrey have the remaining parts.



"THE HAND OF VENGEANCE"

New Gaumont Twenty-Reel Serial Thrilling Addition to State Right Market.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first five episodes of the new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," are of the same thrilling quality that has distinguished former Gaumont serials. Ten episodes of two reels each comprises it, and it is rumored that it has already received large bookings. The titles of the first five episodes are "The Sigh of the Scar," "Scheming for Millions," "The Ambassador's Diamond," "The Gray Lady," and "The League of Silence." These are sensational in the extreme, are imbued with an atmosphere of deepest mystery, and are acted with true melodramatic emphasis.

The story of the serial covers for the first part deeds of vengeance on the part of a man later known as Ultus, whose partner in certain rich diamond mines has left him to die on the desert and stolen the riches that were to have been divided between them. As the story proceeds through thrilling and hairbreath escapes and adventures second to none in hair raising quality it involves another story in which the courier of the king has been murdered by one of the avenging gang who has proved a traitor to his chief, and all but caused him to be captured. Into this story the "gray lady" enters, daughter of the courier, and one of "The League of Silence" who cleverly traps Ultus, the chief avenger, and makes him chief of their league, with the object in view of avenging the death of the courier. And so the story rushes along carrying the interest of the lover of pure melodrama with it.

"HER MOMENT

General Film Presents Anna Luther in Author's Photoplay Feature.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

ANNA LUTHER is the star in "Her Moment," the seven-reel feature made by Authors' Photoplays, Inc., and released by General Film Company. It is not a pleasant story, but, as a whole, it is entertaining, although the interest is allowed to lag in places and the action could be speeded up by reducing the footage.

A woman finds herself, through the cupidity of her father, lured from home and sold into servitude under an ancient Roumanian law. She has been bought for her beauty, and is taken to a casino. Discovering the life into which she has been brought she attempts to escape without success. Forced by the police to close his house the girl, Katinka, is taken by her paramour on his travels around the world, ending in an Arizona mining camp. There she sees the sweetheart of her childhood, now a mining engineer, but is ashamed to reveal her identity. Unable longer to tolerate conditions she writes to an old friend, a violinist, who comes to America, shoots her companion, and is himself killed by the sheriff. She then goes to New York, is arrested for attempting to speak to her former lover, and is turned over to a society which endeavors to reform girls. Her lover finds her there, and claims her as his bride.

The story opens in Roumania, and there are some attractive peasant scenes. The photography is good throughout. The incidents are not altogether convincing, and some of the scenes are unpleasant, as for example, where the girl is made to take off her waist and is flogged, also where her father is caught in a stream of molten lava and buried, only his hand remaining in sight. The director, however, has handled the immoral features in such a manner as not to give offense. Anna Luther is attractive as Katinka, and gives an excellent portrayal of the role in which she is ably assisted by William Garwood as her peasant lover who afterward achieves success as an engineer. The other members of the cast, including Bert Hadley, Alida Jones, William Lowrey, J. L. Frank, Anne Schaefer, Leon Kent, and Murdock MacQuarrie, do good work. Frank Beal directed the production.

"THE FIREFLY OF FRANCE"

Wallace Reid Dashing Hero in Paramount Picture Descriptive of the War.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

MARION POLK ANGELLOTTI has written a smashing good yarn about an American aviator and his adventures on his way over to join the Allies, and called it "The Firefly of France" Margaret Turnbull has put it into scenario form for the Paramount, and Wallace Reid plays the hero Devereaux Bayne The picture has one novel feature: Its story is told in a way that a novelist sometimes employs, the hero being supposed to relate what befell him before he joined the aviation corps, and how he met the French girl who was to become his wife The nature of the story's telling is further impressed on the spectator by having all the subtitles written in the first person, past tense.

Under ordinary conditions this method would detract from the seeming actuality of the story, but the theme is so vital and the incidents lead so rapidly from one dramatic moment to the other that the interest is held firmly all the time

There are, of course, German spies in the plot and important papers to be got through the lines. Bayne finds out that the most interesting person on shipboard is a young girl named Esme Falconer. He has been warned that she is a German spy, but refuses to believe it. They have some stirring adventures before reaching a French chateau. Esme's chauffeur is murdered, and Bayne takes his place. When they arrive at the chateau they walk into a trap set by the Germans. Bayne fights his way out, saves Esme's brother and his valuable plans from falling into the hands of the enemy, is badly wounded and is rewarded by being decorated by France and loved by Esme. Director Donald Crisp has made one mistake in the decoration scene. After pinning on the cross, the French officer kisses the American on both cheeks. This part of the ceremony is reserved for French soldiers. Otherwise, the production is excellent. Wallace Reid, Ann Little, Charles Ogle, Raymond Hatton and Winter Hall comprise a fine set of principals.

"A MAN'S WORLD"

Emily Stevens Featured in Story Based on Double Moral Standard.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

ADAPTED from Rachel Crother's play of the same title, "A Man's World," released by Metro, presents Emily Stevens in a story having as its foundation the theme that where a woman deviates from the narrow path society condemns her, while the man goes scot free. It is an interesting and ably directed production, but furnishes no solution to the vexed problem.

Frankie Ware, an American novelist in Paris, aids an unfortunate girl who dies after giving birth to a child. She adopts the child, and returns to America. Malcolm Gaskell agrees to publish her book, and finally falls in love with her. A jealous former favorite of his notes the resemblance between Gaskell and the child, and starts the rumor that the child belongs to Frankie, and insinuates that Gaskell is the father. Gaskell demands of Frankie to know if she is the child's mother, saying his wife must be above reproach; she replies that her standard is just as high, and by deft questioning discovers that he is the child's father. She denounces him, and he attacks her, when she is rescued by a friend who has long loved her, and through him finally finds happiness.

Emily Stevens is excellent as Frankie, particularly in the emotional scenes. Frederick Truesdell gives a good performance as Gaskell, while Florence Short is especially satisfactory as the other woman. The remainder of the cast is good, and considerable amusement is caused by two of Frankie's friends portrayed by Walter Hiers and Sidney Bracey, while John Merkyl appears as the successful suitor.

The production is well photographed, and there are a number of elaborate scenes, both interiors and exteriors.

THE TWO ORPHANS (Fox).—This is a reissue of the famous old melodrama, abounding in genuine heart interest. Theda Bara and Jean Sothern appear as the orphans, supported by a strong cast. The number has been carefully staged throughout and has numerous big moments. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

THE SERVICE STAR (Goldwyn), June 30.—An excellent five-part patriotic comedy-drama, featuring Madge Kennedy. The story is unique and entertaining, although not wholly convincible. A full review is printed elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

LOVE WATCHES (Vitagraph), July 15. Billie Burke did the stage version of this play from the French. It is a good example of artificial French comedy, and Corinne Griffith plays the lead. The picture will please the matinee girl. It has been well produced under the direction of Henri Houry. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

A FIGHT FOR A MILLION (Vitagraph).—A new serial, William Duncan the star and director, this Vitagraph feature starts off with a bang. The first two episodes are reviewed on another page of this issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

WEDLOCK (Paralta), July 27.—Melodrama of the most vigorous kind is to be found in this five-part photoplay, featuring Louise Glaum. It was written and directed by Denison Clift. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 38 (Mutual), July 10.—This issue of Screen Telegram contains an excellent animated picture of the late Major John Purroy Mitchel, and also shows his body being taken into his mother's home. At St. Louis we see wigwagging and heliographing used in signaling receiving news, and at Chicago a chimpanzee entertaining children by smoking a cigarette and doing various other stunts, and also a boxing bout by competitors from Fort Grant are good features. Picking, packing and canning peaches is a lengthy and instructive bit in this number, as is also the stocking of fish hatcheries at Cass Lake, Mich.

LIKE MOTHER MADE (Strand), July 16.—A moderately entertaining comedy which will please the average audience. A young wife, unable to please her husband with her style of cooking, is helped out by his mother when she comes to the home of the young couple and cooks a disgusting meal, in which kerosene and soap form the principal flavors. The wife then learns how to make a good pie and wins hubby's confidence in her culinary ability.

ZUNI KICKING RACES (Outing-Chester), July 21.—An interesting illustration of the annual kicking races practiced among the Zuni Indians of New Mexico. This race is performed annually, and has been a custom of the Zunis for ages. A full review of this picture appeared in the Motion Picture Educator of our last issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE HOODED TERROR UNMASKED (Pathe), July 14.—Episode No. 19 of "The House of Hate." This number at last gives the observer a look at the real hooded terror. The events of this number are exciting in the extreme and carefully directed. While there are still further incidents to come, the solution of the mystery is practically reached in this number, and is both logical and convincing.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, No. 11 (Pathe), July 21.—This episode deals largely with the Canadian troops on the French front. It pictures the Duke of Connaught on an inspection trip with other dignitaries. Some actual scenes are shown from the bombardment of Vimy Ridge.

CUPID BY PROXY (Pathe-Diando), July 21.—An enjoyable five-reel number, telling a very human little story about two families living next door to each other. One family gets rich and the other remains poor, but the friendship continues after some exciting interruptions. Baby Marie Osborne is featured in the leading juvenile role, which suits her nicely. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

BEACH NUTS (Rolin-Pathe), July 28.—This one-reel comic features Toto as a bad little boy at the beach. He visits the bath houses and stirs up all manner of trouble among the attendants and guests. The scenes are of an amusing, knockabout character, though there is not much story interest.

BASSE-TERRE (Post Film-Pathe).—Scenes taken in the French West Indies, which comprises the islands of Martinique and Guadeloupe. The city of Basse-Terre, on the latter island, yields up some highly picturesque views. The native belles and Guadeloupe soldiers, some of the latter having fought valiantly in the present war, are shown. The market place is also pictured.

Select Pictures Corporation.

A PAIR OF SILK STOCKINGS (Select). Constance Talmadge and an excellent cast give an amusing performance of this bright little play, which has been a great success on the stage. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

MARKED CARDS (Triangle), July 14.—Written by Adela Rogers St. John, this five-part photoplay tells of a girl of the people who loves a young fellow in high society and proves her worth to him and his family. Margery Wilson is the featured player. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

HELL'S END (Triangle), July 14.—This five-part picture is a story of the slums and a man's regeneration through love. It is well played by a cast headed by William Desmond and Josie Sedgwick, and was directed by J. W. McLaughlin. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures Corporation.

JOAN OF THE WOODS (World-Picture), July 22.—A five-reel subject, written by Louise Vale and directed by Travers Vale. June Elvidge appears in two roles—first as a mountain girl who marries a city lawyer, and later as the daughter. The story contains no particular originality, though there is plenty of plot interest. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Universal Film Company.

REPEATING THEIR HONEYMOON (Nestor), July 22.—A comedy number, by Capt. L. T. Peacock, featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Charles King. A young couple quarrel after their honeymoon. A year later, on their wedding anniversary, each goes back to the same hotel, where an amusing reconciliation takes place. This is rather breezy in certain situations, but carefully handled and generally pleasing.

A CLEAN SWEEP (L-KO), July 24.—A laughable two-reel comic, one of the best of this company's recent releases. A young Chinaman, "Charlie of the Orient," has a leading part, assisted by Merta Sterling, Eddie Barry and others. The number is full of funny tricks and amusing slapstick situations and winds up with a hilarious chase, in which the family washing is carried through the streets between two autos.

THE VAMP CURE (Star Comedy), July 27.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts appear in this laughable skit. Lee dresses as a vampire and Eddie pretends to be in love with her in order to make his "regular" girl jealous. Some very funny situations are brought about, even though the idea has been frequently used.

Smart Atmosphere in Madge Kennedy's Latest

THE atmosphere of smart society is admirably carried out in Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn picture, "Friend Husband." This is accomplished not only by rich and beautiful settings executed in Hugo Ballin's happiest manner, but by a cast of finished players, each accustomed to roles such as are found in the Madge Kennedy play.

Again the star has a new leading man, a player of notable achievements and wide experience. He is Rockcliffe Fellowes, whose stage portrayals in the support of Ethel Barrymore are as well known as his screen work with Ethel Clayton and other stars. The part assumed by him in "Friend Husband" is perfectly suited to the actor, and the aggressive, magnetic element in his personality is employed to capital advantage.

George Bunny, owner of a name famous in the history of the cinema, plays a lovable role in support of Madge Kennedy and promises many moments of quiet fun. Paul Everton also strengthens the cast, bringing to the play all the poise and perfect artistry acquired in his years of experience.

William Davidson, remembered for his amusing characterization in "Our Little Wife," one of Madge Kennedy's Goldwyn successes, is again with the star in "Friend Husband," and his role, while of an entirely different character, promises some telling moments.

Only two feminine players support the star. They are Victory Bateman, pleasantly remembered for her Aunt Judith in Madge Kennedy's "Service Star," and Jean Armour, who makes her debut under the Goldwyn trademark.

"THE LOCKED HEART"

General Film Co. Presents Gloria Joy in an Oakdale Production of the Story of a Man Whose Heart Was Buried in His Wife's Grave.

Ruth Mason, her mother.....Vola Vale
Col. Mason, her grandfather, Daniel Gilfether
The Villain.....Leon Perdue

Directed by Henry King.

The Story: Henry Mason, called home by wire, finds his wife has died, leaving a baby girl. He refuses to look at the child, locks the door of the nursery which has been prepared for the baby's coming, and goes abroad to forget his grief, but it will not down. Scenes in foreign lands continually remind him of his bereavement, and he finally returns home, arriving just as a stranger is about to chastise the little girl for a childish prank. Mason rescues his daughter, and the child's affection coupled with her insistence that she often sees her mother in her dreams, and she wants her to go into the locked room, finally leads him to open the door, when he finds a note that his wife had written before her death saying she made a bargain with death to take her instead of the baby, and begging Mason to give the child the love he meant for the two. He then realizes how blind he has been, and takes the child in his arms.

Stunt Suggestions: Effective window cards can be made from crimson hearts painted upon cards and crossed with chains padlocked at the center, the text being lettered in the margins. Mount an announcement and a picture of the star on the inner surface, and letter the outside, "This is the locked heart. If you would see what it contains unlock the padlock or see the picture here (date)." Padlock the two sections together, and leave the key chained that the case may be unlocked. Run this in the lobby for several days before the showing, or change the lettering to announce that the heart will be unlocked on a certain day.

The Story: Dolores May, abandoned by her mother on the steps of a convent, is raised by the sisters in the atmosphere of sanctity and seclusion. To her comes Lawrence Grant, son of a prominent politician, whose tales of the world outside fire the blood of Dolores. Unknown to Grant she runs away from the convent and comes under the protection of Kale Loomis, a political boss, who soon tires of her. Dolores persuades Grant that she has been visiting friends and Lawrence establishes her in an apartment, intending to marry her. Loomis again gets Dolores under his influence and makes the surrender of Grant's father the price of his silence. That night Loomis is killed, and Grant is about to be convicted of the murder when, to save him, Dolores swears that he spent the night in her apartment. But the sacrifice of her good name is rendered unnecessary when it is shown that her own father shot Loomis, who had caused him to be sent to prison that he might the easier win Dolores' mother, and who was the real cause of the child's abandonment.

When she nurses him back to strength after he is shot in defending her from the rude trapper her father intends for her husband he marries her, but the wedding is kept secret and he goes to the woman who jilted him and who is now divorced. Joan dies, freeing Philip, who does not know of their child, and the baby Joan is raised by a kindly old couple. She meets Norman, Philip's step-son, and they are secretly married. Norman is ordered away to cure his wildness and Joan is accused of the murder of her child, being brought for trial before her own father, whom she does not know. He recognizes her by the cross he carved for her mother, and, her innocence of the charge proven, peace comes at last.

Stunt Suggestions: A strong presentation of the dramatic theme of this story, without revealing the ending, would be the strongest appeal. Picture the father called upon to try for murder his own daughter, the wife of his step-son. Use the same line on a throwaway, if you use them, and prominently mention the name of the star, using her portrait where practicable.

THE GREAT LOVE.

David Wark Griffith Presents a Story of the Regeneration of Women by War With Practically the Same Cast as Appeared in "Hearts of the World," With Henry Walthall in Addition.

Cast.

Jim Young .....Robert Harron
Sir Roger Brighton....Henry B. Walthall

Susie Broadplains .....Lillian Gish
John Broadplains .....Maxfield Stanley
Rev. Josephus Broadplains,
George Fawcett

Rosemary Theby
Mr. Seymour of Brazil, formerly of Berlin .....George Seigmann

Directed by D. W. Griffith.

The Story: When Jim Young of Youngstown, Pa., hears of the atrocities perpetrated by the Germans in Belgium he enlists in the Canadian army. While on a few hours' leave from his London training camp Jim meets and becomes acquainted with Susie, an Australian girl. The acquaintance ripens into love, and when Jim leaves for the front Sir Roger Brighton, an unscrupulous fortune hunter, tries to persuade Susie, who has inherited twenty thousand pounds, to marry him before he leaves on a business trip to France. The rest of the story tells of the love adventures of the girl and her two suitors, interrupted by international complications and the machinations of German adventurers masquerading as radicals, with whom Sir Roger becomes entangled. The transformation of England's garden of fair women from butterflies of society to workers in hospitals and munition factories is shown. Among them is Susie, who finds "the great love" in service for country and the great cause of democracy.

Feature Robert Harron as Jim Young and Lillian Gish as Susie Broadplains.

Program and Advertising Phrases: No Greater Love Than This: To Serve Your Country in the Great Cause of World Democracy.

The Great Love: The Love of Country Above All Else.
England's Royalty Appear in Person—Themselves—Not Impersonated.
The Latest Masterpiece from the Brain of the Screen's Master.

Stunt Suggestions: Tie this up to "Hearts of the World" by announcing the first Artcraft under Griffith's new arrangement, with the same cast as that employed in "Hearts of the World," plus Henry Walthall, Rosemary Theby and other stars. Take extra newspaper space and work well in advance of showing, even if you do tie your regular business up a little. Use the twenty-four sheets, as well as the smaller sizes of paper, and feature the name of the producer above that of his stars in this instance. In this case it might be well to use the inevitable form letter, but omitting the paragraph commencing "We know no cinema production—" since you are clearly ignorant of other than the first of these productions.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Interesting Theme of Photoplay Has General Appeal.

Stunt Suggestions: There is no stunt that will work in well with this play, and it would be better to work with paper and the printer's ink. The closing situation is an excellent one to play up in the press work, that of the bookworm who is offended when he loses his innocently-earned reputation as a devil among women. Play up that situation without telling what has gone before to pique curiosity, and emphasize the fact that this is one of the big stage successes of Billie Burke, but be careful not to create the impression that Miss Burke is to appear.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

At Harris' home she discovers Myer, private secretary to Harris, who in reality is a German spy, manipulating Harris' financial deals, and abstains from exposing him on his promise to secure the note which Carter and she had signed and which mortgaged her. Gloria's brother, who had been out of touch with the family for years, arrives to transact business with Harris, and she explains her presence in the bank president's home by saying that she is his wife. Realizing that her husband is not trying to redeem the note and thereby release her Gloria borrows money from her brother, and by a lucky stock deal ruins the bank of Harris, which had already been weakened by Myer. If you can get an illuminated copy of the ten commandments mount it on a card for the lobby display, crossing off "Thou shalt not steal" and "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife." Mark against the first "The husband broke this law" and against the other the statement that Jerome Harris was the law-breaker in "The Mortgaged Wife."

Don't play poker with a Chinaman. See what followed in 'By Proxy' at (house and date)." For street work send a man around town in a barrel on which is painted, "I've been playing poker with Ah Sing. If you want to know the rest see 'By Proxy' at (house and date)." Put another barrel in the lobby on showing day with, "Come in and play poker with Ah Sing. We'll lend you this barrel to go home in." For the newspaper work play the other angle, and remark that Miles Standish was not the only man who ever got in trouble making love by proxy.

"FALSE AMBITION"

Triangle Presents Alma Rubens in a Dual Role in the Story of Two Sisters Who Found Love by Strikingly Different Roads.

Cast.

Judith } Alma Rubens
Zariska }
Felicity ..... Peggy Pearce
Alma ..... Alberta Lee
David Strong ..... Edward Peil
Mark Strong ..... Walt Whitman
Mrs. Dorian ..... Iris Ashton
Lucy Vernon ..... Alice Crawford
Mrs. Pemberton ..... Myrtle Rushell
Mrs. Van Dixon ..... Lillian Langdon
Peter Van Dixon ..... Lee Phelps
John Van Dixon ..... Ward Caulfield
Paul Vincent ..... Lee Hill

Directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton.

The Story: Felicity had golden hair and a sunny disposition, while her sister, Judith, had black hair and eyes, and a temper and disposition to match them. She fell in love with Felicity's beau, David, and, with the money he gave her for her trousseau, went to the city, and was soon established as Zariska, the fortune teller. Upon the death of an uncle who left her a thousand dollars she returned home. Just at that time a vessel was wrecked, and among the passengers was Mrs. Dorian, a wealthy woman, who died leaving a message which Judith volunteered to deliver for her. However, Judith, with jewelry and other things to identify her, masqueraded as the real Mrs. Dorian, and was received by society. David obtained employment at the Pemberton's, where Judith was staying, and, penetrating her disguise, unmasked her deception just in time to prevent her marriage to Peter, a prominent society man. Judith, angry and disgraced, returned home, and during the long hours that followed her soul was regenerated. Paul, the only one who had not fallen for her during her triumph, came to her now and told her he was going to Africa to risk everything to conquer the epidemic of sleeping sickness. Judith, tearful and penitent, saw the love in his eyes, and agreed to go with him.

Feature Alma Rubens, who plays the dual roles of Judith and Zariska, and Lee Hill as Paul Vincent.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Tempest and Sunshine Fleck the Sky in Domestic Life Until True Love Triumphs.

Vampire Sister Plays Spider to the Fly of Fickle Love.

Death and Disgrace Marks the End of the Vampire's Path.

Two Sisters and the Love of One Man Create Remarkable Photoplay.

Originality in Theme Gives Photoplay Gripping Appeal.

Proof That There's Something New Under the Photoplay Sun.

Stunt Suggestions: If you never worked it try the fortune telling stunt in your lobby, setting up a booth and using some clever girl to fake the stock predictions winding up with the advice to see the play. By withholding the connection with the advertising stunt you can get up quite a sensation. In the newspaper work hammer on the dual role, and ask which is the real Alma Rubens.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.

"LET THE Simplex TWINS PUT ON THE SHOW"

"Ladies and Gentlemen:

"We are the Simplex Twins, and desire to speak a few words to you.

"Our Manager has taken pains to select pictures that will afford you the highest degree of entertainment, education and amusement.

"But he knows that no matter how excellent a subject may be, its good effect is lost, and your eyes are injured, if the picture is not projected in life-like manner, or if it quivers or jumps.

"In order to prevent this and to save your eyes from all strain, the Manager has engaged us, because he knows of our successful work in the highest-class Theatres all over the world.

"We do our work in that room up yonder, so you will not see us. But when the show is over you will appreciate that we were kind to your eyes, and you will decide to come again. We thank you."

Seeing is believing; and what the Simplex Twins say can be seen on the screen.

Discrimination and Conservation

We desire to announce that within the past two weeks we have had offered and submitted to us for test, a comparatively cheap device intended to change Alternating into Direct Current. We were pleased to be told by the manufacturer of this device that he considered us the largest and most responsible distributor of motion picture accessories, and that he hoped the test would prove his device to be equal to a motor generator.

We have stated how U. T. E. is composed of the most experienced men and engineers in the business. Therefore, it did not take us long, after we secured the device, to find out that, although it was advertised a few weeks ago as a "Converter" of A. C. to D. C., it is merely a commutating rectifier.

The mechanical commutating rectifier has been experimented upon and proposed for many years, and we were somewhat surprised when certain claims were made for this device, and now our judgment has been verified, and that is—

That a mechanical Rectifier with commutator and brushes, operated by a synchronous motor, will not give a constant Direct Current source of supply for the arc. Therefore, in order to produce a light on the screen which is at all satisfactory, it is necessary to run at very high amperage on the D. C. side. Tests proved conclusively that a 55 ampere D. C. Arc on a Hallberg Motor Generator gave one-third more illumination on the screen than was produced with this so-called converter with 80 amperes. But, aside from the efficiency being 8% lower than the poorest motor generator, and being from 15% to 18% lower than the efficiency of our Hallberg Motor Generator, and the light one-third less with the same watts consumed from the line, the most important feature is that a mechanical rectifier or so-called converter delivers an interrupted current at the arc. Therefore, the ghost or wave effect on the screen is apparent, like it is with the ordinary A. C. arc—

If U. T. E. had not exercised its usual discrimination in selecting the articles it offers for sale the low price at which this device was offered to us might have made us offer it for sale to you—

Mr. Exhibitor—You can thank your lucky stars that there is at least one equipment concern which is not subject to influence by low prices, but Quality takes first place with us.

In the above, U. T. E. has exercised Discrimination. Now, it is up to you to exercise Conservation, by saving current and producing better results on your screen, by installing our Hallberg Motor Generator. We guarantee absolutely satisfactory results with the highest efficiency.

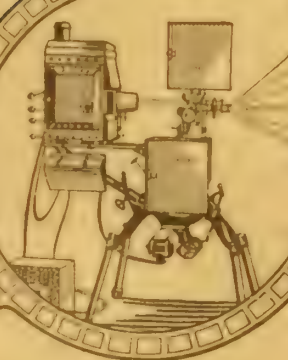
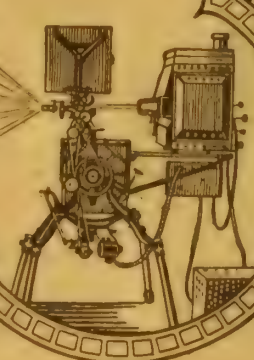
"Please Replace These Parts"



The Exhibitor who makes this request knows that this company stands solidly behind its product. He is confident that his request will be given prompt and favorable attention.

Picture his chagrin when he receives our reply:



"These parts are not of our manufacture and consequently we cannot replace them."

"Profit" is not the impelling motive behind the manufacture of Genuine Power's Repair Parts. The main purpose is to spare no time or expense in seeing to it that every part leaves our factory perfect and capable of so performing its respective duty that it will maintain the High Standard of Efficiency for which POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has always been noted.

You will insure yourself against inconvenience and loss by purchasing only the genuine parts which, in all cases, are stamped with the name or initials of this company.

"—no matter what size house"

—says Richard J. Delly, of the Delphi Theatre of Chicago, a 248-seat house—

"I'LL admit right at the start that I didn't think a small house could make money with 'The KAISER' but tell all exhibitors for me that they needn't worry because their house is small, for 'The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin' will surely make them money, no matter what size house.

"I played 'The KAISER' on Sunday, June 16th, one of the hottest days in several years, at the Delphi, a 248-seat outlying theatre, and was surely surprised to see the crowds that started to come in. To cut a long story short, I took in One Hundred and Sixty-nine dollars on a Sunday and, for the three days, I took in Three hundred and thirty-seven dollars.

"It's a long time since this 248-seat house played to capacity and I am eagerly looking forward to the time when I can book your newest JEWEL."

UNIVERSAL Special Attractions are produced by the soundest, oldest, best equipped concern in Moving Pictures.

And best equipped means longest experience and keenest artistic taste and choicest stage facilities. It further means, the most for the money—in other words, a reasonable price for the finest of fine pictures.

This is the good solid business reason why you can book any and every Universal Special Attraction with your eyes shut. The picture will be right and the price will be right. Prove both these facts for yourself at your nearest Universal Exchange today.

Speaking again of September 1st 1919—

You Book for Years Not for Days

ONE year is the unit upon which motion picture theatres are successfully conducted—not one day or one week or one month.

You don't lay out a policy just for next week—you plan for next year, and for the year after that.

A DAY'S PROFIT means nothing in your scheme of existence. A year's profit means everything.

Your year-after-year plan calls for the best pictures. Your policy is to build your business, which means to satisfy your patrons.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's plan has the year as its unit. Its service is a year-after-year service; its policy a year-after-year policy.

You don't think of one Paramount or one Artcraft Picture. You think of the Paramount or Artcraft standard and reputation and popularity which have been established not by one or two pictures, but by hundreds of pictures.

You far seeing, year-ahead-of-the-game men: your theatres, too, have high standards, excellent reputations that have been built by hundreds of good pictures.

We're both following the same plan—the year-after-year plan.

That's why the exhibitors and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are working together better than ever before.

Bryant Washburn

"The Gipsy Trial"

A SPARKLING society comedy about a young adventurer who is hired by a persistent wooer (who wishes he were a gipsy) to kidnap a beautiful girl. That's the outline of "The Gipsy Trail," a play of today which will be Bryant Washburn's first Paramount Picture.

"The Gipsy Trail" was a great success when produced at the Plymouth Theatre in New York. As a motion picture, it will be a tremendous hit for Bryant Washburn—and for you.

Ethel Clayton

"Maggie Pepper"

ETHEL CLAYTON'S first Paramount Picture will be a play known everywhere. It is "Maggie Pepper," the comedy-drama by Charles Klein, in which Rose Stahl starred for several years. It's going to start Ethel Clayton triumphantly on her first year in Paramount Pictures. Robert Vignola will direct it.

The new Ethel Clayton productions are going to add tremendously to the popularity of this talented star.

No Good Theatre Can Afford To Be Without It!

In far off Australia, the land of clean, beautiful little cities, of labor supremacy, the like of which the West does not dream as yet, conditions change rapidly. No school books teach the trade conditions on this great island because they did not exist a decade ago when the books were printed.

But the trade conditions do not change too fast for J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., to keep pace with even so fickle a thing as public taste in amusement.

MRS. CLEMENT MASON

—one of the oldest and largest buyers for this strange country has such implicit faith in the judgment of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., that she allows us to send her whatever in our judgment is right for her market.

Confidence of this degree is based on results of no small proportion. May we recommend some productions for your field?

CHARLIE CHAPLIN
Comedy
"TRIPLE TROUBLE"
NOT a Reissue—NOT a Rehash
But a NEW Film
Bubbling over with Chaplin fun!
ESSANAY-CHAPLIN BRAND

To the Exhibitor:-
If you bought a piece of real estate and foresaw that its value would quadruple if you held it a certain length of time, what would you do?
Certainly you would hold it. That's just what we did with "Triple Trouble."
Essanay made this picture with Charlie Chaplin when he was at the zenith of his laugh-making powers. We knew its value then. We knew there would come a time when it would be worth many times its weight in gold.
We held this negative in our vaults for the most opportune time of release, which we believe is NOW.
There has been only one new Chaplin film in several months. The public is eager for a NEW Chaplin comedy and will welcome "Triple Trouble" with open arms.
Were we right in holding this laughing-nugget back for the propitious moment?
We were!
Yours truly,

WOLFVILLE TALES

By Alfred Henry Lewis

EXHIBITOR, LISTEN---

The old type of western movie may be a breadwinner, but it isn't complete. It is full of ridin' an' shootin', villain, hero and shero. All of which is essential, BUT—

Why not the same thing handled by artists, instead of mere types? Why not give the production class along with its speed? Why not have good actors and story and staging, actors who can play a wide range of moods? Why not provide "characterization," the modern idea in pictures?

Well, it is done in this remarkable series of comedy-dramas from the literature of Alfred Henry Lewis, the WOLFVILLE TALES. The releases aletrnate with the famous O. Henry stories.

Peter Schaefer Is National League President

Chicago Exhibitor Elected at Boston Convention, the Sessions of Which Are Unmarked by Any Really Constructive Legislation—Puts Club in Hands of League Delegates to National Association

By James L. Hoff

BOSTON and the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America have had their convention and the delegates presumably had a good time and have gone home. The weather conditions were generally good, the accommodations of the Lenox hotel, at which the Eighth Annual Convention was held, were sufficient. Nothing unseemly marked the conduct of anyone or any session of the convention. Most all the squabbles, if any there were outside of the usual three-ring hippodrome performance of the New York contingent, were conducted in committee rooms. Probably this was as well, for while the greater body of delegates just waited and waited and waited they were spared the agony of listening to the windjammers in a hall at a summer temperature thus superheated.

If you are looking for evidences of constructive trade legislation, kind reader, seek no further—it did not happen. Some recommendations of minor value were made, it is true, but there was nothing big in either promise or performance.

There was a lot of talk about "100 per cent. organization," but not so much as a site was chosen for that edifice, to say nothing of the laying of foundations therefor.

We hope that interested exhibitors, looking forward to amalgamation of the interests that parted a year ago at Chicago, may find some crumb of consolation in the pronouncements of this convention, but it is feared that there will be discovered little of a consoling nature. True, it was provided that the board of directors are empowered to increase that body by ten additional directors, presumably to be named from among the members of the American Exhibitors' Association if that body decides to unite with the League, but the subject was never a topic of discussion upon the floor of the convention.

PETER J. SCHAEFER,
The League's New President.

League Returns to the Exhibiting Business.

Upon a recommendation of a committee appointed for the purpose, the League did divorce itself from the publishing business by turning back to the treasury of the Trade Review Publishing Company the stock which was donated to the League when the paper was started. This action may or may not be good business, but the League, at least, is clear of one side issue.

The only unusual incident that occurred during the convention was the effort to place William A. Brady in nomination for president of the organization. It was ill-advised and ill-considered. Constitutionally it could not have been done, for Mr. Brady is not an exhibitor and therefore not eligible for the office. Mr. Brady could not have been properly informed or he would never have consented to let his name be used, even under the terms stated by him in his letter to Mr. Ochs, which we print in the proceedings. It was a regrettable incident.

Mention should be made here of the very temperate and admirable manner in which Mr. Ochs presided at this meeting. It almost made us regret some of the things the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has felt compelled to say about him during the past year were it not that we believe those criticisms helped some to bring him to a more human frame of mind. Yet we have to admire the manner in which he held himself in control and the very courteous treatment he accorded everyone. At that it is doubtful that he can complain of any action taken by the convention.

For none of the shortcomings can Boston be blamed. When the National Association and the Motion Picture Exposition Company decided to abandon the exposition feature the heart was taken out of the Boston Boosters, who had made great preparation for a big demonstration and had spent a lot of money in arranging therefor. That they should have to stop operations at almost the last minute put them in a most embarassing situation and helped in no small degree to dampen the spirit of the convention.

What happened at the convention follows:

TUESDAY—MORNING SESSION.

PRESIDENT OCHS called the first session of the convention to order at 11:30 o'clock. Fully one hundred delegates were in attendance, together with a number of visiting exhibitors and representatives of trade and other publications. A credential committee, consisting of Thomas Furniss, chairman; Hector Pasmezoglu, E. J. Fisher, Fred Hartman, J. J. O'Donnell, N. C. Rice and H. C. Hespe, was appointed, and all delegates were instructed to appear before it at once, the convention taking a recess to give the committee a chance to formulate its report. It took the committee an hour to accomplish its task, when it reported that 127 delegates were entitled to seats in the convention. They are named as follows:

President Ochs Reads Annual Report.

When the report of the credential committee had been read and approved President Ochs presented his annual address, which he read from manuscript. It consisted of seven full typewritten pages, approving in the main the work of his administration for the past two years. Some applause was elicited by a reference to the confidence of the trade in the "President of these United States" and an expression of belief that "the exhibitors of the United States stand in back of our President and the Government 100 per cent. American to the core."

Rehearsing briefly the difficulties and problems of his administration for the benefit of the delegates of this convention, Mr. Ochs referred to the hampering of the work of the league by the tying up of the funds realized from the Chicago convention by certain malcontents, and the necessity of paying out some $2,500 for the traveling expenses of the members of the executive committee in order to prevent the A. E. A. from being recognized by the N. A. M. P. I.

He also called the delegates' attention to the various movements for co-operative booking organized among exhibitors, and expressed the belief that the activities of any officer or member of the league in such movements should not bar them from membership in the league; also that the delegates would still "the vicious tongue of scandal" by expressing "their sentiments in no uncertain tones against those who slander the officials of this organization and also the intelligence of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America." In this connection Mr. Ochs suggested that a committee be appointed to investigate the officials of the organization to discover how and in what way they had used their offices for the advancement of selfish purposes.

Mr. Ochs in his valedictory took a shot at the trade papers, which, with one exception, he said, had been malignant in their attitude toward the exhibitors' organization. As regards the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, though paying a high compliment to William A. Brady, its president, Mr. Ochs was of the opinion that it was not, as at present constituted, a guiding force for good to the exhibitor at large.

Says Some Manufacturers Have Profited on 15-Cent Tax.

Regarding federal taxation Mr. Ochs referred to the 15 cents a reel tax and said it had been declared that some of the manufacturers had been making a profit thereon and thought the matter should be investigated. Recalling the resolution asking the members to pay $3 each to a fund to fight the music tax Mr. Ochs said that only 300 exhibitors had responded, although the league had incurred lawyers' fees to the amount of $10,000 in the defense of exhibitors sued by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

Mr. Ochs closed by pledging his "full, hearty and complete support to the new president, whoever he may be," with the admonition that he have the confidence and support of the league no matter what he does.

Some more applause was accorded Mr. Ochs at the conclusion of his address, and some one ventured to inquire "what is the matter with Ochs," but no answer was forthcoming, and, proceeding with the business of the convention, reports of officers were called for.

Under this head Ernest H. Horstmann, treasurer, reported that the league had received $8,778.62 during the year, had spent $8,312.22, and had on hand $466.40. W. J. Sweeney, financial secretary, reported a similar condition of affairs. To this balance is to be added the money collected in per capita tax at this convention.

These Were the Committees.

President Ochs then named the following convention committees:

Deposit and Uniform Contract.—Sydney Cohen, New York, chairman; H. A. Gillman, Massachusetts; George Roberts, New York; Col. H. L. Kincaide, Massachusetts; A. Fisher, Pennsylvania; F. G. Berry, New Hampshire; Charles Steiner, New York.

Grievance Committee.—E. H. Horstmann, Massachusetts, chairman; Thomas Lavin, Missouri; John Goodwin, Missouri; M. White, New Hampshire; S. Sucknow, New York; Dr. S. S. Steinberg, Pennsylvania.

Music Tax Committee.—Alfred S. Black, Maine, chairman; John O'Donnell, Pennsylvania; L. F. Blumenthal, New Jersey; Hector Pasmezoglu, Missouri; Alfred Hamburger, Illinois.

By-Laws Committee.—Thomas Howard, New York, chairman; Fred Eliott, New York; G. J. Houtain, Arkansas; John Collins, New Jersey; Frank Hornig, Maryland.; J. Lourie, Massachusetts; A. Brown, Pennsylvania; J. E. Charbonneau, New Hampshire; F. Barhydt, New York.

Resolution Committee.—Daniel Chamberlain, Minnesota, chairman; Alfred Hamburger, Illinois; Joseph Mogler, Missouri; W. E. Spragg, Connecticut; Louis F. Blumenthal, New Jersey; Charles Goodwin, Pennsylvania; Thomas Howard, New York.

War Service Committee.—Alfred S. Black, Maine, chairman; Frank Eager, Nebraska; Herman Brown, Idaho; Robert Levy, Illinois; Ed. Pohlman, Missouri; Louis F. Blumenthal, New Jersey; Louis DeHoff, Maryland; Wm. Deeth, Minnesota; E. M. Clarke, Mississippi; Ernest Horstmann, Massachusetts; Judge O'Donnell, Pennsylvania; N. C. Rice, Iowa; Samuel Harris, Arkansas; Ed. J. Fischer, Washington; C. H. Bean, New Hampshire.

Legislative Committee.—C. H. Bean, New Hampshire, chairman; M. Silverman, New York; J. Lyons, New Jersey; W. G. Hartford, Rhode Island; R. Parker, Minnesota; S. Berman, New York; D. Barrist, Pennsylvania.

Trade Review Committee.—Hector Pasmezoglu, Missouri, chairman; Morris Needles, New York; Louis DeHoff, Maryland; Ed. J. Fischer, Washington; A. R. Nace, Pennsylvania; John Manheimer, New York.

Announcing to the assembled delegates that all matters to come before the convention would have to come through the committees, President Ochs directed the several committees to proceed to business at once and urged the delegates to present to them such resolutions as they had in mind without delay. The meeting was then adjourned until 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

TUESDAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

A NUMBER of resolutions and recommendations were reported by the various committees at the afternoon session which, by the way, did not get started until 5.30 o'clock. Many of these were referred to other committees or back to the committee that reported them, to be brought before the convention at another time.

From the finance committee came a resolution that the annual per capita tax be increased from $1 to $4. After a little discussion this was adopted. The committee on deposits and uniform contracts recommended that exhibitors put a limit of time for approval of a contract by the home office of a distributor. It was also recommended that efforts be made in the several states to bring advance deposits under the banking laws of all states. A recommendation for permanent committees to be appointed on the Sunday opening question to go before all state legislators on that question was also approved.

At one stage in the proceedings the newspaper representatives were asked to leave the convention hall while the matters of the Exhibitors Trade Review were presented by the committee appointed to look over the affairs of that publication. It was learned that a recommendation was at that time adopted returning to the Trade Review corporation all the stock which had been donated to the League when the project was first formed. This was opposed by the New York delegation.

Other committees not being ready to report the meeting was adjourned until Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY—EVENING SESSION.

THERE was to have been a considerable amount of business transacted on Wednesday morning, but nothing happened in the convention. The trouble which delayed the game started in the New York delegation, the political complexion of which changed overnight from anti-Ochs to pro-Ochs, when several delegates arrived and took the seats previously held by alternates. The matter was taken into the credential committee and the entire morning was spent in trying to straighten out that angle. As the delegates had been invited by Acting Mayor Collins of Boston and a committee of Boston exhibitors to view the harbor by boat and to visit Nantasket Beach in the afternoon the convention was adjourned until 8 o'clock in the evening.

The evening session was delayed an hour and did not get started until 9 o'clock and the business consisted mainly in considering a few belated resolutions. The law and legislative committee presented a suggestion from W. W. Watts of Illinois, communicated by letter, as that gentleman could not be present, which provided that houses charging five cent admissions be included in the federal tax levy. This was amended to read that admissions for children under 12 years should not be taxed and in that form it was adopted as a recommendation to the ways and means committee of Congress.

Mr. Black offered a resolution to the effect that the Motion Picture Exhibitors League pledge its hearty support to Adolph Zukor in his work in behalf of the next Liberty Loan drive as the representative of the motion picture industry. Mr. Horstmann of Boston seconded this motion, but the discussion that followed developed a feeling among the delegates that the industry should receive greater consideration. This feeling was allayed by the adoption of an amendment to the effect that the president of the league should aid Mr. Zukor in his work in whatever way he could and with that change was adopted.

Antagonism to N. A. M. P. I.

The feeling against the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, occasioned mainly by the action of that organization in refusing to take part in the Boston exposition as planned, found expression in a rather strong resolution coming from the executive committee and presented by the chairman, Mr. Chamberlain of Minnesota. It reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, elected at this convention, refrain from taking any part in the affairs of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry until the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America receive 50 per cent. representation on the board of directors and all committees, or until a reorganization is made upon a basis in which the exhibitor members therein will have a 50 per cent. representation, and failing so to do the executive committee is hereby given full power to act in such manner as they may see fit."

This proviso to the continuance of the affiliation of the League with the N. A. M. P. I. was adopted with little discussion and without dissent. It had been discussed at great length in the executive committee and William A. Brady had been called from New York to participate in these preliminary discussions without changing the antagonistic tone therein. What the effect this action will have upon the board of directors of the N. A. M. P. I. was problematic at the time it was passed.

Advertising in Pictures Condemned.

At the instance of Mr. Pasmezoglu of Missouri the growing tendency of producers to insert advertising matter in their pictures was brought to the attention of the convention. The discussion of the subject developed the fact that some of the recent Paramount productions were the worst examples of the abuse complained of. It was stated that some producers had offered their facilities to advertisers at various sums, pointing out the large distribution they could give by reason of having pictures that the exhibitor was compelled to show to the public on the strength of his contract for such showing. Mr. Pasmezoglu closed his argument against the practice by offering a resolution to the effect that advertisers be advised by the League that it was the determination of the exhibitors of motion pictures to cut out advertising matter regardless of the form in which it might appear in the pictures used by them. This resolution was adopted unanimously.

Mr. Pasmezoglu also asked for the sentiment of the delegates present upon the practice of manufacturers of pictures owning and operating theaters in competition with theaters owned by exhibitors who were their regular customers. On motion of Mr. Manheimer of New York the League was put on record as being against the practice complained of.

On the Music Tax.

Mr. Rome of Baltimore wanted to know what had been done by the committee appointed to negotiate with the Society of Authors, Publishers and Composers regarding the royalty on copyrighted music. President Ochs replied that the committee of which he was chairman had been in conference with Nathan Burkan, attorney for the Society the day previous in Boston, and that Mr. Burkan had returned to New York to confer with the society's directors and later had reported back that he could not get his directors together, but suggested that a sub-committee of the music tax committee be appointed with power to act in the matter. On motion the president was authorized to appoint the sub-committee with such power.

At this point in the proceedings President Ochs read a telegram from George W. Perkins thanking the motion picture exhibitors in behalf of the Y. M. C. A. for their assistance in the work being prosecuted by that organization in the War. A message was also read coming from Rose Tapley wishing the exhibitors a successful convention.

A communication from Harry Crandall of Washington, D. C., on federal matters was read which drew a vote of thanks from the delegates for the interest Mr. Crandall had taken in behalf of the trade.

St. Louis Selected for 1919.

Usually the selection of the place for the convention of the next year starts something, but this time the St. Louis delegates, under the direction of Mr. Pasmezoglu, did most of their promotion on the quiet so that when the question was offered in the convention there was nothing to discuss. Several of the delegates who might have had other places in mind, in good nature attempted to worry the good natured Athenian from the "Show Me" state, but there was never a doubt from the moment Handsome Hector proposed that the convention partake of the hospitality of his home town what the result would be, so St. Louis was unanimously selected as the place for the convention in 1919.

This concluded the business of the session, but the delegates were requested to listen to a few remarks by William A. Brady, who happened to be present. He was introduced by President Ochs, who took occasion to say that he had always found Mr. Brady one hundred per cent. fine.

Mr. Brady was in a serious mood and said many things of a confidential nature to the delegates which he requested be not published. He gave them an insight to circumstances and conditions that cleared away a great deal of misunderstanding and compelled them to admit that much of their apprehensions regarding the standing of the exhibitor in war activities was unfounded. He gave them good advice as to their future conduct and pointed out to them the great necessity of unity of action. Mr. Brady said in part as follows:

Mr. Brady's Speech.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the swan song of our friend from Missouri, Mr. Pasmezoglu, in talking about 100 per cent. efficiency, and talking about the future and the possibilities of the motion picture and these men assembled in this room who form part of the men in the United States who control the screen. I am heartily in favor of what the gentleman from St. Louis said, and I appear before you with a certain sense of disappointment in facing all these humorous signs in the room, and I regret exceedingly that there is not a bunch of prominent exhibitors sitting under each sign. That day must come for you, gentlemen, some time. I don't know when it is going to come. I caught a spirit exhibited in several parts of this room tonight that makes me feel that the day is somewhat distant. I caught a spirit in this room—and I would like to be heckled on what I am going to say—I would like to have any man in the room ask me questions about what I am going to say now. I caught a certain amount of criticism directed at the appointment of Mr. Zukor as the chairman of a committee. Mark the word, gentlemen, a chairman of a committee that was appointed by the president of the National Association, and, when I speak of the National Association, I consider you, gentlemen, a branch of that association, and until the day comes when you divorce yourselves from that association you are a branch of that association, and you are responsible for the actions of that association.

I dare say that your president and some of the other directors of the National Association who are in this room will testify to the fact that for the last two years, except in one instance at a recent meeting, the exhibitors of America have never got the worst of it in the National Association. Therefore, I say that Mr. Zukor was appointed as a chairman of a committee to co-operate with the Secretary of the Treasury.

I heard one gentleman say that the exhibitors were not represented on that committee. That is not true, gentlemen. The exhibitors were represented on that committee. The committee, if I remember rightly, was Zukor, Loew, Spoor, Brulatour, and someone else. In every committee that was named at that time to co-operate with the national Government there was an exhibitor named upon every committee. In one of the committees, I believe, an exhibitor was chairman. On two of the committees, William Fox was named as chairman to co-operate with the Red Cross of America, and Mr. Fox at that time declined the appointment. He was named as an exhibtor. Mr. Loew was named as an exhibitor. Mr. Schaefer, of Chicago, was named on a very important committee. May I ask what the name of the committee was?

MR. SCHAEFER.—Red Cross.

MR. BRADY.—On every committee that was appointed an exhibitor, a distributor, and a representative of the equippment class was appointed; an actor was appointed; a director was appointed. David W. Griffith was made chairman of the entire War Service Board.

Now, the reason I am calling your attention to that—and I am inviting you to heckle me—I am inviting a discussion from any man in this room on the question as to whether the motion picture business of the United States was represented upon the different committees that were named to act in connection with the Government. I deny that the exhibitors of the United States were overlooked, and I think it is wrong that any of you prominent exhibitors who have kept in touch with things should have allowed such an impression to go throughout the United States.

I ask your president whether it is not a fact that in naming the most powerful committee in connection with the Government that he named the National Board that was to act with the Government, and that the head of your league in every state in this Union was named as the chairman of that state league with power to act with the Government. I ask the chairmen who are present in this room whether he was not communicated with, whether he was not given unlimited power to act in conjunction with the Government in his state. Is that not a fact?

A colloquy followed, in which it was developed that the exhibitors who had been appointed had in many cases done remarkable work; that they had been appointed by the president of the league and that they had never been interfered with by the National Association, all of which proved Mr. Brady's statement that the exhibitors had not been slighted.

Zukor Has Done Remarkable Work.

MR. BRADY.—Now, as to the question of Mr. Zukor. Mr. Zukor has done most remarkable work for the Secretary of the Treasury, and I wouldn't care what you gentlemen decided to do here tonight you could not remove him. He has turned his organization over, he has had men down there by the week—expensive men. I was in Washington last week, and Mr. Flinn, his press agent, was there for four days. He is there himself turning his whole organization, which you must know is a big organization, over to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have got no axe to grind for Mr. Zukor. I don't care any more for Mr. Zukor than I do for any man in this room. It goes both ways, but I have got to testify to the fact that Mr. Zukor has acted like a patriot and has backed the Treasury Department with his money and with his men, and he is as much entitled to wear the word "patriot" as any other man in this country. (Applause.)

The President is your friend. The President is for you. The President believes that no other force in the United States has given him such wonderful service in such a patriotic way, without payment, without price fixing, without continuous journeys to Washington, without lobbyists, and without lobbying, and, for that reason, I say it is the psychological moment for you to realize this, for you to take yourselves seriously and get together. Do what the gentleman from St. Louis said, "Come to St. Louis a year from now 100 per cent. efficient."

Why haven't you got the biggest exhibitors, why haven't you got the leading exhibitors of the United States here tonight?

Why aren't you in a hall ten times bigger than this? Because you don't take yourselves seriously, and because you don't force others to take you seriously.

Now, let's see whether the National Association has been "an association of many assessments and few achievements," as has been said. Name one time in two years that the National Association and the Motion Picture League of America has been licked in any capacity in this country. Name one instance. Name any fight we have lost. You can't count the things that they have done. They have not bragged. They have not advertised. They have assessed, I believe, twice. They have not assessed you at all. They have assessed twice. Why? Because when it was originally formed it was formed wrong. The dues and initiation fees were a joke. It has taken less money to run the National Association for two years than possibly it takes to run your local association in New York City. I think something about like twelve or fourteen thousand dollars a year. The officials have paid their expenses everywhere. There never has been a bill for expenses. The National Association has been run cheaper and has done far more good than any other similar association that was ever formed in this country. Now, that is a broad assertion, but I dare any man in the room to deny it and prove it.

Now, what are its weaknesses? What has it done that displeases you? What has it done that makes you want to divorce yourself from it? What has it done?

MR. LYTON.—Mr. Brady, I have heard a lot of remarks, and nobody got up here in regard to what the complaint is. I will tell you. They have complained about being represented at Washington; about not being represented by an exhibitor, and I think this an opportune moment for you to make a few remarks on that question.

Brady Tells What Happened in Washington.

MR. BRADY.—All right, I will tell you. A year ago. Washington. A meeting of manufacturers, distributors, and exhibitors at the capital. Tax bill pending. Mr. Ochs in the room discussing what we were going to put before the committee. The finance committee of the Senate meeting in the next room. A gentleman from Philadelphia—I have never seen him before nor since, I don't know who he was—comes in the room and says, "I have just presented your brief to the committee. I am going to take the next train back to Philadelphia." A little later on trouble between the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee. Picture. One column over there, one column over here, and one column over there. One exhibitor behind that post gets hold of a Senator and tells him something. Senator starts toward the room. Another exhibitor over here says, "Come over here I want to tell you something." Gets him behind this post. Tells him something. He starts for the room. Another exhibitor behind the post tells him something else. That is what happened in Washington a year ago.

I am a firm believer in looking ahead and not backward, and I am going to make what I think will probably be the best suggestion that will be made in this convention. I am going to say it is absolutely necessary for the exhibitors of the United States to get together with the manufacturers and the distributors of the United States and have a solid, complete understanding as to what you are going to ask before you go to Washington.

It is within the power of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate when they pass this bill to insert into the bill how the tax shall be levied. There has nothing been decided by the Ways and Means Committee yet at all. That bill will not go to the White House until Christmas. You will know what the bill is going to be within another week because the Ways and Means Committee will report the bill back to the House of Representatives on the 27th day of August. Now, wouldn't it be wise on the 27th day of August, or thereabouts, for you all to get together and make the distributor and manufacturer agree before the bill reaches the Senate committee as to what disposition is to be made of the tax. If you don't come to an agreement it is very easy for you to appoint a committee, make an appointment, and go before the Senate Finance Committee as representatives of this organization and state your case. The Senate Finance Committee will meet any committee representing any organization in America providing the date is set beforehand.

It was said about us last year that we went to sleep at the switch. We did, but it was the fault of "butters-in." Now, don't have any "butters-in" this time.

Pettijohn Advises Amalgamation.

Following Mr. Brady there were calls for Charles C. Pettijohn, who was in the convention hall. Mr. Pettijohn accepted the invitation of the president to speak and came out flatfooted for amalgamation, urging that the time and the needs of the country demanded such action.

Mr. Pettijohn said:

This is no time, gentlemen, to open up old sores. It is a time when we should start a campaign to heal. I could not but help think, when I heard Mr. Brady answering you gentlemen here tonight, about the national industry; I could not help but indulging in the thought that possibly you were living in glass houses and throwing stones. You have not such an organization of efficiency here; you haven't such a wonderful attendance at this convention that should give you the right to criticise the workings of any other branch of this industry. If the right thing has not been done, in my opinion it is the fault of the exhibitors. We men who indulged in this split are to blame, and for my part of the split I am doubly sorry. [Applause.]

I have no criticism for anybody in this room. If I was "touchy," I might have bad occasion to feel somewhat "peeved" this afternoon. But when I was invited here by your president, and when my good friends, Moses O'Reilly and Pat Cohen and Michael Manheimer [Laughter] insisted upon my coming, I felt that you men wanted an amalgamation of all exhibitor organizations, and I thought it was no more than right that if I believed in it myself I should come here and offer to do what I could to bring it about.

Gentlemen, I am not nosing into your business. It is not my party and it is not my funeral, what you do at this convention. It is none of my business whom you elect as your president. But even with the increased railroad fares, I am willing to climb on board the train with him and go into Chicago, with whomever you may elect, and do the best I can to bring about an amalgamation. [Applause.]

I am not speaking in any capacity tonight. I am not here representing the American Exhibitors' Association, but I have found out in the last forty-eight hours, since I came here, how they feel, to some extent. There will be no trouble, gentlemen, in bringing about an amalgamation of all exhibitor organizations, in my opinion. It is not so important who you elect president or for the rest of your officers. The important thing is this: We have awakened up among ourselves to the fact that a divided front is bad for us. Other industries have realized it—why should not the motion picture exhibitors of this country realize it? As Mr. Brady said, instead of a few men in this room there should be two thousand men, and you can have two thousand men if you maintain that thing which is more important than anything else—that spirit that has crept out since you have been here in Boston; the proper spirit to put over a "drive" and make a clean one hundred per cent. organization of exhibitors!

No Time to Open Old Sores, Says Pettijohn.

And another thing, while this good feeling is going around and while we are all getting ready to engage in a drive to make an exhibitors' organization amount to something, I wonder how many of you have thought of this word that was applied to we fellows engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures—this word "Exhibitor." That was a word that was "wished upon us" by the "Burlesque Barons" when they did not want to be classified with us, at the beginning of this industry.

Last year I got out to the Indiana State Fair long enough to engage in my favorite pastime. After loading up on some "hokey pokey" ice cream, I went down where I always like to go—to see the sheep and the pigs—and while I was down there, looking over these fat boys, I noticed one big fellow about six feet two, with a straw fedora on the back of his head and four wisps of hay in his mouth, with one pant-leg in his boot and the other one free and flapping. And he had on a big yellow badge and it said on that badge, "Member of the Swine Breeders' Association of America." I asked a bystander, "Who is that important-loking individual over there?" And he said, "He is an Exhibitor." [Laughter.] It occurs to me that we have reached the point where we might indulge in a little dignity in our profession; we might even be known as theater-owners or something of that kind.

There are a lot of things, gentlemen, that you can do. Mr. Brady touched the keynote tonight when he told you of the wonderful work that is being done by the motion picture industry. It has been said that within the last forty-eight hours, by one of our greatest Americans, that the motion picture industry is responsible for the splendid morale of the Allied troops in this great crisis.

Gentlemen, there is only one answer to the position that we have gotten ourselves into. Let's get out of it! We have all made our mistakes; let's do the right thing. I want to say, before Lee Ochs leaves this chair, that we have had our difficulties. He is a fighter and he stands his ground fairly well. But I want to say to you men, just because I have a little fear of what may happen tomorrow, I want to say to you, transact your business so that you can elect your officers without a squabble.

That is all I am asking here, as your guest, and I want to say to Mr. Ochs that when he made the statement that he has kept his hands out of this election, I believe it is the truth, because I have watched him. [Applause.] I did start to say, "Lee should have done that a little sooner," but I wont say it. [Laughter.]

And I want to say this, Mr. President, that after you have gone out of office I want to be your friend and I want to work with you in anything that we can do for the good of an exhibitors' organization.

I appreciate the many courtesies that you have shown me, and I want to take the message to the American Exhibitors' Association that you have shown me these courtesies. I appreciate them. I hope that after the A. E. A. boys get together and hear the message they are going to feel just like I do. I want to lay my cards on the table—It don't make any difference whom you select for your president; let's get together behind somebody and let's amount to something! I thank you. [Applause.]

This closed the evening session and an adjournment was taken until Thursday morning at 10.30 o'clock.

THURSDAY'S MEETING.

WHILE it was thought that Thursday's meeting might provide the excitement, the lack of which had made the Boston convention rather dull, nothing really disturbing happened upon the floor of the convention hall. There was the usual delay in getting down to business. Instead of calling the delegates to order at the appointed time—10.30 o'clock in the morning—it was something after 2 p.m. before President Ochs could get them down to business.

The credential committee reported a correction in the list of delegates, giving New York twenty-four instead of twenty and giving five to Vermont. This raised the total number of votes in the convention to 132.

In an effort to get all business disposed of on this, the last day of the convention, Mr. Spragg of Connecticut succeeded in putting through a motion to the effect that the convention should not adjourn until its business had been completed.

Mr. Howard of New York as chairman of the committee on by-laws offered some amendments to the existing by-laws which were adopted. The first consolidated the offices of financial secretary and treasurer, abolishing the first named and gave the president power to appoint an executive secretary whose tenure of office is to coincide with his own.

The executive committee was given power to elect, at its discretion, ten additional members to that body. This action was explained as a step toward amalgamation, the additional members to come from the A. E. A. if that body shall decide to come back to the League.

The method of collecting the dues was made the subject of another amendment which directed the National Secretary to give a sixty-day notice of payment to branch leagues and required a payment within thirty days prior to the convention on penalty of suspension. The amount of the annual per capita tax was raised to $4, to be paid quarterly.

With these amendments the existing bylaws as formerly adopted were ordered printed.

Election of Officers.

There was considerable formality surrounding the choosing of the officers for the coming year. President Ochs opened the ceremony by urging the members of the League to support the officers elected, regardless of who they might be, and assured the delegates that such was his purpose. Nominations were then called for and Tom Furniss, the war horse from Minnesota, placed Peter J. Schaefer of Chicago in nomination. C. L. Dooley of New Jersey nominated Dr. H. C. Hespe of Jersey City, and M. J. Lydon of Massachusetts nominated Ernest H. Horstmann of Boston.

There were numerous seconds to the nomination of the various candidates in progress of deliverance when Charles O'Reilly of New York, speaking for a faction of the New York delegation, offered the name of William A. Brady as a candidate for president. Sam Berman, in a forceful speech, seconded the nomination. As there had been considerable talk that the name of Mr. Brady was to be sprung upon the convention the delegates were not taken by surprise, and if anyone hoped to stampede the delegates by the mention of his name they met disappointment right there.

President Ochs interposed here to read a letter he had received from Mr. Brady in the morning which was not calculated to strengthen his chances if any. Here it is:

President Brady Writes to President Ochs.

"I am not a candidate for the League presidency. Several of your delegates approached me last night and suggested that I allow the use of my name. If the office were offered me these would be the conditions of my acceptance.

"1—That it be a unanimous choice, backed by Messrs. Schaefer, Hespe and Horstmann.

"2—That the A. E. A. amalgamate and indorse your choice.
"3—That if I am chosen president of the National Association I am free to accept it.
"This will bring about a real organization and produce the results we all hope for. There would be one head of the industry capable of giving all its branches a square deal. As a favor to me read this to the convention and do not allow the use of my name except under these conditions.
"WILLIAM A. BRADY."

The candidacy of Mr. Brady was vigorously supported by Colonel Kincaid of Boston and several others until a ruling was asked of President Ochs on the availability of the candidate. Mr. Ochs ruled that Mr. Brady could not be properly placed before the convention. An appeal was taken from this decision and the president was sustained by a vote of 115 to 15. This ended the ill-advised attempt to put Mr. Brady forward for the chief office of the League.

Two ballots were taken for the other candidates. The first gave Schaefer 51, Hespe 37 and Horstmann 42. As a majority of the delegates present was necessary to a choice —67 votes—a second ballot was ordered, but before it was taken a recess was given for more caucusing.

Horstmann and Hespe Withdraw in Schaefer's Favor.

When the delegates got together again Mr. Horstmann and Mr. Hespe withdrew and the entire 132 votes were cast for Mr. Schaefer, electing him president for the next year of league activity.

Other officers were elected as follows: First vice president, John Wittman of New York; second vice president, J. L. Rome of Maryland; third vice president, W. E. Spragg of Connecticut; fourth vice president, Edward J. Fisher of Washington; financial secretary and treasurer, Ernest H. Horstmann of Massachusetts; executive committee, Lee A. Ochs of New York, John O'Donnell of Pennsylvania, Daniel W. Chamberlain of North Dakota, Frank D. Eager of Nebraska, Alfred Hamburger of Illinois, N. C. Rice of Iowa, Alfred Black of Maine, Thomas Furniss of Minnesota and Charles H. Hespe of New Jersey.

Directors to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were chosen as follows: Peter Schaefer of Illinois, Lee A. Ochs of New York, John O'Donnell of Pennsylvania, Charles H. Hespe of New Jersey, Alfred Black of Maine, Ernest H. Horstmann of Massachusetts, Louis A. DeHoff of Maryland, Eugene Clark of Mississippi, Louis Levine of New York, Jacob Laurie of Massachusetts, C. H. Goodwin of Pennsylvania, Frank D. Eager of Nebraska, and J. H. Von Herberg of Washington.

The president was given power to fill vacancies in the directors of the N. A. M. P. I. in the case of absence or inability to serve.

There is still an executive secretary to be named, but that is a prerogative of the incoming president, who has not given the matter his consideration. It is believed that W. J. Sweeney will be the appointee.

Ochs Lays Down the Gavel With a Rap.

Retiring President Ochs, at the close of the election of officers, paid a few compliments to his past administration and then took a final rap at the trade papers which have not always been in full accord with his conduct in office. He suggested to the delegates that "if any of the trade papers knock you go after them. It doesn't mean anything to you." He said that he believed in co-operative booking and though there ought to be a half dozen organizations of that sort.

President-elect Schaefer, in taking his office, made the usual line of promises suited to the occasion and the Boston convention concluded its mission, adjourning to meet in St. Louis in 1919.

Trip to Nantasket Beach.

The only stated amusement feature of the convention was a trip to Nantasket Beach and Paragon Park. The trip was arranged by the Boston exhibitors in conjunction with Acting Mayor Walter A. Collins, and consisted of a tour of Boston harbor, a thing impossible under other auspices because of the extensive Government operations there; a trolley ride from Pemberton to Nantasket and one of those incomparable New England shore dinners at Paragon Park, with an unusually fine cabaret on the side. More than a hundred exhibitors and film men participated. In the party as aide to Acting Mayor Collins was John Casey, of the Department of Licenses of Boston.

A most interesting feature of the trip was a review of Boston's fire-fighting fleet—three powerful fire engine tugs —which circled about the excursion party, spouting streams a hundred feet in the air from a score of nozzles. It was inspiring and called forth an outburst of applause from an appreciative audience.

Members of the Atlas Picture Company were present and added their bit to the entertainment.

Photographers—still and movie—were there and took "pitchers" of the crowd in front of the casino. An engraving from the "still" is printed in connection with the convention story.

CLAIRE McDOWELL TO SUPPORT MAY ALLISON.

Claire McDowell, a player before the footlights since babyhood and for a goodly number of years in film drama, has a fine character role in the cast supporting May Allison in Metro's "The Return of Mary." This newest Allison picture, George D. Baker's screen adaptation of the successful stage play of the same name, is under production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood.

Miss McDowell has a mother role. It is a coincidence that Miss Allison's production is being directed by Wilfred Lucas, who was a Biograph actor under David W. Griffith when Miss MacDowell was a member of the company.

FEIST ATTENDS CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

Felix F. Feist, sales manager for World Pictures, last week was in attendance at a conference of the company's middle western sales managers held at Chicago. At the conference plans for the late summer and fall were discussed and details developed for taking care of the great multitude of additional exhibitors who are seeking to secure World franchises.

Brady Re-elected Head of N. A. M. P. I.

Accepts for Patriotic Reasons, He Says—Secretary Elliott Is Continued in Office Too.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, whose second term of office ended with the meeting held at Boston on Friday, July 19, was then and there re-elected for the ensuing year with the unanimous consent of those members present and the several proxies in their possession. There was no discussion on this point; neither was there the least hint that any one else wanted the office which Mr. Brady some days ago declared he would not again accept, all of which would indicate that the motion picture men are pretty well satisfied with the work Mr. Brady has accomplished in one year and are willing to back him up for another term. When the secretary cast one ballot for Mr. Brady, as directed by the vote of the directors present, he said that he would accept the office "as a patriotic duty to his country and the trade."

The session of the National Association was called to order at Copley Plaza Hotel at 11:30 o'clock Friday morning. About twenty-five members were present, a number carrying proxies for others who could not be present. Reports of the secretary and the treasurer were read and accepted. A vote of commendation was accorded Secretary Elliott for the excellent manner in which he had conducted the affairs of the association.

Under reports of committees the transportation and the insurance committees asked permission to file their reports as the subjects had been covered in the secretary's report. Theodore Mitchell, secretary of the censorship committee, urged in his report the necessity of preparing for a fight against a flood of legislation that is certain to come this year when the legislatures of some thirty states convene and pointed out the necessity of securing funds for that purpose.

The resolution adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, demanding a fifty-fifty representation in the National Association, was offered and referred to the association for future action at a meeting to be called by the president at some future time.

The directors selected by the several branches of the association were declared elected upon a motion to that effect. This included the exhibitors selected by the national convention for the exhibitors' branch. Other branch directors have been previously printed in this paper.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, William A. Brady; secretary, F. H. Elliott; treasurer, J. E. Brulatour; vice-presidents, P. J. Schaefer, A. Zukor, P. A. Powers, W. L. Sherrill, Paul Cromelin, E. M. Porter and W. A. Smith.

President Brady appointed the following to be members of the executive committee: W. W. Irwin, chairman; William L. Sherrill, Samuel Goldfish, J. E. Brulatour, Richard A. Rowland, Paul Brunet, Arthur S. Friend, P. A. Powers, Paul Cromelin, P. J. Schaefer, Lee A. Ochs, Arthur Black.

A vote of thanks was given President Brady for his efforts during the past year, and the meeting was adjourned.

Farewell Banquet to "Tay Pay"

British Censor About to Sail for England Is Tendered Dinner at Boston by Picture Men

COPLEY PLAZA dining room on the evening of Thursday, July 18, was the scene of the most enjoyable and intellectual feature of the events which surrounded the gathering of motion picture men in Boston. Through the efforts of William A. Brady arrangements were made to give a farewell banquet to the Hon. T. P. O'Connor, M. P., and British censor of motion pictures. Mr. O'Connor has been in this country for several months and having concluded his mission was booked to sail from Boston on Sunday, July 21. This fact made the occasion at the Copley Plaza something in the nature of a farewell dinner. Mr. Brady was toastmaster and called the diners to their places about 8 o'clock.

Seated at the guest table were, beside Mr. Brady and the guest of Honor, acting Mayor of Boston Walter L. Collins; Chief of the License Division John M. Casey, who looks at all the pictures before they are shown in Boston; J. E. Brulatour, P. A. Powers, Arthur Friend, Frank Dilnot, correspondent of the London Chronicle; Jesse L. Lasky, Gabriel Hesse, Paul Cromelin, Charles C. Pettijohn and P. J. Schaefer.

Among the diners were a large number of exhibitors, delegates to the convention and local exchange men, also a delegation that came over from New York for the banquet, among whom were W. L. Sherry, P. A. Parsons, Lewis J. Selznick, George Blair of the Eastman Company; Will A. Smith, of the Power Company; E. M. Porter, of the Precision Machine Company; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, Joe A. Lee, W. L. Sherrill, Fred H. Elliott of the N. A. M. P. I., and Frank N. Barhydt of Troy

In introducing the speakers Mr. Brady called first upon Mr. Collins as representing the city of Boston, who spoke at some length upon the greatness of the picture industry, the beauties and hospitality of Boston and the character and greatness of the man who was the guest of the evening. He was followed by Commissioner Casey, P. A. Powers, Jesse Lasky, Arthur Friend and P. J. Schaefer.

Next came the treat of the evening, Mr. O'Connor, and it was a treat. For a solid hour or more he held his audience in the deepest interest. At the request of the toastmaster the latter half of the guest's remarks were concerning the Irish question, and while they were highly interesting, space cannot be given to them here. Of what the honored guest said about pictures and his relations to the trade as British censor the greater part of his remarks follow:

Mr. Toastmaster, Mr. Acting Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen: If I were addressing an audience entirely composed of the citizens of Boston, I would be very much inclined to indulge in one of the characteristic weaknesses of advancing years, namely, what is called anecdotage and reminiscence, for I recall that I paid my first visit to this city as far back as October 16 or 17, 1881. And at that time my chief friend in receiving me was a namesake of the acting mayor of today, Mr. P. A. Collins, who was afterward mayor of Boston, and I believe died.

As to my position as censor of the movies in Great Britain and Ireland, it came about in this way; ignorance seems to me no bar for extremely frank and self-confident criticism. At the time when the death of my predecessor, the late respected Mr. Redfern, occurred, there was blowing against the movie industry in England and Great Britain what I may call a cyclone of ignorant criticism. Some gentlemen, after they had described the horrors of the movie picture and the evil on the audiences in the movie theater, wound up their criticisms with the observation with which I think they might have begun, "I never was in a movie theater myself."

We have in every country a certain number of people who still seem to regard joy, gaiety, amusement of any kind as the deadliest of the seven deadly sins, and, as undoubtedly the movie pictures give a great deal of joy and gaiety and amusement to our public as well as yours, it necessarily fell under the ban of that particular kind of disordered and distorted mind.

Danger of Official Censorship.

It seemed possible that under the influence of this cyclone the whole industry might be put under government control. Of all kinds of control, I don't know anything that would be worse for the moving picture trade than the control of the Bureaucracy, of a Bureaucrat.

For some reason or other, the members of the trade in England came to the conclusion that if they put me in the job before the government had time to act, they would make it difficult if not impossible for the government to pursue their way towards Bureaucratic control. And I believe that was the reason I was appointed to the censorship.

Well, ladies and gentlemen, it was not altogether an easy job. When a picture comes before me for judgment, I am very often acquainted with the fact that a very large amount of money has been spent on the picture and that a decision unfavorable to the exposition of the picture may mean a considerable loss of money to the exhibitor who has bought the picture.

On the other hand, I am responsible to the public of the country, and if I allowed a picture to pass to which genuine objection could be made on the ground of its violation, either of good taste or good morals, I would be the target of very severe attack. I gave due notice to the trade that I would only accept the position on two conditions; first that my main duty should be to the public and to its protection from any form of picture that might reasonably be regarded as prejudicial in its effect. And my second was that I should be quite free to form my decision without either suggestion or control or even complaint on the part of the trade and even on the part of those whose pictures my judgment had compelled me to reject.

I am bound to tell you gentlemen that these conditions were accepted by the trade with complete assent; that over and over again I was told by the members of my committee on the Board of Censors that they would allow no appeal and attempt no appeal against any decision I made, and that whatever my decision might be, it would have behind it the full backing of all the trade. And in order to make the position quite clear, I also informed the trade that my resignation of the position was in their hands at any moment they chose to ask it.

I had, at the very start, to make some decisions adverse to pictures.

I had to request when a picture was not wholly rejected, excisions of some parts of the picture. But I have never had any complaint.

Of course, I have endeavored to perform my difficult duties with good sense, in a broad spirit of tolerance; in no puritanical narrowness. I don't think that anything should be shown in a picture that could not be shown in a Sunday School, but that after all a picture theater is not a Sunday School, and its primary duty to the public is to give the public amusement and distraction.

Long Interested in Pictures.

Now gentlemen, I think one of the reasons I was chosen for the position of censor was the keen interest I have always manifested in the cinema, long before I ever had even the thought of being connected in any form with the industry.

I saw from the very first moment that a cinema was presented to my mind, its illimitable possibilities, and, let me tell you gentlemen, that in my opinion, in spite of the gigantic development of the industry in your country and in ours within the last five years, I believe that the cinema and the use and purposes to which the cinema can be applied are only in their infancy.

I was brought up under the old system of education, the main purpose of which I sometimes think was to teach you as little as possible with as much trouble as possible [Laughter]. I was brought up in the old scheme of education under which the young boy or the young girl was compelled to learn almost every subject by a mere effort of memory, by rote, by parrot repetition.

Take for instance the way geography was taught: "What are the chief towns in Russia?" "St. Petersburg," as it would be called in those days, "Moscow, Kieff," etc. "What are the chief rivers?" "The Don, the Knieppe, the Volga," etc. And that was a mere appeal to the memory.

How differently geography could be taught today if the cinema were, as it ought to be, attached to every school of every country in the world.

"What are the chief cities of Russia?" is the question I am asked as a child, and as I am asked the question, instead of being compelled to get off these names, meaning nothing to me by rote, I see before me a cinema of Russia. I see a cinema of Petrograd; I observe its streets, its people, their customs, their habits, the buildings, the rivers. Immediately that name of Petrograd ceases to be something that I have tried to put by rote upon my memory. It becomes a living thing associated with life and the buildings and the aspect of Petrograd.

If I am asked "What are the chief rivers of Russia?" I immediately see on the cinema, according to what ought to be the modern system of education with the cinema used. I see the rolling waters of either the Knieppe, of the Volga or the Don, or the other rivers as they pursue their courses through the different regions of Russia.

Take history. When I was a boy I think I could tell you the diseases of which every king of England died. I knew that one king died of a certain thing that he ate. I knew that the brother of one king was drowned. I think I could tell you not only the surnames but the Christian names of all the wives of Henry the Eighth, and he was some husband, as you know [Laughter].

But, ladies and gentlemen, supposing that history of England had been exhibited, as it could be exhibited in historic scenes reproduced on the cinema. In place of these things being mere memory work and rote work, they would be living realities in my mind, for after all books are a knowledge of the reproduction only of the living realities of life, and unless you see the living realities before you, then your education is a matter merely of words.

"A Cinema Hall With Every School."

I therefore committed myself early to the statement, long, I think before I was censor, I committed myself to the statement that I hoped I would see the day when a cinema hall was attached to every elementary school of the country, and you may judge of my surprise and my delight when reading the events of our friend in the chair before a Congressional committee, I found he had put exactly the same idea in almost the very language I had employed, speaking three thousand miles away from where he spoke, and, of course, without any previous consultation with him.

You go to the sciences and the arts. Take medicine. How much could be learned by the young student by the cinema reproduction of the human body, both inside and out, of the surgical operation, I don't know of any subject the mastery of which could not be improved by the cinema.

Take it from another point of view, a point of view that will appeal to you especially at this moment, the cinema as a propagandist. I give you a remarkable experience of mine. In London, after a year of the war, after a couple of years of the war, some of us began to ask "What has Italy been doing in the war?" With these feelings in my mind I went to a cinema theater in Regent street in London and there I saw a series of pictures of the advance of the Italian army to Goritzia. I learned more about the war, so far as Italy was concerned, in these two hours of the cinema show than I would have learned had I read a hundred columns in newspapers or a dozen books about it. [Applause.]

Well, Mr. Toastmaster, I am glad to find that your great President with whom, as you have mentioned to the audience here tonight, I had the honor of a somewhat lengthy interview last Tuesday in Washington. I am glad to say that with the full approval of your great President, you, sir, and your colleagues in this great industry have been employed and honored as propagandists by the cinema of the gigantic work America is doing in this war.

And I am rather inclined to think, Mr. Toastmaster, if some of the films for the production of which you are responsible, could be exhibited in the cities, the towns and villages of Germany and of Austria, we would hear fewer sneers at the part which Austria and Germany professes to think our America is going to play in this war. [Applause.]

The human body is not made up of isolated atoms, it is all one united organ. You can't reach the human mind by the ear alone; you must reach it by the ear and by the eye as well. Seeing is believing, as the old saying goes, and I believe that you can never reach the human part if you try to reach it by the ear alone, as much as you can reach it if you try to do so by the combination of an appeal to the ear and to the eye, and that is the appeal that you get in the cinema on the screen. [Applause.]

To Record Historical Events.

By and by the cinema will play another part. It will play the part of the great historic monument, muniment is perhaps the word I should use. What would we not give if we could have reproduced today the scenes of America during the period of the Revolution? What would you give, Mr. Chairman, today—I won't say how much money would be made out of it, that is really not the main point—but what would any of us give to be able to see Abraham Lincoln, rugged, sad, swarthy, as he delivered that address at Gettysburg, which like the words of the Gospel, resound through the ears and the hearts of all mankind today and will resound as long as human beings and human emotions persist.

I therefore hold strongly the opinion which I have already expressed, that you are only in the infancy of the developments of the cinema and that in a generation from now it will have reached a point far beyond the wildest dreams of the most daring and enterprising men amongst you.

But all this power, like other power, involves great responsibility. If I wanted to describe the function and the life of the modern nation, I would not be satisfied with describing the cinema as the most popular of popular amusements, popular recreations, I would go much further and I would describe the cinema as to a large extent the pulpit of the people. I won't call it "the chapel of the poor," because I might get into a theological controversy if I said that. I call it "the pulpit of the poor." It is there and they get the lesson, the moral, the reproduction of life. That means that the point of view of millions of every nation for many generations to come will be largely interested by the picture of life that the cinema presents to you.

The cinema is popular with men, but I think my more expert friends around me would agree with me in the statement that it is even more popular with women and with children. If the children of the world were asked to describe who was the best known and favorite man of the world today, I don't think they would say President Wilson or Mr. Lloyd George, I think they would be inclined to say that Charlie Chaplin held that place. [Laughter.] What is the fame of Joan d'Arc, or of Queen Mary, or of all the prominent ladies of the world today compared with that of Mary Pickford?

Now, as your audiences consist of many millions of people, and largely women and children, and as the picture has more power of suggestion on the human soul than anything else, you have a great responsibility toward the people and above all to the women and children of the nation. And, as the cinema industry is healthy and moral and sound in the lesson it presents to a nation, so, largely will the moral fibre and opinion of the nation be sound and healthy and pure.

Now, one of the things I would like to say here tonight is this, that I hope in the cinema as in all our industries, there will be closer co-operation, better understanding, more combined effort between the industry in your country and in my own than there has ever been before.

Great Britain Dependent Upon Us.

And I must avow, Mr. Toastmaster, that our industry in England is largely, if not almost entirely dependent upon your very existence. I should say at least 90 per cent. of the films that are produced in our British theaters have been designed and manufactured in this country. I have heard lately that there is a dread in England of some severe restriction on the importation into England on English ships of American reels. All I can say is this: If that restriction is carried to a certain point they might as well sound the death knell of England, because we can't do without your film.

And I had the honor of presenting the case on that point, or of listening to the presentation of that case to Lord Reading, the British Ambassador in Washington, the other day. I will renew, if necessary these representations when I get home to the authorities in England, and I hope an understanding will be arrived at by which a wrong will not be done to your industry, and even a greater wrong done to our industry. [Applause.]

Still, gentlemen, you must realize that each country has its own special habits and conditions. There are things permitted in America that we would not permit in England. There are equally things in England that would not be permitted in America. Each nation has its own point of view and therefore you can't always conclude with safety that because a cinema is suited for an American audience it is suited altogether for an English audience, or that the cinema suitable for an English audience must necessarily be suitable for an American audience.

I was startled in talking to a gentleman high in the trade by the statement that only 25 per cent. of the films that he sent over to England were accepted. Well, now, it seems to me a great waste of money, a great waste of labor and a great waste of time that any of you producers of films should send over 100 films to England if you expected only 25 of them would be accepted. It would be far better I think to put the cinema through a certain stiffening process here in America.

I personally am most anxious to fulfill my functions in such a way that while I protect the public on the one hand, at the same time I shall act in a broad spirit towards the industry; not raising carping criticism; not making myself a judge of what appeals to the sense of humor in people. What amuses the people is good enough for me. I am not a judge of their tastes as long as the picture is within the bounds of decorum. But I am anxious to do the best I can for the trade.

Rand Takes General Film Post

Well-Known Film Salesman Will Be Division Manager of Pacific Coast Territory.

ONE of the most important changes announced in some time by the General Film Company to consolidate its sales organization is the appointment of W. S. Rand of Denver as division sales manager of the Pacific Coast territory, including Denver. The creation of this office becomes effective at once. Mr. Rand is expected to apply his time to the co-ordination of the various General Film exchanges in his territory for a more intensive sales campaign on General Film product, including the large amount of new features recently taken over.

Division Manager Rand is one of the best known film salesmen in the West, having opened up the coast offices for Mutual in 1912. He was later appointed division manager of the coast territory, including the Denver office, but later went to Triangle as manager of the Rocky Mountain territory. He had been manager of the Goldwyn Denver exchange for a year prior to his acceptance of the position with General Film.

Boston Ball Not the Regular Hub Affair

The Hundred Stars Announced Fall to Less Than a Dozen—The Bradys and Navy Men Help Save Situation.

By Robert N. Howe.

THE national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of America closed with a big ball in the Arena in Boston. Like the other features of the Boston convention it was about a "fifty-fifty" affair. The public announcements of one hundred stars of the photo-play world dwindled to less than a dozen real stars of filmland. The crowd was about half what had been the rule at previous big motion picture balls in Boston.

The war, the apathy of big producing companies to send their stars and the lateness of the league in arranging the event all contributed toward making the affair a mediocre one in film history. It was a fitting ending of a national convention and exposition which was conceived in the spirit of "the greatest ever" and gradually dropped to a place in the bottom rung of the ladder. Whatever satisfaction the Boston Boosters got out of the national convention of the motion picture industry in the Hub city could be measured in a hazel nut. A few such "fizzles" staged in Boston would soon lose the city the credit it has always had of being one of the world's greatest convention cities. It remained for the motion picture industry to stage its least attractive show in Boston. "But it's on account of the war," said some some of the apologists, and of course this apology goes a long way nowadays.

Those who attended the ball, except some of the public who paid $1 expecting to see some real "stars" and spend several hours hunting for them without success, enjoyed the affair immensely. It was a good entertainment, but not of the dollar standard. It has not been customary for the motion picture industry to "bunk" the public. It has been the standard of the motion picture industry to "deliver the goods." Advertising one hundred "big stars" and delivering a dozen is not a fair bargain. When the motion picture industry attempts to pay its bills from the public by "bunk" it will very likely get "bunk" in return.

The management of the ball did its best to provide a good show without "stars." In this they were successful. The doors were opened at 7 o'clock and whereas on previous motion picture balls in Boston there have been at least a thousand on hand to rush for seats there were less than fifty persons in the lobby at 7 o'clock to enter the hall.

The crowd was very slow in coming, and it was 9 o'clock before a real crowd began to be manifest at all in the big arena. At this time there may have been two thousand people in the hall.

Cornell's band played a concert program and there was considerable attention paid to the special section where army and navy officers and their wives and women friends were seated. More than one hundred army and navy officers were in attendance.

Navy Men Start Things Moving.

The first signs of real life came after 9 o'clock when headed by a band two hundred jackies of the battleship Georgia entered the hall. The jackies did some slight maneuvers under the command of Ensign Edward Schilling and the band played for half an hour and various prodigies of the sailor world were introduced and sang new songs that were in need of free advertising. Some of the songs went over well. Up to 9.30 o'clock there was more of an army and naval atmosphere to the affair than there was of the motion picture industry.

All around the arena floor are boxes, and these bore placards of the various film companies. For instance there was a large space reserved by Pathe, the Famous Players-Lasky, Vitagraph, Select, Foursquare, Goldwyn, Metro and the other large concerns. From 7 o'clock on these boxes began to fill up and the three thousand spectators who had come to see "stars" craned their necks as some specially well dressed and pretty young woman entered a box. But they sighted no familiar face, and it was gradually whispered about that they were the wives, daughters, etc., of company officials and local managers.

The first signs of real motion picture activity came, as usual, with the arrival of William A. Brady, president of the National association, and his daughter, Miss Alice Brady. It is a noticeable thing that when Mr. Brady gives his word to the public or to the industry he "makes good." But for his presence and that of his wonderful daughter the ball would have descended into a pitiable affair.

There was loud applause as Miss Brady made her way along the aisle in company with her father to a box. Miss Brady wore a handsome gown of flimsy material and carried a huge corsage bouquet. She was immediately importuned by Ernest H. Horstmann to sing and she very graciously accepted the invitation. At this time a sailor was doing a Scottish hornpipe dance on a stage. The sailors were doing yeoman's work in rescuing the ball.

Mr. Horstmann introduced President Brady as "the big man of the motion picture industry." Mr. Brady mounted the stage with a sign of "pep" that put new life in the show. He said in part:

Brady Once More Says the Right Thing.

"When I came to Boston I was asked by your committee to have my daughter sing. I felt this was the Brady's family fair contribution. But when they asked me to get up here and announce my own daughter I felt the committee had some gall.

"But my little daughter is going to sing one of the grandest hymns of one of the greatest nations of the earth outside the United States. She is going to sing the national hymn of France. (Loud applause.)

"France is one of the greatest of our allies. She has fought for the cause of democracy in a way to win our greatest admiration and respect. The news that comes to us today from the battlefront makes us thrill with pride for the Stars and Stripes. Tonight the Stars and Stripes are waving over France. I hope soon that our boys will be marching up Tremont street in your city to the tune of the song my daughter will now sing for you." (Loud applause.)

Miss Brady from a position in the balcony beside the band sang "The Marseillaise" in a rich, powerful voice that carried to every part of the great arena. She received tremendous applause.

Miss Brady returned to her box, where she held a short reception and left soon afterward with her father to visit some of the Boston theaters.

Just after this there was considerable commotion upon the arrival of Miss Agnes Ayres, the Vitagraph star, accompanied by Miss Betty Blythe and Edward Earle. They made their way to the Vitagraph box. Here they immediately started something.

Edward Farrell, formerly of Metro, Pathe and Select, introduced Acting Mayor Collins of Boston.

Players Get Hearty Receptions.

The jackies had discovered Shirley Mason with her partner, Ernest Truex, in the Famous Players-Lasky box. A bugler led the way and the jackies escorted the couple to the stage. Violet Mesereau and Peggy Hopkins also got a fine reception.

Stanley Sumner raised his voice and the crowd immediately listened. He had to offer to the "fans" one of Boston's favorite daughters in the photoplay business, June Caprice. There was a rush to the Caprice box.

Corrine Griffith, Harry Morey and Bert Lytell were introduced to the crowd and received flattering receptions.

The word was passed around that Doris Kenyon was present and a crowd flocked to the box of the William L. Sherry service. The management finally succeeded in getting her to the stage, where she acted a sketch, "Know It All." It was a very clever piece of acting. Miss Kenyon had reached Boston in time to get to the Park theater and be introduced to a large audience by Manager Thomas D. Soriero. Alice Brady also visited the Park theater.

Miss Mabel Whithree and Jack Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Company received a fine reception during the evening. Miss Whithree has been playing with Al Jolson in the Winter Garden show "Sinbad." Later in the evening she sang with excellent voice "There's a Lump of Sugar Down in Dixie."

The Perfection picture players Margie Carr and Helen Devine were given a reception. In the Atlas Company box was Miss Harret Wilcox, a pretty Boston dancer and film actress, and several of the Atlas "kiddies" who are to take part in the Atlas productions. The dancing continued until after 2 a. m.

FUEL ADMINISTRATION HITS EXHIBITORS.

Under an order of the United States Fuel Administration, exhibitors in New England, the District of Columbia and the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland will be prohibited from illuminating the exteriors of their theaters or using advertisements, or signs illuminated by the use of electricity, coal, gas, oil or other fuel the first four business days of each week. These same restrictions apply in all other sections of the United States on Monday and Tuesday of each week. The prohibition against the use of illuminating agencies goes into effect July 24, but it excepts bona fide roof gardens and outdoor restaurants and airdomes.

Advertising Men's Convention a Success

Gathering in San Francisco, Largest in History of Organization, Hears Much of Screen Exploitation

By T. A. Church.

THE fourteenth annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was held at San Francisco July 7 to 11 and was a tremendous success, being the greatest gathering in the history of the organization. Service to the Government in war time was its underlying theme, and from the commencement of the great inspirational meeting in the Greek theater, where twelve thousand persons gathered to pay their respects to Charles M. Schwab, director of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, until the last picture faded from the screen in the theater fitted up in the city hall every gathering was turned into a patriotic demonstration. Moving pictures played by far a greater part on the program of this convention than ever before, illustrating their steady advance as a medium of spreading information to which wide publicity might be desired, as well as the invasion of new fields in commercial advertising.

One of the features of the first business session, held on the morning of July 8, was an address by C. R. Macauley, the famous cartoonist of New York, on "How the Film Play Educates the Public Mind to War Necessities." He prefaced his talk on moving pictures with a scathing arraignment of the Hun. The value of moving pictures was almost too apparent, he said, to be dwelt upon at length, every one having had an opportunity during the past year to witness their subtle influence in molding public opinion. Great as their influence had been, however, he suggested that there were still greater possibilities, and asked that advertising men work to give them a still larger space in the work of recording war activities. He stated that films were being exhibited in Russia, showing the work of this country in the fight against autocracy, and that the results secured were very pleasing

Mr. Macauley has been interested in moving pictures for years, and early in 1914 induced Andrew Carnegie to set aside $250,000 to produce a play hinting at a world-wide war. Work was under way on this when war actually broke out. He has produced a long film, "Humanity," which has the approval of the Government as war propaganda.

Screen Advertisers' Association Meets.

On Monday afternoon the Screen Advertisers' Association held a departmental meeting in the rooms of the volunteer fire department in the Exposition Auditorium. Chairman Harry Levey, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was not present, and a telegram was received later, stating that business in Washington prevented his making the trip to the Pacific Coast as planned. There was a fair gathering of advertising enthusiasts from the West, including some from Texas, Montana, Hawaii, with a number from California, and an interesting informal session was held, with Tiery L. Ford, until recently with the Animated Cartoon Film Corporation of this city and second vice-president of the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World, filling the position of chairman.

On Tuesday afternoon Chairman Ford called the meeting to order at 2 o'clock and delivered an illuminating address on moving picture advertising. He declared that he could not definitely define advertising, that the authorities he consulted gave confusing answers, but that whatever it may be it is a powerful force and one that lends itself peculiarly to the screen. He liked best to describe it as applied psychology, or mental appeal, involving a knowledge of mental processes and the art of directing their operation. He traced the history of advertising down to the present time, and declared that the first newspaper publishers had the same difficulty in interesting men to advertise their wares that screen advertisers have had.

Beall Tells of Screen's Accomplishments.

Ham Beall, publicity expert from the Universal studio at Universal City, delivered the message that was to have been brought to the convention by Harry Levey. He outlined in detail the work that had been done during the past year to promote Red Cross drives, Liberty Bond sales and many other campaigns for funds through the medium of the screen, declaring that this had been supplemented in a manner possible in no other medium—that of showing in actual scenes the use to which the money subscribed was being put.

Attention was directed to the value of the screen in encouraging enlistments and in showing the folks at home how carefully their boys are being cared for. He told of the great work of the moving picture stars in selling Liberty Loan bonds and in collecting funds, of the large amounts received by the Government in taxes on films and admissions, and of the wide use being made by news weeklies of matters connected with war activities.

B. O. Youngman, of the Kale-Alta Slide Company of San Francisco, spoke on "Slides and the War," and told of the thousands of slides that were made on short order and furnished at cost to advertise the many drives for funds made by the Government.

James P. Simpson of Dallas delivered a splendid address on "The Fifth Estate," as he chose to call advertising films. He outlined the manner in which screen advertising had been developed in Texas, stating that his company operated a regular service in Fort Worth, Waco and Dallas and handled country business out of the latter city. In Dallas fourteen theaters are being served, and in each his concern has an exclusive contract, for which it pays from $50 to $300 a month. Screen advertising there has come to be regarded as an established institution, the same as newspapers and billboards, and advertisers include it in their regular appropriations. No theaters in Dallas refrain from using this form of advertising, and it is kept interesting by weekly changes. In the country districts changes are made less frequently, but nothing is shown for more than two weeks at any theater.

Mr. Simpson was originally in the theater program business and later tried curtain publicity work, finally taking up the screen end of the business, which he finds to be the most profitable of all for clients. He considers the screen to be supreme in the advertising field for results, as it reaches the most people, a class of people who spend their money, and reaches them while they are in a receptive mood. He declared that moving pictures had already done great things, but that still greater things were in store for them, particularly in commercial lines. The doors of commerce with the world would soon be open, he said, and he felt that members of the Associated Advertising Clubs would be sure to make great use of them in promoting the business of the nation.

The meeting adjourned without an election of officers with the understanding that the present ones would serve during the ensuing year. These consist of Joe Brandt, New York, president; R. R. Hollister, Dayton, Ohio, first vice-president; Tirey L. Ford, San Francisco, second vice-president; W. A. Harris, secretary, and W. F. Herzberg, treasurer.

Throughout the convention moving pictures of an advertising nature were shown in the city hall in one of the finest rooms ever given over to an exhibition of this kind. Through the courtesy of Mayor James Rolph, Jr., the use of the supervisors' chambers was secured, and a moving picture machine and booth was installed here by H. B. Parson and Peter Boyle, of Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 162.

The arrangements for the display of advertising film were made by a committee of members of the screen department of the San Francisco Advertising Club, headed by W. D. Tam, of the Tam Film Company.

BEVERLY GRIFFITH JOINS OUT.

Beverly Griffith, personal representative of Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of the Universal, who has been in the Northwest for a coupe of months helping the sales forces out of Portland and Seattle offices on the handling of short-reel subjects, has hopped out of films into the war game. He has enlisted in the aviation section of the signal corps.

Griffith was busy putting the move in movies in the sales end for about six months before he went to Uncle Sam. Before that he was in Universal City for five years.

Zukor Committee Announces Plan for Loan Drive

Motion Picture Producers Asked to Feature Stars in Short Subject for Use in Campaign—Quick Action Urged

FOLLOWING his recent trip to Washington, where he went to confer with Frank Wilson, director of publicity for the fourth Liberty Loan, and the various district governors and directors, Adolph Zukor, chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, called his committee together Monday afternoon, July 22, aat the office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Those present besides Mr. Zukor were J. E. Broulatour, Marcus Loew and W. W. Irwin.

After briefly emphasizing the importance of the part which motion pictures are expected to play in the national publicity campaign for the Liberty Loan, which will be launched on or about September 28, Mr. Zukor laid before the committee the plan suggested at the Washington conference. In this connection he read the following letter he had just received from the Treasury Department:

Treasury Department.
Washington, July 19, 1918.

Mr. Adolph Zukor, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Zukor—Please accept the thanks of the Treasury Department for coming to our meeting of publicity directors and sales managers and outlining the nature of the co-operation to be expected from the motion picture industry in the coming campaign.

All of our men expressed great enthusiasm over the motion picture campaign which we have outlined, and I sincerely hope that we will be able to fulfill all expectations.

Your appearance here made a decided impression upon the men, and I am sure it has contributed materially to the continuance of the friendly relations which we have always enjoyed.

Again thanking you, I am

Sincerely yours,

FRANK R. WILSON,
Director of Publicity.

The plan of the Treasury Department briefly is as follows: The services of various stars will be enlisted, each to make a picture of about 300 feet in length. The negatives are to be delivered to the Government on or about September 1, at the very latest. The general plan of these pictures will follow the "Swat the Kaiser" film which was produced by Douglas Fairbanks for the Third Liberty Loan campaign and which was universally commended.

Prints to the number of between three and four thousand will be made from these negatives and distributed to the various Federal Reserve Districts, and all prints will bear an announcement something as follows: "The U. S. Treasury Department, in co-operation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, presents the following plea for Liberty Bonds."

In accordance with these suggestions the committee unanimously decided to solicit the active co-operation of the following companies, in addition to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Vitagraph, which were represented at the meeting: Goldwyn, Metro, Universal, World, Fox, Select, Pathe, General Film, Mutual and Triangle. This list, it should be understood, is not final, to the exclusion of any other firms which may desire to lend their assistance, but is intended as a nucleus, for without the co-operation of a large majority of the companies mentioned, complete success of the plan cannot be assured.

Stars to Appear in Liberty Loan Specials.

Similarly, the committee indorsed a list of stars to appear in the proposed pictures, which was drawn up by the Treasury officials and to which it is more than likely that several names will be added.

The following names were suggested: Ethel Barrymore, George Beban, Enid Bennett, Alice Brady, Mrs. Irene Castle, Charlie Chaplin, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Lillian Gish, William S. Hart, Sessue Hayakawa, Alice Joyce, Frank Keenan, Enrico Caruso, Madge Kennedy, Harold Lockwood, Mae Marsh, Mary Miles Minter, Mae Murray, Mme, Nazimova, Mabel Normand, Olga Petrova, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Wallace Reid, Emily Stevens, Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Pearl White, Clara Kimball Young, Billie Burke, George M. Cohan, David Warfield, Fred Stone, William Duncan, Earle Williams.

After the meeting Chairman Zukor made the following statement: "The members of the committee have made a good start on what quite obviously is a gigantic task, when the short space of time between now and September 1 is taken into consideration. The producing firms, especially those whom the committee decided to ask to assist, should put their machinery in motion immediately, for there is not a moment to be lost. The plan as outlined at the committee meeting held today embraces only the main feature of the work which the industry will be called upon to do in the big campaign of putting over the Liberty Loan. Once this plan is shaped up and started on the way to realization, the committee will be prepared to go into other details, such as the mobilization of one, two and five-reel features already made which would be appropriate.

"This all means a tremendous amount of work for everybody, from executives down to the humblest studio hand. Without hearty co-operation on the part of everybody we can accomplish nothing, but I am confident that the industry to a man is going to embrace this opportunity to show its patriotism to prove beyond all question its worth to the Government as well as to the people of the United States."

Clearing House Aims to Aid Managers

Colonel Ruppert Says He Expects to Reduce Shipping Costs by Cutting Out Wastage.

THAT the Film Clearing House, Inc., is not out just to serve exchanges and producers is indicated in the second statement for publication by President Jacob Ruppert at the concern's offices, 18 East Forty-first street, New York.

"We shall help the exhibitor in many ways," says Colonel Ruppert, "not the least of them being through an eventual reduction in shipping costs. One shipment a day or twice a week or once a week, according to the exhibitor schedule of changes, replaces paying for many shipments and the time and labor involved in handling them. When you cut out wastage and the duplication of effort you are earning profits that quickly become self-evident. This holds true, too, of the shipping work on the side of the shipper.

"Exchange systems are compelled to ask high rates today, for they really must maintain expensive organizations and premises in every American shipping center, whereas one huge shipping depot, catering to all, could easily do the work. We proposed the Film Clearing House to take over all present-day distribution effort but that of sales promotion.

"The delivery to exhibitors of service aids is today a secondary matter at most branch offices, the answer being that film shipment comes first. Still service aids, from huge posters down to tiny pasters, are considered very vital by the exhibitor, and the slightest delay in delivery gives him great concern. An organization on the lines of the Clearing House would guarantee the arrival on time of the most obscure thumbnail cut just as it would the film feature itself.

"The sort of distributing service that a concern like ours can create and maintain would be quite beyond the power of any single exchange system. That indicates emphatically that we can improve exchange efficiency while reducing exchange operating costs. But as great a gainer as the exchange is the theater man who would cross transit troubles from his list."

CHARLIE SIMONE A GENERAL FILM MANAGER.

General Film Company announces this week the appointment of Charles Simone, of Bayonne, as manager of its New Haven branch to succeed Irving C. Jaycocks, who enlisted in the Navy recently. Mr. Simone was formerly production or studio manager for the Nestor, Centaur, Venus Features, Universal and other film companies, and has had considerable experience in executive capacities in the film business in New York City and neighborhood.

Export Figures Show Cut in Business

While the Outgo Is Only One-Half of Former Amount the Price Paid Is But One-Third Less.

WITH motion picture films just place on the export conservation list by the War Trade Board, the figures of our export trade in motion picture films for the eleven months ending with May of this year as compared with the same length of time ending with May of 1916 and 1917 are of particular interest to the trade. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, has just compiled statistics giving this information.

Our exportations of exposed films during the eleven months ending with May, 1918, are approximately one-half as great as for the same period ending with May, 1916, although the cost is but one-third less. An analysis of our film business with the world (exposed films not including raw stock) shows as follows:

During the eleven months period ending with May, 1916, we sent out of the United States 152,518,020 feet, valued at $6,428,489. The United Kingdom was our best customer and took 100,629,795 feet, valued at $4,058,153. Next came France with 14,490,886 feet, valued at $377,093. Italy bought 6,403,896 feet valued at $167,996; Canada 10,036,425 feet, valued at $764,235; Newfoundland and Labrador took 1,752,050, valued at $111,139, and Australia bought 6,452,375 feet, valued at $454,290. The rest of the world combined purchased from us 12,743,593 feet, valued at $495,583.

During the eleven months ending with May, 1917, there is a different story to tell. England decreased her purchases to nearly one-fourth of what they were during the preceding period, although the value was half as much as for the total of that period. England bought 29,247,292 feet, valued at $2,113,380. To France we exported 8,495,326 feet valued at $339,254. Italy bought more heavily, and we sent to that country 15,855,240 feet valued at $412,917. The 13,077,390 feet we sent Canada were valued at $989,851. The purchases of Newfoundland and Labrador in footage were heavier, but the cost was less—1,765,270 feet valued at $80,500. Australia too 9,257,592 feet, paying $642,256, while to the rest of the world we sold 40,841,299 feet valued at $1,561,943.

During the eleven months ending with May, 1918, the purchases of France dropped off to almost nothing, for we sent "over there" for display in the French theaters only 1,931,934 feet, valued at $232,702. Italy took only 2,270,271 feet, paying $61,838. England's needs totaled only 18,241,419 feet, valued at $1,411,798. Our sales to Canada showed a slight increase, totaling 14,301,484 feet, worth $1,060,851, but Newfoundland and Labrador dropped off to half the total of the preceding period, taking 842,418 feet, for which they paid $20,057. Australia took 3,589,605 feet, valued at $279,463, and all the other countries combined bought 38,384,038 feet, valued at $1,834,785.

Importations Decline a Million Feet.

During the month of May, 1918, American importations of unexposed motion picture film fell off a million feet and in value nearly $10,000 as compared with the same month of 1917; negatives went up in footage but down in value, and the importations of positives shows a woeful decrease. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has just compiled film statistics for May, showing a comparison with the importations of May, 1917, and also for the eleven months ending with May of 1916, 1917, and 1918.

Under the heading of "Motion picture films, sensitized but not exposed" the Bureau states that in May, 1917, our importations amounted to 4,817,942 feet, valued at $72,756; during May of this year there was a decrease to 3,788,892 feet, value at $62,861. During the eleven months periods there is a drop in footage with an increase in value, for while the importations for the eleven months ending with May, 1916, were 56,636,607 feet, valued at $721,830, during the eleven months ending with May, 1917, they were only 45,190,952 feet, valued at $696,774. For the eleven months ending with May of this year 47,431,295 feet carried a valuation of $738,101.

During May, 1918, negatives to the extent of 35,475 feet, valued at $4,443, were imported into the United States, as against 29,978 feet, valued at $6,542, brought in during May, 1917. The figures for the eleven months ending with May, are: 1916, 688,240 feet, valued at $193,854; 1917, 865,746 feet, valued at $440,741; 1918, 670,566 feet, valued at $162,019.

In positives our importations for May, 1917, totaled 359,450 feet, valued at $64,257; for May of this year, 160,044 feet, valued at $15,075. For the eleven months periods the figures are: 1916, 6,165,862 feet, valued at $214,669; 1917, 3,471,006 feet valued at $210,985; and, 1918, 3,034,446 feet valued at $157,258.

Blackton Begins Work on "Common Cause"

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer Will Play Star Roles in Forthcoming Propaganda Feature.

J. STUART BLACKTON announces that Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer will be stars in his production of "The Common Cause" instead of the trio of players referred to last week.

"The Common Cause" is the title of the film version of "Getting Together," the war play which Mr. Blackton has been commissioned to produce under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission. Engaged to appear with the featured players are Huntley Gordon, Mlle. Marcelle, wife of Lieutenant Earl Carroll; Lawrence Grossmith and Louis Dean.

Two other featured members of the cast will be Violet and Charles Stuart Blackton, the producer's small children.

Mr. Blackton has established the local offices of Blackton Productions, Inc., at 25 West Forty-fifth street. He has arranged his producing schedule to take a number of exteriors first, and for this work will use a part of the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. Some of the interior sets are also being constructed in the Vitagraph studios, though most of the interiors will be made in his own studios, also in Brooklyn.

While in California filming his series of Paramount productions, Mr. Blackton rented the Blackton Productions, Inc., studios to William Fox. The Fox tenancy of the plant expires next month and Mr. Blackton will then take possession again.

Jewel Carmen Signs With Keeney

William Fox Serves Notice That the Young Woman Will Not Leave His Company Without a Battle.

THE announcement that Jewel Carmen, the young and popular William Fox star, has signed a contract to appear for a long-term period under the management of Frank A. Keeney is likely to be followed by further announcement of a battle in the courts. Letters have been received by Mr. Keeney from Mr. Fox, stating that the latter will not give Miss Carmen up without a legal fight.

For some time it has been rumored that Miss Carmen was going to join the Keeney forces. Some time ago an agreement was entered into whereby she was to appear under the Keeney auspices. Mr. Fox put his foot down, declaring that she was bound to him under a written contract. On Saturday, July 13, she celebrated her twenty-first birthday anniversary. News of the event quickly reached Mr. Keeney, who immediately got in touch with her and arranged for a meeting on the following Tuesday. The contract was signed on that day.

He says he is legally entitled to Miss Carmen's services on the ground that a contract signed by her after maturity is absolutely binding as against any contract she may have signed when under age, without the consent, oral or otherwise, of either her father or mother.

Vitagraph Settles Anita Stewart Case

Louis B. Mayer Pays Substantial Sum and Secures Star's Immediate Services.

FOLLOWING a series of conferences between attorneys representing the Vitagraph Company of America and Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, it is announced that an amicable arrangement had been made whereby Vitagraph agreed to a settlement of the damage suit of $250,000, which has been pending against Mr. Mayer and his associates in the courts of Boston by the payment to Vitagraph of a substantial sum. It was also announced by Vitagraph that, owing to the time lost through the automobile accident in which Anita Stewart figured, it had been determined that the period of her services left to them was too limited to carry out its production plans, and that it had agreed, as part of the settlement, to let Mr. Mayer have her now instead of on September 3, when she would go to him under a contract signed last year, and which was to take effect when Miss Stewart's term expired on that date with Vitagraph.

Mr. Mayer said that in consideration of the settlement of the Boston litigation and in consideration of Vitagraph's fairness in letting him have Miss Stewart's services he had agreed to the payment of a substantial sum of money to the company. Thus ends a legal controversy which has continued for almost a year, with friendly relations now existing between all parties to it.

It was last September that the Vitagraph company brought suit against Miss Stewart to restrain her from leaving them and breaking her contract, naming Mr. Mayer and others as co-defendants with her. It developed that Miss Stewart had signed a contract to work for Mr. Mayer, her services for him to start when she was through with Vitagraph.

The Mayer contract was not an issue in the suit, the Vitagraph contention being based solely on Miss Stewart's attempt to break her contract with it, and Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, announced at the time that he was suing not only to protect his company's interests, but also to make a test which should establish a precedent in the matter of a star's contractual obligations to the producer.

Justice Mullen, of the New York Supreme Court, granted Vitagraph a temporary restraining order against Miss Stewart, and subsequently Justice Mullen's decision was confirmed on appeal by the Appellate Division, the injunction continuing indefinitely. The case was brought to trial before Justice Daniel F. Cohalan on January 22 and the hearings lasted three days. He rendered his decision the first week in April, ordering Miss Stewart to finish up her time with Vitagraph before attempting to work for anyone else, and fixed a period of twenty-six weeks as the amount of time she owed the company under a contract by which she was guaranteed $127,000 per year by Vitagraph. This meant that she must work for Vitagraph until about September 3, and she at once began work at the Brooklyn studio under direction of Wilfrid North.

Miss Stewart had only been at work a short time when she and her director, with the other members of her company, were caught in a serious automobile accident in Brooklyn, Miss Stewart being so badly hurt she was laid up for more than a week. Her director, Wilfrid North, however, was incapacitated for more than a month and when he returned to work was using crutches. This loss of time interfered seriously with the plans that had been made for Miss Stewart's activities in completing her contract.

Shift in Utica Sunday Situation

Owing to Unexpected Opposition Theaters Fail to Open on Sunday, July 14.

A STATEMENT was made in the Moving Picture World of the issue of July 20 that the Utica picture theaters were to be allowed to open. This was the case at that time and nearly every exhibitor had booked a picture for Sunday, July 14, the first Sunday to open, when something occurred, of what nature cannot be learned, and the managers of the Utica houses were obliged to forego their decision to open and wait for another week. Whether or not they will open on the 21st remains to be seen. The people of Utica have not offered any serious objection to the proposed opening as far as sending letters to the Utica papers to be published. Theodore L. Cross, an attorney of this city, just when everything appeared to be agreeable for the opening, sent a letter to one of the papers, which publishd it. In his letter Mr. Cross quoted the words of Edgar C. Emerson, Justice of the Supreme Court, who stated that Sunday pictures are illegal. His letter created quite a sentiment against the proposed opening among the class of persons who never attend the pictures, and it was no doubt due to his letter that the opening of the houses was deferred.

As far as the people of Utica are concerned, it is the majority that want Sunday pictures, while those who are opposing it never visit a picture house, but are known to have been regular patrons of big expensive road shows which formerly played Utica. In many instances there is quite an ill-feeling against the opposers of shows on Sunday.

Canada's Reel Tax Hits Small Towns

Exhibitors in Less Populous Communities Complain They Cannot Retrench to Take Up Added Outgo.

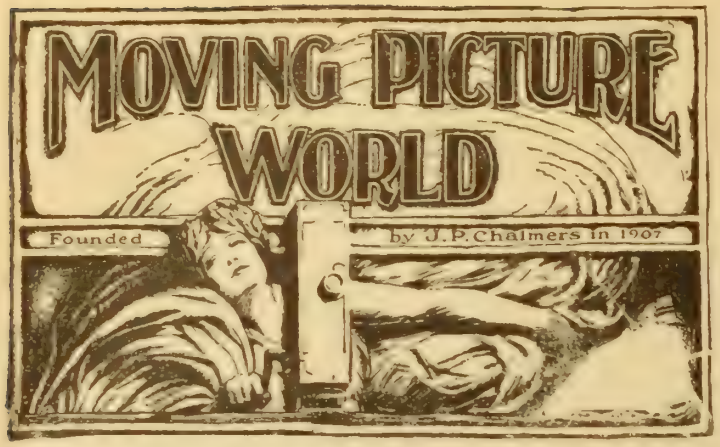
MANY small-town exhibitors in various parts of Canada are complaining that the fifteen-cent daily reel tax imposed by the Canadian government places a severe burden on their activities. Generally they are of the belief that the weight of the tax falls more heavily upon them than upon the exhibitors in the large centers. In nearly every instance it is declared that city exhibitors can curtail various items of expense to compensate for the daily reel tax, where the country exhibitor cannot eliminate any expense details.

It is a fact that a number of exhibitors in small towns of Ontario have closed up shop since the enforcement of the reel tax order, while very few exhibitors in Ontario cities have found it necessary to close down even for the summer months. Exchange managers of Toronto admit that the small-town exhibitor is feeling the effect of the reel tax.

One small-town exhibitor who has registered a complaint is John Kay, proprietor of the Grand theater, Ridgetown, Ontario. Mr. Kay criticises the Ontario Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association for inactivity at Ottawa, the Canadian capital, when the government was framing the regulations for the reel tax. He points out that the Toronto Exchange Managers' Association soon had a delegation on the ground to protect its interests. He declares that he does not really want to criticise the exhibitors' association for its passive resistance, but the organization missed a big opportunity, he believes, to make a name for itself.

A. J. Mason, a well-known small-town exhibitor of the Maritime Provinces, has also complained about the reel tax. Mr. Mason operates the Princess theater at Moncton, the Empire theater at Hantsport and the Opera House at Wolfville, N. S.

That the fifteen-cent reel tax is working a grave injustice on the small-town exhibitor is also the opinion of A. A. Cooper, proprietor of the Lyceum theater, Huntsville, Ontario, who has also made a plea for a grading of the tax according to population.



St. Louis Film Board Hears First Case

It All Happened Over a C. O. D. Parcel Post Shipment, But Everybody's Happy Now.

THE St. Louis Film Board of Trade has won its first case, and the exhibitor in question seems to be as well satisfied as do the exchange managers. The reason for the all-around pacification is that there is a settlement, once and for all, so far as the purchase or booking of films in this territory is concerned, of a troublesome problem that has been recurring with unusual frequency.

The case in question was of a southeast Missouri exhibitor, who was sent a film for showing and who, after showing it, returned it to St. Louis C. O. D. The C. O. D. under ordinary circumstances could have been charged and the bill sent or redirected to the exhibitor and the controversy that might have ensued might probably have been settled in court; but in this case the C O. D. was of the parcel post variety, and the exchange manager was unable to get his film without the payment of the C. O. D. The exhibitor, under his agreement, should, of course, have paid for the express charges. As the case happened the exchange manager had no immediate booking for the film in question and left it at the post office. He then complained to the Film Board of Trade, organized but three weeks, and the exhibitor was summoned.

The board met and the exhibitor appeared. He presented his case as one would in court and the exchange manager presented his. The executive committee decided the exhibitor was in the wrong, and he agreed to abide by the decision. He paid the C. O. D., releasing the film. The amicable agreement and the fairness of the trial has occasioned considerable comment in St. Louis.

Facts and Comments

WE have a new slogan: "One Hundred Per Cent. Organization." This is the new "keynote" developed at the Boston convention. It did not come, much as we regret to say it, out of the deliberations of the organization, but was brought in by William A. Brady in his address to the delegates on Wednesday evening and was the one idea which seemed to arouse them. The point now is to put it over and that consummation will depend largely upon the attitude of the newly elected president, Peter J. Schaefer, who is a new factor and an unknown quantity. If Mr. Schaefer will take his new honors seriously and will realize that it is up to him to develop the possibilities of organization among the exhibitors of the country; if he will map out a program of upbuilding and prove to the craft that he will be president in fact as well as in name; success should attend him.

There will be plenty of reasons why a "hundred per cent." organization should be constructed now. The various war activities which touch closely and, in fact, depend materially upon the work which can be done better through co-operation with picture theatres, should give the strongest possible reason for a closer affiliation of exhibitors. Power to bring about this affiliation is within the grasp of a man like President Schaefer. He is connected with one of the oldest and most successful firms of exhibitors—Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago—and he has both time and means to devote to an intensive campaign of organization. Being new in the political angle of the game, he should be able to gain the confidence of the exhibitors of every faction. To do this he must take the affairs of the League in his own hands, map out a new and equitable policy along lines of construction and for the benefit of the exhibitor body as a whole.

This is not the time to sit facing backward. Rather, all of us should be up and doing with our faces set toward but one goal. Consequently, we shall refrain from post mortems on the convention—that event carries its own commentary. The all important thing to do is to bring all exhibitors of the United States under one banner, united for one purpose. Personal aggrandizement can wait and plans for personal profit may easily be laid to one side until the times are more propitious. The man who forgets self and works for the organization "one hundred per cent. strong" will, in the end, have no cause for complaint as to where he stands in the estimation of his fellows.

Therefore, we shall look forward with great hope for efficiency in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League under the leadership of Peter J. Schaefer. He is a big man in this business and should be able to do big things for the League and those concerned in its success. On the other hand this is the time for the members of the League to come forward strongly in support of the new administration. The affairs of the organization are at a very low ebb. There should be a renewing of activity among state branches—a general getting together all along the line. Every step that can be made to bring about a unification of the organization should be taken now. There is a strong possibility that overtures will be made to the American Exhibitors' Association when that organization meets at Chicago in September and those efforts should not come to naught. Let everybody get together for a long, strong pull.

FROM all parts of the country come reports of good business among exhibitors. Attendance seems to be up to the mark and prices of film rentals have not occasioned serious complaint. The theatre owners apparently have adjusted their houses on a war basis and there is no complaint of hardship or unfavorable conditions on that score. One of the best indications of favorable conditions is found in the almost total lack of friction between the theater owner and the producer. This is a state of affairs that should prevail at all times. It can be made permanent if the theater owner and the producer will get closer together and work at all times in harmony for the common cause of business success.

Reluctant Assent

By Robert C. McElravy.

The ruling by Gen. Crowder that film artists are engaged in an essential industry will release a sigh of joy not only from a myriad of actors, but also from their countless admirers. Whether we like it or not, the American drama of the present time is that of the film. Where one person attends a real play, one hundred attend a screen performance. So if a great part of the nation wasn't to be plunged into gloom and boredom, then the young movie actor, of draft age, had to be spared. For the elderly Thespian, never too old to do Hamlet or Richard the Third or D'Artagnan, cannot manage the hair-raising stunts that the most conventional Wild West show demands. It is no use arguing that the American people have very poor taste in this matter, and, if deprived of the movie as a refuge from boredom, would be forced to occupy their evenings more usefully. The fact of the matter is that we are in the midst of war, and we must not swap amusements while so immersed.

THE Evening Post of July 9 is in error in its statement that the young screen actor, of draft age, has been spared from the ranks of the army. He is answering, by the hundreds, the call to the colors. The moving picture actor is simply immune from the "work or fight" regulation, which is quite a different thing, and this applies of course to men over draft age.

Numerous paragraphs similar to the quoted extract are flying about the country in certain sections of the press. Some of them are not so guileless as they would appear, but most of them we prefer to think are the result of an honest incomprehension of what the films have been doing. In either case the public is entitled to know just why moving pictures have not been classed as non-essential during the war.

When it became evident that America was to take part in the war, the film producers of the country placed the entire machinery of the moving picture industry at the disposal of the Government.

The film interests have had their loyalty on straight from the beginning. Just how much of an influence they have been in bringing the war situation to the minds of the people cannot be fully stated, but they have been pounding out the facts to their millions of daily observers without cessation. They have brought the issue clearly before the vast foreign-born element, some of whom can neither read nor write our language. The film has accomplished marvels in uniting and solidifying the thought of America in this great crisis.

It is wrong to assume that moving pictures are essential merely from the standpoint of entertainment. The authorities at Washington recently went to considerable effort to place themselves on record as to just why the films are not to be regarded as non-essentiol.

Mr. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, expressed amazement that a movement to have the films declared non-essential should gain any headway. He spoke of their work in furthering Liberty Loans, War Savings, and other Government movements, and said they "deserve the thanks of the country for their patriotic attitude." Mr. Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, said, among other things: "I believe in the motion picture just as I believe in the press, and in my work it plays just as powerful a part in the production and stimulation of an aroused and enlightened war sentiment." Mr. Hoover and Mr. Garfield expressed themselves very much in the same way, speaking particularly of the educational and moral value of the films.

The press as a rule is friendly to the screen and is giving moving pictures full credit for what they have done. It has small reason for doing otherwise, for moving pictures certainly create new readers of newspapers all the while.

The Evening Post editor who wrote the above paragraph has simply not awakened to what is going on in the film world. He has not yet discovered that there is a method in this movie madness. While he lingers amid vague prejudices a new art of cosmic sweep is spassing over his accomplished but unsuspecting bean.

Let him go to see D. W. Griffith's magnificent "Hearts of the World," with Dorothy Gish as the charming heroine. Then let him devote a week or ten days to a campaign among the other moving picture houses and see if he doesn't find his time well spent. A few slapstick comedies wouldn't hurt him either. The most erudite man of our acquaintance, a reader for a great publishing house, wouldn't look at a moving picture for years. When he finally fell, it was for "Mutt and Jeff." Now he can't see enough of them, and he still retains his job.

Poor taste! Tell that to the Teufel Hunden!

Laemmle Hammering on the Summer Stuff

Inclination to Close Down in Hot Weather Is a State of Mind, Says Universal President.

IN line with his recent message to every exhibitor in the United States on the absolute necessity, from the standpoint of sheer patriotism, of keeping the theaters open throughout the summer, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has just made public a second letter sent to a "Doubting Thomas" showman.

This exhibitor, who owns a theater in one of the smaller Kansas towns, took issue with Mr. Laemmle's assertion that the dog days are as full of profit possibilities as those of the cooler season.

"You're all wrong," wrote this theater owner, whose name is withheld at his own request. "Neither you nor any other man can convince me that I can make money during the summer. I'd be tickled to death to keep my doors open because of the help it would enable me to give the Government in the spreading of propaganda, but since I can't afford to lose money I've got to shut up shop during the eight weeks in July and August."

The answer sent by the head of the Universal organization was written in his characteristic style.

"Some one said of a certain New York evening newspaper that it wasn't a newspaper at all; it was a state of mind. Well, that's just what the summer so-called dull season is—a state of mind," wrote Mr. Laemmle. "There are, however, a number of exhibitors who have a deep-rooted idea that business in the summer drops off because it always has dropped off. If you are one of those exhibitors it probably always will drop off. That's your state of mind.

"You may be just waiting for a few continued days of hot weather to give you an excuse to close on the plea that you can't control the weather. If you are just stop for a moment and ask yourself if it isn't your state of mind that's eating you. We've got to have hot weather, and, when you come to think of it, it is not so terrible after all.

"Get into this state of mind and there won't be any dull season for you," says the Universal president in conclusion. "The other fellow will enjoy the dull season all alone, and in the meantime you ought to be able to cinch the business of your town so that when he attempts to start all over again in the fall he'll wish he'd put it off till after the war."

STEDMAN NOT NEPHEW OF CHARLES FROHMAN.

Daniel Frohman of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation says the published statements that a young film actor named Charles Frohman Stedman is a nephew of his brother, the late Charles Frohman, is incorrect, as Mr. Frohman had no nephew by that name.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Has a Successor

It is "America's Answer," and the Eight Reels Will be Shown in New York, July 29.

THE U. S. Government will present, through the Committee on Public Information, George Creel, Chairman, Division of Films, Charles S. Hart, Director, the second official American war film "America's Answer," at the George M. Cohan Theater, starting Monday night, July 29.

This feature film in eight reels will continue the story begun in "Pershing's Crusaders." It will tell the story of the arrival in France of the first half million men of the American Army and of what they have accomplished.

From convoyed transport to the first line trenches, the activities of the American Army in France are vividly portrayed. The building of 800 miles of railroad in France, the erection of enormous docks, storage warehouses and railroad shops where hundreds of American-built locomotives are assembled, and all of the work which is being done for the maintenance of the American Expeditionary Force in France will be reproduced on the screen. There will also be shown the arrival and landing of "our boys" and interesting scenes of their daily life in the trenches and in rest camps.

There will also be panoramic views of military activities at the front and other highly interesting scenes which will be announced in detail when the picture is presented to the public.

"America's Answer" has been selected and assembled from over 30,000 feet of film which was made by order of General John J. Pershing under the direction of the General Staff, and photographed by the Signal Corps of the American Expeditionary Force in France.

All of this film has been previously seen and approved by General Pershing, who is taking the keenest interest in the filming of what will ultimately be a complete pictorial history of America's part in the great war.

Interesting Educationals

One Military Subject, One Travel, One Sport, and Two Industrial.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 11" (Pathe).

THIS, the 11th episode, shows the Duke of Connaught on a visit to the French front, where he reviews the dauntless Canadian troops. Both cavalry and infantry are pictured, and certain interesting scenes show the manner in which ammunition is handled. Actual pictures taken during the bombardment of Vimy ridge are included.

"A Mexican Venice" (Educational).

An interesting series of views along the Viga canal treating in general of the activities on this canal which penetrates Mexico City and which on week days serves as a commercial avenue, and on Sundays reflects the festive moods of the nation. One of the first scenes gives an idea to what an extent the Viga canal is used by the natives as a wash tub. Then again we get a glimpse of the hundreds of little bridges that span it, and the varied craft that ply through its waters. At another time we make a landing at the Indian village of Santa Anita, which is evidently one of the show places of the canal. A nail factory situated in this village turns out about three dozen hand made nails per day, many of which are used in making the flat bottomed scows common on the canal. These are only a few of the many unusual scenes presented in the picture.

"The Game of Golf" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 129th issue of the Pictograph will be found an illustration of how to become proficient at the game of golf. In it Alexander Smith twice winner of the National Open Championship and holder of four metropolitan and twelve other championships, and one of the game's greatest exponents, demonstrates how to do the thing right. Beginning with the proper grip of the club on and through the drive, the approach and the hazard shots he points out the right and the wrong way of playing golf.

"Making Concrete" (Universal).

In the 81st issue of the Screen Magazine will be found a clear illustration of the manufacture of concrete. First we are shown the great sand hill where the basic ingredient is obtained. Then comes the removal of the sand to the conveyor, with closeup views of sand conveyor and cement conveyer. The great hopper in which the cement, sand and water are mixed is next shown, and also the block-forming machine which stamps out the blocks. The blocks of concrete are then taken to the drying room from whence they are transported to the store yards.

"Scientific Poultry Production" (Universal).

Scientific methods of rearing poultry are shown in the 81st issue of the Screen Magazine. This film comes from the United States Department of Agriculture and shows the method of trap-nesting hens which affords a means of knowing which hens are earning their keep and which are not. The laying hen is removed from the trap nest and the number of her leg band marked on her egg and credited to her on the trap record. The eggs for the incubator are carefully selected and separated according to the hens' numbers and placed in net bags in the incubator. When the hatch is completed each chick is weighed, toe-punched and banded with duplicate bands. The packing of eggs for the parcel post delivery is also shown.

The Patriotic Point of View

National Education Association and Community Center Association at Pittsburgh Convention Laud Moving Picture Screen.

THE use of motion pictures by educators and social agencies was given a decided impetus at the joint conference of the National Education Association and the Community Center Association in Pittsburgh at the convention held July 2 through July 5, 1918. For the first time motion pictures were discussed in a dignified and adequate fashion as valuable medium for instructional, entertainment Americanization and patriotic purposes. An entire morning session of the Community Center Conference was devoted to the subject. Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, presided and presented the principal address. The Convention listened also to M. A. Beeman, Associate Director of the Committee on Public Information at Washington; William Horton Foster, Vice-President of the Community Motion Picture Bureau; and R. E. Hieronymus, Community Advisor of the University of Illinois.

All the speakers paid high tribute to the whole-hearted service of the motion picture industry in aiding the United States Government both in developing a unity of war will at home and in the successful prosecution of the war. No other national industry has placed its powers and product so completely at the disposal of Washington. These have been used in the training camps and in the theatres of the country for developing accurate knowledge of American war spirit, of aroused democracy and of American preparedness, as well as in the Allied and neutral countries abroad. This assistance to the governmental agencies has many times approached the limit of generosity in prices, new motion picture prints and skilled technical assistance.

The patriotic service of the film companies in co-operation with the Committee on Public Information, the cantonments, the Y. M. C. A., the great war fund drives, ship launching and the operation of Government commissions was also discussed.

Still another phase of war activity commanded the enthusiastic applause of the Convention. This occurred when there was described the policy of the entire motion picture industry in helping to brighten the spirits of the American people by concentrating the abilities of directors, actors and exhibitors on cheerful, dainty, fun-compelling and absorbing stories. These unusual photoplays had assisted mightily in lightening the strain of the American people and in preserving a moral balance and poise.

The subject of the use of motion pictures in Americanization of the foreign-born was also discussed. Because the motion picture speaks a common language which is easily understood, it becomes the most powerful agent for awakening the whole people to think and act for democracy. Every community, therefore, makes a mistake not to study what the people want and to draw them together on the basis of their lights rather than to attempt to dictate from above what they ought to enjoy.

This group of educators and social workers received as a new idea the fact that the exhibitors in every community were more important social agents than themselves. The discussion indicated a determination on their part to attempt to develop a great spirit of co-operation with the exhibitors of the country in accomplishing the common war purpose.

Maybe Stone Has It?

Film Library Which May Interest Many—Special Scenes Including Four Reels on Life in Western Siberia and Alaska.

THE slogan "maybe Stone has it" is more or less well known among the trade. Abram Stone, a diligent and conscientious worker among odds and ends in film land is behind it, and can be located at his office on the eighth floor at 145 West 45th Street, New York City any day.

For some time Mr. Stone has been collecting a library of interesting lengths of film including travel, news, scientific, industrial, military, zoological and other subjects. At the present time he has on hand an attractive collection of scenes collected by the Harvard Museum Siberia-Arctic Expedition showing life among the natives of Alaska and Siberia as well as the Aleutian Islands. Gold mining at Nome, and reindeer herding on St. Lawrence Island are among the many interesting features of these pictures.

In a catalogue prepared by Mr. Stone for the guidance of his patrons will be found listed a large number of unusual subjects for which the educationist might look long and fail to find in the ordinary channels.

Johnson Brings Pictures of Cannibals

For Two Years Explorer-Photographer Traveled Among Savage Tribes of South Pacific.

ACTUATED by a craving for adventure and the desire to record the manners and customs of the last strongholds of cannibalism, Martin Johnson set out from San Francisco and made brief stops at Honolulu and Samoa. In Sydney, Australia, his time was devoted to laying in a supply of looking-glasses, calico, knives, tobacco, pipes, cast-off clothing of all kinds, including several crates of old hats and caps for use in dressing the savages. Then the voyage was resumed aboard a little trading steamer which landed him in the Solomon Islands after a two weeks' trip.

From here for months one adventure followed another. Traveling in small schooners, whaleboats and canoes Mr. Johnson covered 18,000 miles among the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands and he sailed as far north as the Leaneuwa Lagoon among the Line Islands.

Assistance and protection was furnished his expedition by government officials in the form of twenty-five native soldiers and fifty barrier boys. With this bodyguard he went among people who had never seen white men before. A fresh water lake was discovered in the interior of a large unexplored island; a group of artificial islands were explored—islands manufactured from stones and shells in the middle of the Pacific; a lagoon inhabited by 782 primitive natives was photographed. Here the natives thought they were the only inhabitants on the face of the earth. In the New Hebrides the savages were seen burying their old people alive.

After a year's adventure Mr. Johnson set out in an open whaleboat for an unexplored island to study a race of cannibals known as the "Big Numbers." On this trip Mrs. Johnson insisted on going. They were captured by cannibals and rescued by the timely arrival of a British man-o-war. This experience, after being within fifteen minutes of the roasting stones, so unsettled and unnerved the explorers that they were forced to leave the islands.

Plucky Mrs. Johnson set out from America with the idea of remaining at the first Mission Station, while Mr. Johnson journeyed on among the cannibals, but at each station she begged to go on just a little further, with the result that she has experienced more adventure than the average man does in a lifetime. They two cruised among the reefs of coral for nearly two years.

The animated picture record of this journey which Mr. Rothapfel is presenting at the Rivoli for the first time on any screen was made entirely by Mr. Johnson. The scenes of island life and customs depicted should be of special interest to students of ethnology since the series embraces many extraordinary types of humanity, ranging from the beauty of the Hawaiian to the repulsive ugliness of the cannibals of the Solomon and New Hebrides groups. In all nearly 60,000 feet of negative were taken.

Cincinnati Concern to Produce Educationals

Motion Picture Company of Middle West to Bend Efforts Toward Filming Subjects of National Interest.

ACCORDING to Kenneth C. Crain, correspondent for the Moving Picture World, the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company which for several years, under the direction of President Clarence Runey, has been highly successful in the production of news and industrial moving pictures, has announced a departure of considerable importance and interest, involving ambitious plans for future production and distribution. The company has decided to give up making local news pictures, and will no longer issue the weekly news film which it has been getting out since 1910. Hereafter it will devote its facilities to the production of educational subjects of national interest, with the entire country as its distribution field. In order to put its distribution on a businesslike and efficient basis from the start, the company has secured the services of C. C. Hite to handle its distribution, and Mr. Hite has taken quarters at 109 West Fifth street, where he has leased an entire floor for this purpose. He is widely known among exhibitors and film men in the Middle West, having been manager in Cincinnati for some of the leading concerns in filmdom, including the Mutual, Goldwyn, Jewel and Triangle companies. The company, with its own big plant for the production of everything necessary to handle a picture, from the film to the paper, will be prepared to get out the advertising matter to go with its pictures, and will shortly announce forthcoming releases.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

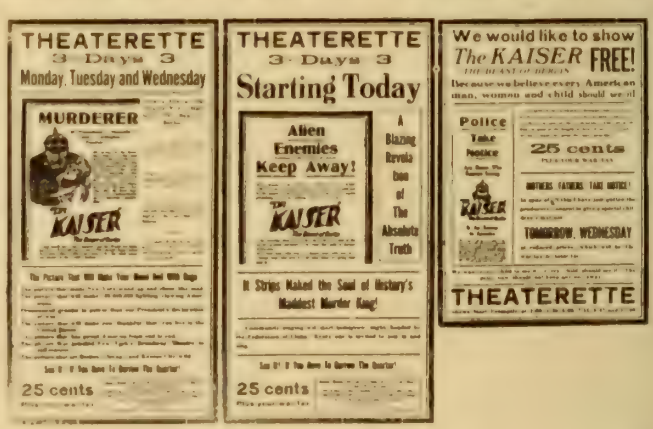
Prepare to Produce.

PREPARE to "produce" your picture instead of merely "presenting" it. Evidently novelty in story is not often to be looked for, and patrons demand something new, and exhibitors who would survive must supply the demand. It is manifestly impossible to follow in the footsteps of such men as S. Barret McCormick and Harold B. Franklin. The average exhibitor has no scene studio at his command, nor could he afford the cost of making a heavy production for each two or three-day run. For this reason undue space has not been given to such productions, but enough has been used to show the general line of presentation. The smaller houses cannot compete with the two thousand seat house, and to attempt to do so would merely invite failure, yet much can be done with comparatively little running cost and not a very great initial outlay. Taking a suggestion from the dramatic theaters, much can be done with white or light hangings and variously colored lights. Take, for example, a strongly tragic story. The stage is displayed with white drapes on which play brightly colored lights, gradually deepening in tone to the darker shades of blue, or purple. These fade into blackness as the title flashes. The audience is in a proper mood for the heavy story. On the other hand, beginning dark and working up to the brighter tints, will pave the way for a comedy or comedy-drama. The initial cost is largely for wiring the lighting system to be able to gain the desired results, for while white velvet lights best, it will be found that cheesecloth will serve well and is more easily kept clean. Building up on this, lantern slides can be employed to throw flowers or conventional patters on the drapings, cloud effects can be worked, and you can even get the effect of a stage setting with a colored slide, working a singer or speaker in front of the cloth, but to one side. From this it is a comparatively easy step into an introductory scene with a house setting and a few simple properties. Special music, of course, is to be used for these effects, and the effects may merely be used to augment the music at the start. Begin slowly and that will give you more room in which to improve your displays. At the start any departure from the bare stage and blank screen will suffice, but with a little thought you will find that you can greatly improve the picture. To give a concrete example, let us take Tarzan of the Apes. It will be recalled that this opens with a silhouette of the boy Tarzan against the evening sky. Open with your whites and amber, tinged slightly with red. Use some smooth-flowing music and work the bird call, perhaps opening with the bird call before the orchestra or organ comes in. Increase the red while you gradually throw off the whites, then dim the amber while the red grows stronger, then bring in the blues while the red is faded down, until you mix in some green to get a moonlight, then flash the title (the lights being so low as to permit it to be read), and when you come to the opening scene cut off the lights. By providing black curtains with which to cover the white draperies you do not detract from the picture. Unless you can use a dimmer for each color it would be better to have the lights put in in two or three circuits, so that every second or third light will be in circuit, dimmers would be better, though rheostats are more costly. With a little experimenting you will find that you can gain surprisingly good color effects without trouble.

Poor Business.

The Central theater, Atlantic City, N. J., seems either to be misinformed or misinforming. It is a five-cent house, and in an effort to create "runs" for its attractions it gets away from the facts. It says, for example, that Tarzan of the Apes played two weeks at the Victoria and one at the Palace, Philadelphia, though it did not play the Palace, and a week at the Rialto in New York, ignorant of the six-weeks' run at the Broadway. To cap the climax, it adds: "This is a big production and should draw as well as 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.'" This is poor argument. But the limit is reached when, in announcing the war-news reel, it adds "Please note that any time you happen to see any of your boys in these pictures if you will report it at the box office we'll be only too glad to give you a film clipping. Since the film is rented and not purchased, we think that the offer is dishonest. There is entirely too much film-clipping being done by operators, but if some scene with a New Jersey regiment comes along, the reel is apt to go back to the exchange minus a scene or two. It is easy to be generous with the property of others, but it is hardly honest business.

Use the Lobby.



Don't forget that your lobby is just as much a part of your advertising campaign as is the newspaper display or the lithographs you use. More than that, it is the most important advertisement you offer, because it is the most permanent. You would fire a ticket-seller who came to work every day with a soiled waist and unwashed face, but that is no worse than letting the front get dingy and permitting dust to accumulate on your permanent lobby display. Keep your frames polished or painted, have the glass polished, not merely washed, and see that the floor is clean. People judge the inside of a house by its exterior, and most often they are right. Make certain that the judgment in the case of your house is in your own favor.

From a Truant.

It has been a long time since D. Filizola, of the Theaterette, Fort Scott, Kansas, has been in, but better late than never, and he sends in his "The Kaiser" campaign. He changed copy every day, except that his opening advertisement, shown here, was repeated in the weekly. This was a five tens and was run three days before the showing. The two twelves alongside were run the following day, and the day before the showing the three thirteens to the left of the second cut were used. The same space was taken for the opening day, but was dropped to three tens for the second and third days. The last day's advertisement is not shown in the series. It announces the last chance to see the picture and calls attention to the heavy business of the first days, urging all to get in who can. The Tuesday advertisement announces a special children's matinee for Wednesady at which the price is but fifteen cents, including the war tax, and the price is properly announced as "13c, war tax 2c, total 15c," instead of "Fifteen cents, including the war tax," which has been held to be not in compliance with the law. Supplementing the newspaper work, the entire county was billed with window cards, half-sheets, ones and threes, and a cleanup was made. Mr. Filizola wants to know what we think of the copy and display. We think that in the opening day we would have put the "Alien enemies keep away" in big type clear across the space directly under the house name or else in the centre of the space. The same holds good for the "Police Take Notice" in the next advertisement. He has done better with the "Blood-curdling yells of Joy" in the opening gun and in the "Shoot him" of the second display, but for this last, even at the expense of some other copy, suppose an extra large "fist" or a collection of small ones had pointed to the picture of the Kaiser. There is a little too much copy for the space, although the space is generously taken. We like the catchline, "See it if you have to borrow the quarter." It sounds convincing and earnest. We do not like the arrangement of the two-point rule, which sometimes cuts one paragraph from a related one. On the whole Mr. Filizola has done well, and has handled his campaign intelligently. One of the best points is the preparatory campaign. We think that a week in advance is none too soon to commence on a clean-up picture. It is bound to hurt business just before and after the showing anyway, so get all you can pull in on the feature.

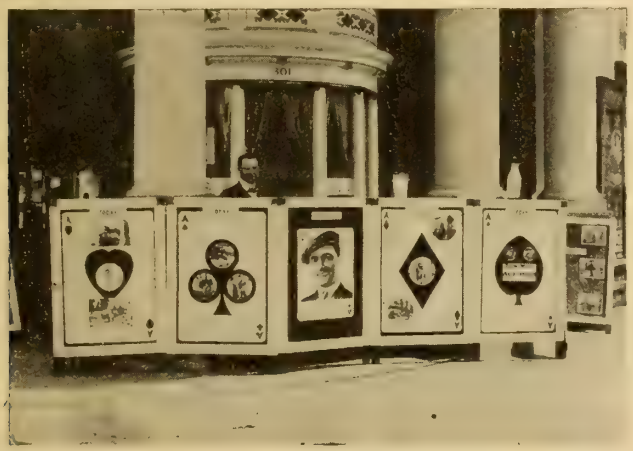
Now Four Pages.



W. S. McLaren has cut down his program for the Majestic and Colonial, Jackson, Mich., to a four-pager for the summer. The programs are run on the front and back pages, but we are inclined to think that they would work better were the programs inside and the text (of which there is plenty) on the outside pages. We think that on the Majestic program a larger condensed face for titles would give a better display, the type being perhaps a pica larger. It would lay out the lines better. White space is good, but here much of the space seems lost through lack of proportioning the type.

Fabricated Ones.

W. E. Jones, of the Superba, San Diego, Cal., needed a display for "Ace High," and could get only photographs. As the cut shows, with paste and paint brushes he got out a more attractive display than could be gained with the regular paper. These fabricated stands generally pull much harder than the regulation paper. This is so generally true that it will even pay to buy lithographs and cut them into special displays when one is handy with the brush, and there can always be found someone who can do fairly good work. This is better than "fairly good," but the idea is the same. That is Mr. Jones hiding behind the sign.

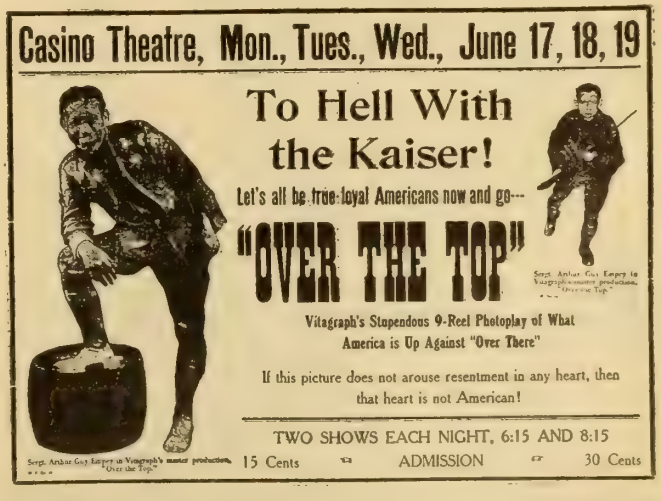
Here's a Scheme.

The Strand theater, Oklahoma City, is using the stunt, suggested by this department, of using slides of the men in the local draft as a special attraction. Pictures are borrowed from the parents of the enlisted men and slides are made. The list is changed twice a week, and about twenty-five portraits are shown in each lot, the individual slides being flashed for thirty seconds each. It is not only a good business-maker, but it is an aid to enlistment of others. The cost of the slides is comparatively small and the results are large. Specialize on anything that bears upon the enlisted man and you have something worth while to talk about. We would suggest that the slides be carefully preserved and catalogued to be used again, with an explanatory lettered slide should the individual become a casualty or distinguish himself. A close watch of the newspapers should be kept, for even while at camp some of the men are liable to be promoted, win marksmen medals, or otherwise distinguish themselves.

Steve Farrar's Campaign.



Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., is busy these days, for he had his manager at the Orpheum, Harrisburg, Ill., drafted and now he has to run the two shows. The towns are only nine miles apart, and there is trolley service every hour, but it is some jump at that. Steve sends in his campaign for "Over the Top." It played three days in each house, a record for the towns, and the campaign is interesting because it shows what can be done in a small town. He writes:

> I am enclosing you the newspaper ads I used; they are not the best in the world, but remember I have to depend on the stuff the exchanges furnish. I cannot even use a mat; must have a cut, so I think these ads are fair examples of what it takes to get the business in a small town; anyway, they broke my house records in both towns. I often look at the stuff Ruffner and McCormick send in and wish that I could get out stuff of that kind, but it's impossible with the material I have to work with, so I just do the best I can with what I have. Let me know what you think of this layout.

Steve is pretty much up against things, but he doesn't let that worry him. Instead of deciding that he cannot do very much because he lacks facilities, he sets about getting as much as he can with what is offered. He started in ten days before the showing with half-pages. They blank the current show a little, perhaps, but Steve figures that if he gets the feature over big he'll be making business for a long time to come. That is what the sensation features are for. They are apt to hurt the business for the preceding week, if properly advertised; but if the show gets over big it makes people think for weeks to come that the house is the home of big things. The first advertisement is rather full, but Steve knew that it would be read, and he told all about it in the first announcement. The real announcement is contained in the upper half of the first advertisement shown. That gives the dates, announces the subject and the house. If you are interested in that you can read down for further details, but that much of the opening gun sticks. The second display is also a half-page, but it carries less type, for now less type is needed. He has to stick to the trade-mark cut of the charging soldier which is used on all of Empey's stuff, but he adds another and more novel cut to the left. He steals the Metro's thunder with his catchline, but no one has prior rights on that popular phrase. The display stands out well, but we think it would have been better had the printer left a little more space between the title and the lines above and below. The line following could have been reduced without serious loss of efficiency, but for small-town typesetting it is by no means a bad job. Later on he cut down to a three sevens. According to the rule this space is far too full of type, but as a matter of fact it is a well-set display. The wide eight-point lines might be criticized, but they have been leaded and are more easily read than would be the case were there no space between the lines.

Better still, the stars separate the paragraphs and still further kill the suggestion that there is too much to read. It is one of the best examples of the use of a considerable amount of small type that we have ever shown in these pages. It will pay to study it. The next example is a cross-page strip five inches deep, used for the Harrisburgh house. Evidently it followed the opening announcements. But for Harrisburgh Steve seems to have preferred the cross-strips. The first strip shows the advance, the second is for the opening day, and carries double cuts. The arguments have been hammered home and the bare repetition of the title is sufficient. The next strip shows a untilization of Ralph Ruffner's "apology" adapted to the current need. Taken in conjunction with a glowing newspaper criticism nearly a column in length, it fed business nicely and drove home the suggestion that those who waited lost their chance. For the last night the advertising was split into two separate advertisements of two fours each. That on the left is also an adaptation of one of Ruffner's suggestions and trailed nicely with the work of the preceding day, and Steve adds his own touch with a six-point "That's our little piece" at the bottom of the text and just above the house signature. Almost as good is the other advertisements, "You'll be sorry tomorrow if you miss this show tonight." The first half of the phrase is strong enough to call for display type. Lately we have shown a lot of campaigns by McCormick, Ruffner, and others, but this is interesting as showing what a live wire can do who has practically nothing but hustle to back up his brains. He cannot afford to have designs drawn, he cannot have special cuts made, he must take what he can get and provide the rest out of his own head. Steve is an old-timer, and the idea did not scare him a bit. He took what cuts he could get from the exchange and did the rest with type. Steve is one of the oldest contributors to this department, as well as one of the oldest readers, and what he reads helps him to do better work. He does not hesitate to use ideas he finds here because he knows that is what they are put here for, and he does not hesitate to give up his own ideas—and he has contributed many. He knows this department is merely an exchange of ideas, and he puts in more than he takes out, but he takes what he can use knowing that it will be brand new in his town, and it helps him to clean up with a feature that must be advertised adroitly if it is to clean up. He played to three days' big business in each of two towns. He got the money, and better still, he got the credit that comes from packed houses. Many do not realize it, but a turnaway is the best possible advertisement a house can have. People do not stand in line before the house that lacks attractions. Patronage is the stamp of merit as well as of success. And what Steve has done other small-town managers can do as well.

Words of Wisdom.

Here is some good talk from a late English Triangle booklet. It holds just as good this side of the pond as it does in England. Presumably it is by Philip Wright Whitcombe, or at least it is in his style. It runs:

> You are running a motion picture theater, but you are not a showman or a circus proprietor. You are a seat salesman, and you are appealing to an intelligent class of people—people who know just as much about motion pictures as you do, and who want to see the best pictures you can show.
> The average exhibitor overlooks the fact that a thorough knowledge of his pictures is absolutely necessary if he would advertise them effectively, and that a certain amount of intelligent advertising is equally necessary. There may be a certain scene in a picture that alone is worth the price of admission, but your public has no way of finding this out until it flashes by them on the screen, unless you advertise it beforehand. A real appreciation of the picture by your patrops is essential to their satisfactory entertainment.

Too much of the advertising done is non-committal, and this is particularly true of the program stuff. It is clearly apparent that the advertiser has no real knowledge of the film he is going to show, and often he seems none too certain of the actual wording of the title. He gets off some glittering generality that does not rouse interest in the least, and lets it go at that. It is definite talk of the films that makes business. Know what you're talking about.

Uses Red Ink.

The Kinema, Fresno, Cal., uses the red impression of the press for tint block work and gets unusual results. Advertisements printed in red and black type are not uncommon, but we do not recall having seen before the use of the red form to make a tint as the basis of the advertisement, yet there are many presses, even in the smaller cities, equipped for two-color work, and a little study and some added expense will get unusual results. The illustration will not reproduce as red and black have an almost similar actinic value, but the idea is to use the color as a ground for the display of the black type.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat boklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Gone, But Not Forgotten.

From Alex A. Macdonald, secretary Local Union 497, Halifax, Nova Scotia, comes the following sad news:

> A. E. Wall, chairman of the Nova Scotia Board of Moving Picture Censors, passed away at 3 A. M., Wednesday, June 19. The immediate cause of death was pneumonia, which followed an operation for appendicitis.
> The loss of Mr. Wall is a personal one to all of us, and we feel it deeply. Aside from this sad happening we are all well and working. The local is going along the straight and narrow path which leads, we hope, to success and better things in the days to come. The future of Halifax looks bright.

This news was in the nature of a shock. A. E. Wall was of the salt of earth. He was a member in high standing in the Ancient and Accepted Order of Good Fellows. Square as a die and straight as a string, he was one of those men whom every honest man was proud and glad to call friend. I am sorry. I shall miss something when next I visit Halifax, and that something will be the warm handclasp, the honest welcome and heartening smile of A. E. Wall. May he rest in peace.

Perforated Shutter Blades.

California wants to know:

> What is your opinion with regard to a shutter with perforated blades, or one with colored blades, which will not entirely darken the screen. Does it give more light on the screen or lessen the flicker by not having such a total change from light to darkness as is the case where a solid blade is used?

This question is an old one, but is re-explained for the benefit of the newcomers in the business. Yes, perforated shutter blades do lessen the flicker, as do also colored, semi-transparent blades, but it is at the expense of injury to the highlights of the picture. Where a perforated blade is used the picture looks gray and dull in proportion to the number and size of perforations and brilliancy of the projection light. With colored blades the effect is much the same, except that it is in color. There is exception where certain very dark tints of two colors are used. Projectionist Wood, formerly of the Market Street theater, San Francisco, used such a shutter, which worked very fine, but it was a matter of very careful selection of tints and colors, and no others would do. Aside from the Woods shutter I know of none which will work the slightest improvement as against the solid metal blade shutter.

Butcher Splices.

Fredric Brockman, Triumph, Minnesota, orders question booklets and says:

> Am a student of handbook and projection department, and I do not go to the cellar to study them either. Have cut down my shutter to match local conditions; also have my optical system matched up according to directions, and am going to cut down my ports. Am running a Power's Six-A. It needs some overhauling, but I am sorry to say that friend Boss cannot see it that way. It has had no repairs to amount to anything since its installation about three years ago. You may therefore imagine what is needed. Am studying all the time to improve my work. Have the following in my technical library: Hawkins' Guides, Hawkins' Electrical Dictionary, Richardson's Handbook (the best of 'em all, by the way), Optic Projection, I. C. S. Electrical Engineers' book, three books on mathematics, six on chemistry, three on physics, two on mechanical drawing and design and one mathematics and applied electricity. Why not recommend works on physics as study books? They contain good dope on light, optics and electricity. I also own my own tools. Am enclosing some fine examples of butcher-spliced film received from the Metro and Vitagraph Minneapolis exchange. Jimmy the usher must have made them all, with the assistance of the kind-hearted janitor. In closing I desire to tender my sincere thanks for the aid I have received through your handbook and the department.

The splices vary from plain punk to awful, with two tacked together with a pin. The Minneapolis exchange named must inspect its reels by looking hastily on both sides of them if this is a fair sample. As to your ports, presuming you to of course mean the lens ports, there are two ways of reducing, and while both are good, one is better than the other. If you cut down the port itself, then reduce it to exactly the size of the actual light ray. But the better way is to do the reducing at the aereal image of the condenser. You may find this by several methods, but the better way is to hold a piece of black paper, such as comes around photographic plates, in front of the projection lens, at the point where the condenser is in sharp focus. You can aid the determination of this point by slipping a rough-edged mit of metal down in front of and against the front surface of the front condenser. You may also find the image approximately as per Plate 18, page 145, of handbook. Having located the aereal image of the condenser, cut a hole in a sheet of metal just large enough to let the aperture image through (the aperture image and aereal image of the condenser are very close together) and the thing is done. Most certainly your machine should be overhauled. Your employer is in error. The audience pays to see that which you are placing on the screen, and anything which lowers the screen result lowers box office receipts, and most certainly a badly worn projector injures screen results; also it is quite possible for a projector with worn sprockets to do quite enough damage to films every day to pay for new sprockets, and this adds to the overhead expense of the industry, which your boss and all other bosses must inevitably pay in the form of increased film rentals. As to recommending books on physics, why I have and do, but it is so very hard to get projectionists to study even the bare essential things that I have about given up expecting them to go that far. The man who is progressive will study, and his study will necessarily include physics, because it is there that he gets an elementary knowledge of light action. The other fellow I sometimes get very weary of talking to or bothering with at all.

Ventilation Problem.

W. J. Herbes, Lindsay, Nebraska, has a ventilation problem which he describes as follows:

> Will you kindly give us a little light on the following ventilation problem. We have a brick building 25x60 feet, with an 11-foot ceiling. We have just installed a 16-inch, four-blade exhaust fan, manufactured by the Eck people, and purchased from the Exchange Supply Company of Chicago. Have placed the fan in position as indicated in drawing, but it does not seem to have the suction it should have. Probably we are expecting too much of it. What should this fan do for us and what suggestion would you offer?

If you have a handbook and will turn to page 631, you will find a chart which will enable you to roughly figure out just about what size fan you need. Of course the amount of air moved in a given time will depend upon many things, such as its temperature, humidity, size, type and speed of fan. Your proper course would have been to secure your fan from a ventilated company, or else direct from the fan manufacturer. By giving them the plan of the theater and size of the same they would have been able to tell you just what size fan you need, and suggest proper place for its installation. As it is, you have the fan directly over the main entrance, which is not good practice, since it will expend at least a portion of its energy pulling in air through the entrance door, when it is open, right up and out again. The fan should have been near the ceiling at the screen end of the theater. You have 25x60x11 equals 16,500 cubic feet of air to move. The usual rule is to provide 25 to 30 feet of fresh aid per person per minute. In fact, this is the requirement generally conceded as necessary to provide healthful conditions. Now suppose you seat 200. It would then be necessary to move 200x25=5,000 cubic feet of air per minute. This means that you would have to change the air in your theater every (16,500÷5,000) 3.3 minutes. Now, applying the chart on page 631 of the handbook, we find that an 18-inch fan would not meet the requirement, while a 24-inch one would be larger than necessary. But you must understand that ventilation and cooling are two very different problems, having little or nothing to do with each other. I would respectfully suggest that you send four dollars to the Moving Picture World for a copy of the handbook, unless you already have one, and study these problems. It will more than justify the expenditure on the matter of ventilation alone. It is too large a matter to deal with fully here. Summing up, you have your fan in a poor place, and it is too small for the work. Maybe an 18-inch high duty fan would do, but a 24-inch slow running fan would be best.

The Pencil Reel.

And now comes an improvement on the humble reel, or, perhaps, we might better say a new reel, to be known as the "Pencil Reel." This article differs from ordinary reels now in use in that it is equipped with means for recording upon the reel itself the title of the picture it contains together with such other information as may be deemed necessary or desirable such as footage, number of subject or reel, producing corporation and part number. Insofar as we can remember, this is the first reel in which this desirable feature has been incorporated in workable form. It is the invention of F. W. Weeks and is being placed on the market by a concern known as the Pencil Reel Company, with offices in New York City. The reel has already been fully covered by patents. One side of its outer surface carries a card, upon which the above data may be inscribed. The card is so mounted that it becomes a permanent part of the reel, though there is means provided whereby the card may be replaced should it become damaged. The writing is intended to be done with a pencil, which will provide record of sufficient durability for practical purposes, yet may be readily erased when the reel is to be used for a different subject. The card material is such that pencil marks may be erased, or wiped off by merely rubbing with a wet finger tip, just as the mark of a slate pencil is rubbed out. This may be done any number of times without injuring the card surface. The card will not take ink. When desired, a card for use will be provided. Carbon copies of titles, etc., may be made upon typewriting machine and used as reel labels. This reel is otherwise the same as any other good reel, and the special recording feature adds little or nothing to cost of manufacture. The new feature appears to have very distinct value. Inventor of the Pencil Reel is respectfully recommended to exhibitors and producers for their favorable consideration. It looks good to this department.

Another Side to the Matter.

Some time ago I replied to B. A. Aughinbaugh, who is principal of the Mingo, Ohio, public schools, and who wrote suggesting a form of handbook along lines similar to the handbook Henry Ford puts out with his cars. I declined, by saying I did not care to put out a book which would make "trouble finding" too easy, preferring one the study of which would equip the learner with real knowledge sufficient to locate trouble when it appeared. The Ford automobile handbook is so made up that one looks for a heading such as, for instance, "Knocks in Engine," and there finds the various possible causes and remedy for each. Mr. Aughinbaugh now says:

> The position you assume with regard to the handbook is acceptable, at least from the viewpoint of the professional theatrical projectionist. I must therefore assume there is little or no hope for relief for that greater number of projectionists who are bound to materialize as the public schools of the nation take up motion pictures for educational purposes, and for entertainment purposes in small, rural communities not blessed with a theater. In my own case, it would be very interestin were I able to devote the time necessary to make an extended study of projction from the professional standpoint under some competent projectionist. But this is not practical, if for no other reason than that there are, as far as I know, no such in this vicinity. I am myself but an amateur, although criticism by others seems to indicate I have the best of professionals in so far as concerns screen results. Unfortunately my various duties are so strenuous that I have little time to devote to a comprehensive study of projection, or even to look for trouble in our projectors. Usually there is only time to give them a cursory looking over, see that all is well in the engine room, and, if not, fix it; oil things up, see that the ticket and music end is ready and then shoot the signal for the show to begin. We usually pack our auditorium, holding 500, every Friday night. Under these conditions don't you think such a book as I have outlined would "help some"? I well know both the machines and films are the property of others, and so regard them. Have yet to have the first kick from an exchange. Use Paramount-Artcraft and Fox Standards almost entirely now. Am buying a new American Standard to replace the one which annoyed me by "bobbing" the picture up and down. Have temporarily relieved the bobbing by using large hub reels on takeup and very loose takeup tension, but the screen result from this machine still does not suit me.

The matter involved is indeed a serious one. It is quite true that whether we like it or do not like it there are going to be thousands of projectors handled by school teachers. The point may be raised, and in fact has been raised, that the schools should employ professional projectionists, but this not only is impractical by reason of the lack of sufficient professionals, but by the further fact that city schools in all human probability will not employ a projectionist for each class room, or enough to meet the requirements of all class work, and most certainly the smaller village and rural schools neither can or will employ any projectionists, as such, at all. The logical outcome is non-inflammable film, the incandescent lamp, and every school teacher a projectionist in at least an amateur way. And this state of affairs, which is a condition, not a theory, lays a burden of duty on my shoulders, because a refusal to do anything possible to help these teachers put on a better picture would work hardship on our schools —a thing not to be for one instant thought of. I shall therefore give the matter of what might be termed a handbook for amateurs very serious consideration.

As to lessening an up and down movement on the screen by using large hub reels and loose takeup tension, why, that is a new one on me. As to your comment that your work compares more than favorably with that of professions in so far as concerns screen results, why that is the one most important thing. In fact, it is the whole thing as applies to the producer and the public. The rest of it concerns unnecessary wear and damage to equipment and to films, which is often very, very high. In closing, let me say that if our professional projectionists as a whole took half the interest friend Aughinbaugh takes in projection there would very soon be a different state of affairs in the presentation of the photoplay.

Of No Value.

M. J. Ellard, Toronto, Ontario, asks for information as to speed of projector when control lever is in each of the various notches. Says he has this dope for ordinary Simplex, but wants it for other types of that projector and for the Power's.

Such information would have little or no value, because it could not and would not be a fixed quantity. You might measure the speed of a projector with the control lever set in a certain notch, and find it to be appreciably different two minutes later, or you might measure a machine in Toronto and one exactly like it in Cleveland, Ohio, only to find a different result. In the first instance the variation would be due to unsteady line voltage, and in the second, to the fact that there may be a difference of several volts in Toronto and Cleveland line voltage, even though nominally supposed to be 110 in both cases. This is particularly true when current is taken through a transformer, which may or may not serve to aggravate a too-low or too-high line voltage. It is for this reason that this department has never given out data of that sort. I assume you wish to have the data to give out, and the evil of that is found in the fact that incorrect data, or data which is not correct by reason of incontrollable variation, is bad, because others accept it as correct, only to find there is something wrong.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which can not be answered in this column $1.00.

Let's Sing!

THROUGHOUT the length and breadth of this great land there is a wave of enthusiasm spreading for what is called community singing. Wherever one goes, in hamlet, village and city, one finds the people gathering together to lift their voices in song. The army and navy have taken it up because they have found that song gives inspiration, and inspiration means deeds of valor. During these depressing times people need the good cheer of music.

There is a peculiarity of the American nation probably not found in any other country. We have an abundance of patriotic hymns, yet not one in a thousand can sing them correctly. All know the "tune," but few have memorized the words. We la-di-da them, getting in a word here and there, and sing the melody lustily because we know that the song is something about America. There are a few gifted singers who really know the first verse of THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER, AMERICA, and perhaps THE BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC, but if called upon to sing further they would be forced to confess their ignorance.

There is nothing so inspiring as the singing of our national airs by a large congregation of people who understand what they are singing about. Nothing draws them so close together in their communal interests nor so strengthens their unity of purpose to make the world "safe for democracy." The lyrics of these songs are just as inspiring as the melodies, and every citizen and citizeness should know them by heart.

WHAT BETTER PLACE FOR COMMUNITY SINGING OF PATRIOTIC SONGS THAN THE PICTURE THEATERS? (Grand pause for breath—and effect.) Gentlemen, be seated. There is no cause for alarm nor is the building on fire. Startling as the question may seem its affirmative answer is practicable, feasible, and much to be desired.

Let the exhibitor get slides printed with the first three verses of THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER, four verses of AMERICA, three of COLUMBIA, THE GEM OF THE OCEAN, three of the BATTLE HYMN, and two of the MARSEILLAISE. Let one song be sung by the audience each night, or each performance, as he may decide, and it will not be long before the American people will know these well enough to sing them when occasion gives opportunity for their use. The picture theater is well equipped for this wonderful, educational project. The congregation is self supplied, the orchestra or organ will play the accompaniment, and the only additional expense will be purely nominal in procuring the necessary slides. Little time will be taken in the singing of one number, and it should not seriously break into the theater schedule.

There are many reasons why motion picture theaters should take up the suggestion. In the first place your people will like it. It may be necessary at first to obtain the services of a professional singer to lead them, as there seems to prevail a timidity among the laity to show their vocal accomplishments in public. Notwithstanding this fact, they will enjoy it, and praise the patriotism which prompts it. In the second place, it will add yet another laurel wreath to the head of the fifth industry because of its musical educational facilities. The picture theater has played no small part in bringing to the masses who love music all the works of the masters rendered in a musicianly manner by the best possible means. This has already borne fruit by creating a deeper appreciation for the better class of music. Why not teach them our national songs?

Another and perhaps the strongest reason for adopting the suggestion lies in its patriotic appeal. In a few weeks we will again be called upon to subscribe to the Fourth Liberty Loan. As heretofore, the motion picture industry will be counted upon to give its strong support to the movement, and we believe that the inspiration of song can be made productive in dollars freely pledged. Multitudes everywhere singing together the songs of their forefathers, songs which breathe confidence and victory, will bring that hearty response which means death to the Kaiser.

Aside from the standpoint of the innovation and placing in the background for the present the patriotic appeal the community aspect of the plan looms up largely. The neighborhood house will find that it will entrench itself strongly in the hearts of its clientele by giving them the opportunity of getting together in song. For the few minutes required to sing a patriotic song the theater virtually is turned over to the people for amusement, relaxation, and education. They take part in the exercises of the day, and become an integral part of the performance. Humanity is the same the world over, and everybody likes to be an actor in the show.

The theaters in the villages and smaller towns will find a ready response to the new plan of community singing, and may find it advantageous to carry it further, introducing other forms of folk-songs.

The large picture houses in cities dependent upon a transient trade will obtain the best results by securing an amateur choir of voices to lead the singing. This should not entail any additional expense, for singers are always glad to have the opportunity of performing a patriotic duty. There is no limit to what might be done with the assistance of trained voices. They have a box office value that cannot be overlooked.

We have no desire to turn the picture theater into a concert hall, and feel that the suggestion of community singing is not incompatible with the screen. The showing of pictures has gotten beyond the point of merely offering funny subjects to draw forth laughter. It has a mission which comprises art, entertainment, humor, news, and education. The screen is a perfect blackboard for the teaching of any subject, and should be utilized in a project that is national and patriotic, with the added virtue of being altruistic.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

CLAWS OF THE HUN, THE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Legend"—Friml, "Serenade"—Widor, or "Romance"—Mericanto.

This is a patriotic film which must be fitted with short, snappy numbers and strong with love of country. The first reel will need only light serenade stuff. At the "T. Carl Von Helm" a fearsome and harsh number should be used emblematic of our hatred for the Huns. Note the direct cue for "Over There," which should be played by a phonograph stationed behind scenes to gain effectiveness, and you will need the same selection to close the picture with. Watch for the auto crash in the fourth reel, and the big fight culminating in the shooting at the close of the picture. You will need some pathetic music to fit the mother scenes of this picture, and we would suggest "Mother," by Romberg; as one most suitable to the atmosphere. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

EVERYWOMAN'S HUSBAND (Triangle — Five Reels) — Theme for mother or Edith — Moderato. Suggest "Martinique" — Loraine, "Amaranthus"—Gilder, or "Imaginary"—Ballet No. 3.

This picture is a character modern drama dealing with the illicit love of married men for women—not their wives. Long numbers will be needed to give this picture a smooth setting. Few agitatos are wanted, but there should be an undercurrent of mystery running throughout the entire setting. Note the fight coming in the end of the picture, and use a big excerpt from one of the operas. The prelude from Romeo and Juliette is recommended. Light numbers will be effective during the scenes with Della Marshall, and we would suggest as a theme for her "The Vampire," by Sol Levi. This music is most appropriate for "vamps" of all descriptions. No cue sheets are available, and for that reason it would be well to get a pre-viewing if possible.

EMPTY CAB, THE (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegro. Suggest "La Caresse"—Hemberger, "Tale of Two Hearts"—Roberts, or "Tete-a-Tete"—De Koven.

This is a mystery story with all the action in the world. You will need the usual consistant misteriosos, many hurries, some dramatic tension stuff, and the average number of light "fillers." Do not bear too strongly on the theme aspect of the picture, but select only those moments in which the hero in the foreground is putting over something big. To close the picture use a number denoting triumph to signify the culmination of his hazardous exploits. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal exchange.

FINGER OF JUSTICE, THE (Arrow Film Co.—Seven Reels)—Theme for Betty—Allegretto. Suggest "Sweetheart Baby's Serenade"—Corri, or "The Merry Lark"—Bendix.

This picture is a big propaganda film that requires a theme for almost every character to bring out the contrasts throughout the feature. There has been arranged an admirable music score for it, and every leader should request his manager to get it for him. He will find that the synchrony is perfect, and the difficulties, which, under a musical setting adaptation would be almost impossible, have been well handled. If you cannot get the score insist on a pre-view of this picture, as it will be out of the question to fit it properly otherwise. Scores can be obtained from the Arrow Film Co.

GHOST OF ROSY TAYLOR, THE (American—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Extase"—Ganne, "Herd Girl's Dream"—Labitsky, or "Narcissus"—Nevin.

This is one of those homely little features that has so much heart interest that sweet music must predominate. There is a change of atmosphere from France to America, which should be carefully noted and the contrast marked. The early part of the picture is very pathetic, and sorrow must be portrayed by long selections. You can play this feature without recourse to any of the photoplay series. Good, solid music is what you will find most effective. Cue sheets can be obtained from the American exchange.

GOOD LOSER, A (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme for the heroine—Andante. Suggest "Dialogue"—Meyer-Helmund, "Arioso"—Frey, or "Heart's Desire"—Losey.

There is virility in this photoplay, and it must be brought out in the music. You will also need some pathetic stuff of a not too saccharine nature. Dramatic tensions can be used to advantage, and you will note the dramatic finish, the fight, pistol shots, and agitation. A good suggestion is the use of the violin in solos whenever Jack Monroe needs a theme. This will be found most effective and relief from the usual form of musical setting. As there are no cue sheets available it would be wise to request a pre-view of this picture to gain the proper prospective.

NO MAN'S LAND (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme for Katherine—Valse Lento. Suggest "Heartstrings"—Vecsey, "Valse Chic"—Russel, or "Sunset in Eden"—Hall.

Here you have a picture dealing really in three atmospheres, American, German, and Chinese. The last is merely incidental, and you may not regard it as vital in the picture setting, but the first two should certainly be considered. The feature is intensely dramatic, and big stuff will be required almost entirely. Note the shooting during the card game, and the fight between the Chinaman and the hero. You will require some misteriosos, a couple of big hurrys, and some agitatos of the heavier variety. Toward the finish you will have an opportunity to use some patriotic song of American origin—perferrably, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

OPPORTUNITY (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Caressing Butterfly"—Barthelmey, "Legend of a Rose"—Reynard, or "Moonlight Dance"—Finck.

This is a comedy-drama with lots of light stuff needed. There is a big fight scene which becomes a melee, and will require some fast allegro agitato. You will need a couple of two-steps and some popular waltzes. Make your predominate feature of this setting a light airiness which will in no way lead to serious thought. It is essentially an entertaining picture, and heavy stuff would be out of place. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS (Vitagraph)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Canzonetta"—Nicode, "The Flatterer"—Chaminade, or "Romance"—Mericanto.

Sweet music is what you will need for this feature. It has no great dramatic value, but is filled with heart throb stuff that must be strongly portrayed by the music. You will need no hurrys, etc., and it would be wise to stick to simple melodies principally denoting love. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

OTHER MEN'S DAUGHTERS (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Roma"—Edwards, "Souvenir"—Geebl, or "To a Star"—Leonard.

This feature is intensely dramatic and calls for big stuff in the line of music. Opening quietly with music suitable to a convent scene the picture carries us rapidly to a gay party held in the studio of the father of the heroine. Here you will need a two-step, and possibly a garish dance number would be more suitable. From that point the picture becomes very dramatic, and the following events are thrilling and filled with action. Use long numbers of the heavier type and see that they keep a smooth evenness in order that the attention of the patrons will not be detracted during the interesting portion of the picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

Leader's Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. In playing song orchestrations on the repeat where no D. S. or D. C. is given would you go back to the introduction or start again at the beginning of the verse?

A. In playing pictures it is always wise to omit all introductions. It gives more facility in securing and keeps the music more even. The introductions to song arrangements should never be played more than the first time, if at all. When you have played the number through make your repeat back to the beginning of the verse proper.

Q. Why do you consider organ accompaniments inappropriate for comedies?

A. The organ is a serious instrument noted mainly for its grandeur of quality and its depth of feeling. Its registers do not contain tones suitable to the frivolous music necessary in playing comedies. Speed is not one of the strong features of the playing of the instrument, and in order to "get over" the funny stuff many galops are frequently required. This class of music does not sound well from the organ. There are orchestral organs manufactured specially for picture playing that have all the necessary traps and special units for comedy playing. These meet every requirement needed for "funny" music.

Q. I have added "Educationals" to my program. What style of music do you consider best suited for them?

A. The old way of fitting scenics is passe. Waltzes no longer are found adequate. If you will turn to your back files of the Moving Picture World you will find an article dealing with this very subject on page 1093 of the issue of February 23, 1918. Although this matter did not receive the fullest possible treatment it will serve your needs for the present, and we will be glad to deal more fully with the subject if you encounter serious obstacles.

Q. Please give me a few suggestions for playing "death bed scenes." I have used "Asa's Tod" until it has become hackneyed, and I cannot seem to find anything else which will fit those sad scenes.

A. The number you mention is indeed very appropriate, and was written by Grieg for just such scenes. However, there is no need to search for a piece that specifically calls itself "death bed" music by title. Look for a slow andante pathetic and you will find many very adaptable selections. We suggest the following numbers as possible for deep grief.

"Adagio Cantabile".....Strauss
"The Last Hope".....Gottschalk
"A Keltic Lament".....Foulds
"Nocturne".....Krzyzanowski
"La Melancholie".....Prume
"Consolation".....Liszt

There are many others, but these will give you an idea of what to look for.

• • •

Q. Do you believe in the use of French horns in a combination of eight instruments?

A. We do not. They have no place in such a small orchestra.

Q. Many musicians today are asked to double saxaphone, cello-banjo, or banjorine. Are these instruments used in theater work, or only in dance orchestras?

A. They are only used in dance orchestras in order to gain a jazz effect. Some theaters have experimented with them to obtain a variety of color, but have found that they are not effective in serious selections. If you have musicians who can double on these instruments an excellent effect is practical in the playing of the cabaret scenes and dance halls.

Q. What is the ideal eight-piece combination for picture work?

A. Piano, harmonium, 2 violins, cello, flute, clarinet, tympani. If the acoustics of your house will not allow for drums you have the option of substituting a cornet, which should be always played softly.

Q. Will you be good enough to tell me the names of several misterioso numbers? The "Lizzie-on-the-Ice" stuff I've been using, is about played out. Also, please tell me a few good Jap numbers.

A. In the photoplay series of the following publishers will be found just what you are looking for in the way of Misteriosos: C. Fischer & Co., G. Schirmer, Inc., and Belwin, Inc., all of New York. The following list will suggest a variety of suitable Japanese selections:

"Veil Dance" (Ballet).....Friml
"Jap Tattoo" (March).....Lawrendeau
"Fuji Koe" (Intermezzo).....Shelley
"The Bombardment" (March).....Heed
"Japanese Reverie" (Andantino).....Bartlett
"The Kingdom of Flowers" (Valse).....Ringleban
"Poppies" (Romance).....Moret
"A Night in Japan" (Suite).....Brahm
"Japanese Sunset" (Meditation).....Zamanick

Q. What is the correct name for the big bass horn used in bands, and does it require more wind to play this instrument than one of smaller type?

A. It is called the "Tuba," and, although the blowing of it requires no great effect, it is somewhat difficult to master owing to the fact that its notes are written almost entirely below the bass staff. It is also a very heavy instrument to carry.

Q. Are musicians now used in transatlantic passenger service? If so, what is the average pay?

A. As there is little transatlantic service at present, and in view of the secrecy of departure few musicians are employed on the boats. In fact what music they have is obtained from a volunteer orchestra composed of ship-hands.

Q. With two violins in the orchestra which is composed of ten men, including piano, should both play in unison? What do you think of muted trumpets?

A. It largely depends upon what you are playing, as to whether it is best to have the two violins play in unison or not. A rousing march or fast number will be more effective with them in unison, while a slow and sweet selection can be better rendered if the violins be divided octavo. In pieces where the melody is marked sul G never divide them, as the added volume gives gratifying intensity. In such a small combination never use the "obligato violin" part. Sometimes the second violin can play cue notes of missing instruments with excellent results. Muted cornets are always effective in soft passages, and almost always can be counted upon to give variety. But don't overdo it. If cornets are muted continually the tone becomes monotonous and displeasing to the ears of your patrons.

Q. Can't you do something toward a better cue sheet than we have been getting from .....? There are so many "ad libs" in it that it is of little value as a musical suggestion.

A. Our aim in these columns of the Moving Picture World is to uplift the music in picture theaters, and we have devoted a great deal of mental and literary effort to articles pointing the way to film manufacturers. We cannot personally appeal to them to give better service lest we be accused of concealing an axe about our person which we wish to grind. You are in a position to write direct to the company, addressing your letter to the publicity department, and get quicker results than we can. The producer is trying to serve you, and if that service be inadequate he wants to know about it. Allow me to recommend that all leaders who have this difficulty confronting them make it their business to register their complaints with the proper authorities and not leave it for the "other fellow" to do. They seldom do it, and your problem remains unsolved.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

EARL K. METCALFE, screen actor of good repute, and now lieutenant in the ranks of Pershing's Crusaders, and, incidentally, a censor for the mail that goes and comes to the boys in his immediate vicinity, has devised a clever way to write and answer letters at one and the same time. Possessed of a mimeograph he has written "Forte Lines from France" under the title of "A Little Jig," and requests his correspondents to "try this on your piano."

George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World staff, having no piano here in the office, has turned over to RAMBLES his letter from France. Ahead of the signature Lieut. Metcalfe signs himself, "Yours till the Kaiser wears the Mahogany Kimona." Here's the letter so cleverly done:

1.—Your's received.
2.—I am glad,
3.—To have not received
4.—Would have made me sad.
5.—We're so busy, let me tell,
6.—Trying to send the Huns to—well?
7.—That I haven't time to answer mail,
8.—So I'll let the mimeograph tell the tale.
9.—So don't feel slighted or darn my name,
10.—Three Hundred others will get the same.
11.—I am happy, I am well,
12.—Haven't stopped a cannon shell.
13.—(Here I'll stop and rap on wood,
14.—For a "DUD" just dropped right where I stood.)
15.—The old mail system is not very good,
16.—So I don't hear from you as often as I should.
17.—My Lamb's Club pals are good at writing,
18.—And our Lambs over here are the same at fighting.
19.—Our Green Room boys and Screen Club, too,
20.—Are here "with bells on" helping you.
21.—Many actors here in the line
22.—Doing their bit and doing it fine.
23.—Men of every type and creed
24.—Here to answer the country's need.
25.—Our Yankee boys in fighting trim, will
26.—Tear the Kaiser limb from limb.
27.—The French all love our bunch of "Yanks."
28.—Please don't say "Sammie" that's right, thanks.
29.—We get good eats, we sleep all right,
30.—Which makes us anxious for a fight.
31.—I'll be coming back, I hope, some day
32.—To stroll on the W. K. Broadway.
33.—With knicks in my gun,
34.—And the helmet of a Hun,
35.—With the wife that I adore—
36.—I can wish for nothing more.
37.—This country sure is fine,
38.—And I know this thing don't rhyme.
39.—Write soon again,
40.—Good bye, Amen.

An English actor trying to escape from the "work or fight" order applied for an engagement at the World studio. He was ordered to report at nine the next morning. He did not show up until eleven thirty. He was told the job grew huffy, and would not wait for him. Not a bit perturbed the actor said:

"My word old tof. Really it's too bad. Nine o'clock! No gentlemen is about that early in the day. This is not an engagement. This is a punishment.

Some Unconventional Endings.

The following phrases have been used in ending sentences in publicity matter of recent vintage:

"She always kept her face veiled, but this only added to the mystery surrounding her."

"I'm going to the city, she said, slamming the door upon her mother's protests."

"The gorgeous beach costume of silk and satin remained safely encased in their tissue wrappings under Miss Brady's tonneau."

"Crowds of friends were at the station to brighten their departure."

"He had got a glimpse of Alice Brady's stylish bathing raiment and wanted to see more."

We shall try and assemble some better ones for later on.

The Diagnosis.—"Successful exhibitor" is the mother of "open bookings." "Successful exhibitor" has been carrying the load of program until he (she) insisted upon a more equitable method of business conduct, and, therefore, encouraged "state rights field" in business intercourse.

His Country or His Sister?

When Commodore J. Stuart Blackton started his production of "Missing," the fourth of his Paramount series, one of his all-star cast threatened to live up to the title of the film. This was little Charles Stuart Blackton.

When the producer informed his small son that his services would be drafted for "Missing," Charles Stuart was inclined to be a conscientious objector out of loyalty to his sister, Violet.

There was no part for a little girl in the play, but Charles Stuart protested anyway, feeling that his famous father was discriminating against "sister." After mature reflection, however, he decided that since these are war times when all must work he would abandon his temperament and seize the opportunity for additional war stamp revenue, which he did.

Slow, droll and experienced, as we remarked last week, Frank Mayo's gardener at the film player's suburban home is worthy of a second and final installment of wit for record in the archives.

In laying out a bed of purple flowers—violets and two or three sorts of heliotrope from a deep shade to a pale lavendar—he advised putting the "lavenderest at the nigh edge."

Speaking of his hard-working wife, who was taking a much-needed rest in a neighboring town, he said:

Referring to the death of a young man in the town and giving his idea of a fast life he said:

UNSUSPECTED BIOGRAPHIES. No. 3

(Drawn from Paramount-Artcraft Pep)

H. M. Owens.

By Morrie Ryskind.

According to data compiled by Charlie Fuhr, H.M. (which is supposed to stand for His Majesty) and Friend Wife (slang for the Queen) arrived in Atlanta on June 15, 1916. Atlanta has since made this a legal holiday.

The Owenses came from California's sunny clime, and they were merely marching through Georgia on a visit. Quite accidentally they met there C. E. Tandy, the celebrated Tandy Kid, who was general managing the S. A. Lynch enterprises, sole distributors for Paramount and Artcraft pictures for the eleven—count 'em, eleven—Southern states.

Owens liked Tandy; Tandy liked Owens.

"What are you doing tomorrow?" says Tandy.

"Oh, nothing much," says Owens.

"Well, how about becoming our traveling representative?" says Tandy.

"Why not?" says Owens.

There was no answer. So they went out and had a drink on it. We're not saying where, but if you know how, it's a cinch to drink even in Georgia.

Especially Vevo.

Or Dopa-Cola.

Owens made good with a bang. In two months he had risen from salesman to manager of the New Orleans office. Then he was promoted to manager of the Dallas Paramount office, which, under his management, now leads all Southern exchanges.

Owens has a good many facial expressions; he can be as serious as Bill Hart about to reform when the occasion demands; but to exhibitors he shows a smile broader than Fatty Arbuckle's.

He has several bad habits.

He keeps late hours.

Almost every night he is to be found at his desk outlining his method for the next day's attack on the Southern front. It is not an uncommon thing for Friend Wife to return from the theater, catch H. M. by the ear, and tote him home, telling him that he is injuring his health and her pride.

Secondly, he has a mania for speed.

He has made an exhibitor attach his name to a contract in three minutes flat, which is pretty close to a world's record. Then, too, he and Hartman, a well-known Dallas Paramount-Artcraft exhibitor, shoot the shutes every Sunday in a Marmon racer.

They have not run over anything yet, but expect to land something now that the open season is at hand. Ray Hitchcock's best wheeze in his 1918 show was stolen from an actual experience they had.

They ran over a bottle, destroying a new tire. They offered as excuse for their carelessness that they couldn't see the bottle, inasmuch as it was in the man's pocket.

It was a good bottle, too, being not more than half empty at the time of the catastrophe. The unidentified corpse is said to have left a widow and a brewery.

Canadian Distributors Alter Plans

Arrangements of Many Exhibitors Affected by Shift in Policy of Regal and Globe—"Hearts of the World" for Dominion.

IMPORTANT and far-reaching changes have been made by two of Canada's largest film distributors. The developments in each instance occurred simultaneously, and the new arrangements are affecting the plans of many exhibitors in the dominion for the coming twelve months.

Regal Films, Limited, with headquarters in Toronto, announced on July 13 that it would not handle either Goldwyn or Paralta pictures during the season of 1918-19. The company has already arranged, however, to release at least 289 other subjects, including regular features, comedies, special productions, serials and reissues. These pictures include 52 World pictures, 52 Metro features, 26 Triangle subjects, 26 Triangle reissues, 52 two-reel Keystone comedies, 26 two-reel Keystone reissues, 52 Sidney Drew comedies, 2 unnamed serials and 3 special seven-reel productions.

The Canadian releasing rights for Paralta pictures passes back to President A. Cohen, of Globe Films, Limited, Toronto, which concern was formerly actively engaged in the distribution of Paralta and other releases throughout the dominion. Mr. Cohen was not ready to announce his plans for the coming year at time of writing. It is also intimated that Goldwyn productions will be released in Canada by the Monarch Film Company along with other pictures.

The Regal company has adopted a graduated selling plan, whereby the exhibitor will pay less rental for pictures the more he takes. This is fully explained in an announcement booklet which has been prepared.

The company has six offices in Canada and these are being continued without change. These are located as follows: Toronto headquarters, Regal Building, 21 Adelaide street, West; Montreal, 31 McGill College avenue; St. John, N. B., 67 Dock street; Winnipeg, Manitoba, 445 Main street; Calgary, Alberta, 414 McLean Block; Vancouver, British Columbia, 404 Orpheum Block.

At the time of the announcement the Regal Films, Limited, still had four more Goldwyn pictures to release, and these were scheduled to be shown first in Toronto at the Regent theater, which is controlled by the Regal interests.

"Hearts of the World" Comes to Canada.

The second big news release on July 13 was the announcement that Jules and J. J. Allen, proprietors of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, and also Canadian exhibitors on a large scale had secured the Canadian rights for D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World." The first release in the dominion will be to the Allen theater, Toronto, where it will be shown from Saturday, July 27, to August 27, after which it will be put into Massey Hall, Toronto's largest auditorium, for the two weeks of the Canadian National Exhibition, August 27 to September 7. This will give it a straight first run of six solid weeks, according to expectations, an unheard of arrangement for Toronto.

The whole policy of the Allen theater will be changed for the presentation of "Hearts of the World." Instead of a continuous performance each day two distinct shows will be given daily, and every seat in the theater will be reserved for each performance. General admissions for evening performances will range up to $1, with box seats $1.50. Matinee prices will be 25, 50 and 75 cents, with box seats $1. Massey Hall has a seating capacity of over 4,000, and similar prices will be charged in that auditorium during the two weeks of the great annual Canadian fair in Toronto, when thousands of visitors are in the city. During the more recent years the attraction at Massey Hall during exposition time has been either "The Birth of a Nation" or "Intolerance."

It is also interesting to note that Jules and J. J. Allen have also acquired the Canadian rights for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," both of which have been presented as road shows in many cities and towns of the dominion. It is understood that the Allens will rent both of these features to exhibitors who can charge a 25-cent admission to their houses.

The Allens announce that their new, large theaters in Edmonton, Regina, Toronto, Westmount and Lachine will be ready for opening early in the fall. The new house at Regina, which will be called the Allen theater, will seat about 1,200 people. The new theater at Westmount, which is an adjunct of Montreal, Quebec, will also be known as the Allen theater. The new theater in Toronto will be known as Allen's Bloor Street theater to distinguish it from the Allen theater and Allen's Beaver theater, which are both located in Toronto. The Allens already have the Monarch theater in Edmonton, Alberta, and the new house there will also be known by the title of Allen theater. Their chain of up-to-the-minute theaters in Canada extends almost across the continent. These houses will undoubtedly have first run of "Hearts of the World" for the respective centers.

No Let-Up In Lexington's Sunday Battle

Citizens and Press Lining Up—Difficulties Encountered in Securing Jury to Try Cases.

THE Sunday closing fight in Lexington, Ky., is going along at a merry clip. The city is crowding to the banners of the exhibitors and the churchmen and making ready for a young battle upon the subject, while the press of Lexington and surrounding territory is busily engaged in winging broadside editorials.

Cases against the three exhibitors recently charged with violations were to have been heard on Saturday, July 13, but trouble arose in securing a jury because the men had formed or expressed opinions on the subject. The case of the Berryman Realty Company, operating the Ben Ali theater, was the first on docket. Alfred Combs, chairman of the Laymen's Committee, testified that he saw tickets sold at the theater on Sunday, July 6. James Todd, acting manager of the theater, testified that he presented a show on the date named. The case went no further and was postpond until a jury could be secured. Clay Rush and Wood Dunlap testified they attended the show.

It is believed that with a jury trial the theaters will have a fair chance to come out on top, as it would be a hard matter to secure a jury that would oppose Sunday shows.

Notwithstanding the fact that every theater in the city is under charge of violating the old blue laws the theaters ran wide open on Sunday, July 14, when the churchmen were again busy taking evidence and of names of those attending.

In the meantime the Ben Ali theater is running announcements in the paper and coupon ballots, with a ballot box at the entrance of the theater. Ballots are also being received by mail, and an effort made to obtain the public's viewpoint.

Corporation Counsel Denny has advised Mayor Rogers and the commissioners that the Court of Appeals has not definitely set forth what essential work on the Sabbath is and that it will be necessary for the high court to decide such issues before the city can conveniently close all Sunday operations in event the theaters are closed. Mayor Rogers expects to close the town generally in event the theaters are closed.

A warrant sworn out for John B. Elliott, of the Phoenix Amusement Company, was served on Robert Elliott by Constable I. J. Trisler, who stated that Robert Elliott agreed to deliver it. However the latter had his attorney return the warrant with a notice that Robert Elliott had no stock in the Phoenix and was not connected with it in any way.

Alfred Combs, of the Laymen's Committee, stated that the committee had twenty-five or more witnesses when the case was called and has since secured many additional ones.

After the case against the Berryman concern is disposed of the churchmen plan to proceed against the Phoenix and J. H. Stamper of the Orpheum.

WORLD PICTURES ENGAGES AUSTRALIAN ACTRESS.

World Pictures announces the engagement for an important part in a forthcoming production of Margaret Lindon, a well-known Australian actress, who came to this country a year or so ago and attained prominence through her performance of the role of Julie Draper in "The Three Bears" at the Empire theater, New York. In Australia Miss Lindon appeared in a number of big productions in stellar roles for J. C. Williamson, the foremost Australian producer. Among these productions were "Madam X," "Stop Thief," "Camille," "The Fortune Hunter" and "Sandy."

National A. E. A. Convention Date Set

Hotel Sherman Secured for Meeting Which Will be Held Sept. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH was in Chicago Friday and Saturday, July 19 and 20, to work with the convention committee of the American Exhibitors' Association in the completion of the arrangements for the national convention, which will be held at the Hotel Sherman, September 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7.

Permanent headquarters, until after the convention is over, have been opened up at this hotel, the arrangements having been made Tuesday, July 16, by Louis H. Frank, chairman of the convention committee. The entire second floor and part of the mezzanine floor have been reserved for the exclusive use of convention visitors during the run of the convention.

The national directors will make every endeavor to have this convention a meeting for all branches of the trade, including producers, distributors, exhibitors and supply men, etc. The convention will be open at all times to the various branches of the trade, and a regular fixed program covering all departments will be arranged, in which members of the trade are expected to participate.

Samuel Atkinson, an intelligent and prominent exhibitor, of Evanston, Ill., will be the permanent platform manager while the convention lasts, and he will introduce the various speakers.

The first four days of the convention will be conducted on the order of a Chatauqua meeting, during which prominent men in the industry will be asked to address the meetings on any subject pertaining to the uplift of the moving picture business.

The present plan is to have all visitors and other workers in the industry partake of lunch every day at noon, during the run of the convention.

Full particulars will be given weekly in the Moving Picture World, under the foregoing heading, until the convention opens.

Texas Managers Meet in Galveston

Association Departs from Precedent and Elects Exchangeman to Office—Levy Is President.

THE Texas Amusement Managers' Association, with a general membership of motion picture exhibitors from all parts of the state, held its mid-summer convention at Galveston July 10-12. Besides transacting an imposing amount of business there was found plenty of time for fun and frolic on the beach.

The meeting, which was well attended, developed a feature which is an innovation in the annals of Texas exhibitors' conferences. This was the election of Lewis B. Remy, Goldwyn manager of Dallas, as secretary of the association. Never before has any southern organization of exhibitors elected a film exchangeman to official position. The honor came to Mr. Remy through his state-wide popularity and good fellowship.

The full list of officers elected was: President, P. C. Levy, of the Hippodrome and Strand theaters, Fort Worth, succeeding E. H. Hulsey of Dallas; vice-president, C. J. Mussellman, of the Grand theater, Paris; treasurer, Herschel Stewart, Old Mill theater, Dallas, and secretary, L. B. Remy.

Sessions of the convention were held in the spacious parlors of the Hotel Galvez, fronting the sea wall. S. T. MacDonald, A. Martini and Jean Finley composed the entertainment committee for Galveston, and saw that the visitors had an interesting time. There was not a regret expressed over the fact that Galveston a few weeks ago went permanently on the "water wagon" owing to the state-wide dry law. The next convention point will be selected later by officers of the association.

Among the visiting exhibitors were: S. P. Von Phul, Dallas; John Paxton, Paris; Paul Baraca, Houston; W. J. Lytle, San Antonio; J. C. Clemens, Beaumont; E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company, E. W. Blankenbecker of Houston and many others.

BLACK RE-ELECTED MAINE PRESIDENT.

The Maine State League held a largely attended meeting at the Elmwood Hotel, Waterville, Tuesday, July 2. Much important business for the best interests of the exhibitors of Maine was transacted. Bernard P. Arons, formerly assistant to Bert Adler in the latter's publicity business and cashier of the Pathe Park avenue studios, writes from Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Florida, where he is in the quartermaster's department, that he expects to "go over" any day. Meanwhile he would like to hear from his motion picture friends, who can address him care of Supply Company 315, Barracks K-4, Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Florida.

JOHN G. ADOLPHI MAKES A DENIAL.

First National Takes "Tarzan" Sequel

At Meeting of Circuit Directors Purchase Is Also Made of Seven-Part Italian War Subject.

THE most important meeting of the directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that has been held in some months took place during the three days of July 16, 17 and 18 at the circuit headquarters in New York. The directors present included Robert Lieber, president, Indianapolis; Walter Hays, Buffalo; H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; Aaron J. Jones, Chicago; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas, and J. D. Williams, manager. The directors met to perfect plans for the coming season and to take action upon the ratification of important contracts and the purchase of several big productions which had been pending for several weeks.

A contract was signed with the National Film Corporation of America, giving the circuit exclusive right to distribute the sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes." William Parsons, president of the company which produced this important feature, appeared personally before the directors and also arranged for a special showing of the film before the deal was completed.

H. O. Schwalbe, who took an active hand in the arrangements on behalf of the circuit, spoke as follows after the contract had been approved: "I have every confidence that this picture will make box-ffice history in the same way that 'Tarzan of the Apes' did. Every exhibitor who was wise enough to book the remarkable production of which this is a sequel will find that his patrons will be glad to ratify his good judgment. In all my experience as an exhibitor and an associate of exhibitors I never came across a production with more unique angles for box office appeals than 'Tarzan of the Apes.' It has been one of the big reasons for the general satisfaction apparent among First National franchise holders during the current season. Every house that has shown 'Tarzan' will welcome the news that the picture will be ready for release within a few weeks."

Another important business transaction was signalized by the directors with the outright purchase of the seven-reel official Italian war picture from the Italo-North American Commercial Union. This most artistic and dramatic of film studies of the European war was recently shown in serial installments at one of the leading Broadway theaters and aroused widespread comment. It will be released in its full seven-reel form by the circuit under the title of "Italy's Flaming Front."

"Lieutenant M. M. Prochet, acting as one of the representatives of the Italian War Commission, from whom we purchased this film, has informed me that of the twelve cameramen who made the scenes in 'Italy's Flaming Front' two were killed outright and five decorated for bravery in the course of the day's work," said Mr. Hulsey. "One could well believe this fact in looking at that part of the picture where the Austrian bullets are seen tearing up the ground and splintering the parapets of the Italian trenches in the immediate foreground, or observing the details of the complete aerial battle fought with the Austrian airmen, where bombs are seen exploding all about the battleships on the ocean below.

"With this great picture and Chaplin's new war comedy as a running mate on the same program I believe all First National exhibitors are asssured of many wonderfully profitable weeks."

Several other important production and distribution deals were taken up by the directors, complete details of which will shortly be forthcoming.

Found Musician in Theater Manager

Visitor to Rochester's Rialto Discovers in A. N. Wolff One-Time Western Orche ra Leader.

LLOYD HUTSELL came into Rochester, N. Y., the other day and made a discovery. He happened to be standing in front of the Rialto theater talking to another man when his attention was attracted to a figure entering the house. He pointed to the figure and told a story of how a few years ago he had seen the figure of the same man, then the director of a large orchestra in one of the leading theaters of the West. It seems that on the night he visited the western house he was charmed by a violin solo, "The Last Rose of Summer," as played by the leader. Now he recognized the same leader in Rochester and followed him into the Rialto to greet him and found him to be no less than A. N. Wolff, manager of the Rialto and president of the Rochester Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Wolff admitted the story to be truthful and talked over old times with his visitor. He even reached behind the office safe and brought to light his violin, now in disuse, with all but one string broken. In Mr. Wolff is easily recognized the soul of an artist, and it is shown to a great extent in the handsome and artistic theater he conducts and in which he daily caters to a most discriminating audience. He says that in his musical career he worked hard to keep up his technique, but that so few people appreciate or understand music that he left that realm to enter fields where his labors enriched him to greater extent.

KENNETH R. EDDY BUSY MAN IN "SOO."

Not all of the motion picture industry centers around Longacre Square as we are frequently reminded, a late instance of the fact being disclosed in the activities of Kenneth R. Eddy, general factotum of the Chippewa Film Company of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. There is nothing in the line of picture production that balks Mr. Eddy from copies and stills to photoplays complete.

Just now Cloverland Screen Magazine is touring the picture theaters in Upper Michigan, produced by Mr. Eddy for a Menominee (Mich.) concern. Its subject is local to Michigan, dealing with the War Conference held in Escanaba in which Gov. Sleeper and state officials took prominent part. Mr. Eddy is now working on exploitation reels for the Upper Peninsula Development Bureau, featuring and advertising the grazing lands in that section of Michigan.

And just to fill in his odd moments Mr. Eddy is editing a "movie page" for Cloverland Magazine. He relates his film concern is named after the county in which "The Soo" is located, adding that Chippewa means a good Indian. We consider Mr. Eddy a "Chippewa."

SEVEN MORE STARS FOR GENERAL FILM FLAG.

Seven additional stars have been added to General Film Company's service flag in recent weeks. Cincinnati employes who have entered the service are James Boston and William Redmond, former shipping clerks; James B. Neff, booker, and John Pfeifer, assistant booker. James R. Beale, booker at the Cleveland exchange, enlisted in the Navy and has been sent to the Great Lakes training station.

Daniel O'Brien, of the Boston office, has enlisted in the merchant marine, while W. L. Jennings, of the same office, has enrolled as a Y. M. C. A. hut secretary and will sail shortly for France.

Fred Flarity, formerly manager of the General's Buffalo and Albany exchanges, is a member of Company 5, Fourth Training Engineers' Regiment, stationed at Camp Humphreys, Va., where he is working hard for a commission.

ALEXANDER WITH SHERRY ON COAST.

William Alexander, who had considerable to do with the establishment of the Fox booking system in Great Britain, has been appointed district manager for the William L. Sherry Service on the coast, with exchanges at Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle under his direction. All three branches, he says, are finely equipped and have secured a lot of business in the four weeks they have been organized. This includes first runs in all the principal cities of the coast. The Doris Kenyon and Catharine Calvert productions have gone over big, is Alexander's report.

BINNEY SIGNS CONTRACT WITH SHERRY.

Harold J. Binney announces he has signed a contract with the William L. Sherry Service for the making of six pictures a year for five years. Mr. Binney says he has decided to give up the production of comedies and to confine his attention in the future to full-fledged five-reelers, with the best obtainable stories and a cast of well-known players. It is to the gathering of the actors and a strong technical staff that the producer is now bending his efforts.

LILLIAN WALKER STARTS WORK.

Lillian Walker is at work on the first of the Lillian Walker Productions, "The Embarrassment of Riches," by Louis K. Anspacher. Chicago to Have Censorship Commission

Joint Committee of Citizens and Aldermen Will Draft Ordinance for Moving Picture Censorship.

AT a meeting of the judiciary committee of the City Council, held Thursday afternoon, July 18, which was attended by many representatives of civic societies, church organizations and clubs, it was determined that a join committee of citizens and aldermen should be named by Alderman Kerner, chairman of the judiciary committee, to draw up an ordinance for moving picture censorship.

The original object of this meeting was to consider the revised Maypole ordinance and the amendment thereto, but a Tribune editorial of that morning suggesting the appointment of a censorship commission to find out just what kind of censorship the city should have, was read by Alderman Maypole, after the judiciary committee had convened, and this led to the unanimous adoption of the following resolution, made by Alderman Maypole:

Whereas, The city council of Chicago and its judiciary committee have given a great deal of time and serious consideration to the question of proper censorship of moving pictures, and it having appeared to this committee that there is a great divergence of view relative to this important question, and to the end that the question be given the fullest consideration, and the city council receive the benefit of the best thought in the city on this question, be it

Resolved, That this committee authorize its chairman to name a committee of fifteen, between and as many aldermen as are deemed necessary to be fully representative of the citizenship of Chicago as may be possible, said committee to be requested to meet during the summer vacation and to recommend back to this committee such suggestions to be incorporated in a revision of the censorship ordinance as to that committee may seem desirable of the censorship problem.

Stern Measures by Luthardt

For First Offense in Breach of Ordinance Governing Permits He Will Revoke Offending Exhibitor's License.

THE following letter to theater owners of Chicago has been sent out by Acting Second Deputy Superintendent of Police W. H. Luthardt:

You are hereby notified that all ordinances relative to the exhibition of moving picture films will be strictly enforced by this department.

Where moving picture films are leased or transferred and are not accompanied by the necessary permits or in which eliminations ordered have not been made, the film will be confiscated and suit started against the film exchange and also the theater.

Where minors are admitted to a theater during the exhibition of a picture for which an adult only permit has been issued, action of the most drastic nature will be started. Not only will suit be filed against the theater, but when the offense is a condition of a serious nature, a recommendation will be made for the revocation of the amusement license of the theater.

Film exchanges were also notified by the acting second deputy as follows:

You are hereby notified that all ordinances relative to the exhibiting of moving picture films without the necessary permit or permits will be strictly enforced.

Where our investigators find violations of the ordinances relative to the leasing or transferring of moving picture films for which no permits have been procured, or the necessary permits do not accompany same, or eliminations as ordered by the Board of Censors have not been made, suits will be started immediately and vigorously prosecuted.

If the records of this department show that you have offended previously in this regard or the violations are serious, the permits will be revoked and the films taken up.

Acting Second Deputy Luthardt says that in sending out these notifications he is only protecting himself, and he announces that he will recommend the revocation of a theater license upon the first conviction. This course will be much more drastic than that followed by Major Funkhouser, who never recommended the revocation of a license for the first offense.

Evidently Acting Second Deputy Luthardt intends to show by his policy that his little finger will be thicker than Major Funkhouser's loin.

Funkhouser Trial Drags Along.

No, the trial of Major Funkhouser has not yet closed, as was expected in my last article on this matter, and there is no telling when it will. Owing to the great opposition met by counsel for the defense in getting certain evidence admitted by the civil service commission board, Mr. Miller has threatened to take the case into the courts after the board has finished its work. This would mean an almost interminable period, and the people are already tired of the proceedings.

Major Funkhouser had two strong witnesses during the past week—former First Deputy Westbrook and Dr. Graham Taylor, the latter a teacher, a settlement worker and publicist. The former first deputy testified that "Major Funkhouser was honest, efficient and active in his duties, and a great help to the police department in suppressing vice."

Dr. Taylor is an acknowledged authority on vice conditions in Chicago, having devoted twenty-four years to the work, and he bore testimony that the major's vice work was efficient. He backed his evidence by the police records themselves.

Another important witness, Samuel P. Thrasher, superintendent of the committee of fifteen, who for twenty-two years has studied police and moral conditions at close hand in Connecticut and three years in Chicago, testified that Major Funkhouser was "remarkably efficient." It required an hour to get this opinion on the record, owing to the policy of President Frazier to limit the testimony of outside experts. Mr. Thrasher stated that Major Funkhouser had too many things to look after and had succeeded remarkably well under his handicaps.

It is expected that no less than eighteen reformers will soon testify to Major Funkhouser's character and to his discharge of the duties of his office as second deputy. This will take quite a time, so no one at present can forsee the end of the trial.

The following excerpts from a Tribune editorial of July 19 show the present status of Major Funkhouser in the attempt made to depose him:

Witnesses whose purpose is not impeachable, whose judgment is good, whose opportunities of careful observation are numerous, and whose work for good public service is recognized, say for Major Funkhouser, at his hearing, that not only were his services in the suppression of vice sincerely and effectively given, but that the police organization needs just such a supplementary system of check and control in the handling of the vice situation.

We believe that Major Funkhouser, an aggravation as a censor of any kind of artistic expression, was doing able and effective work in an endeavor which almost defies any one to do successful work. That is the opinion of men and women whose opportunities of judging his work have been excellent.

The large idea in the police management which led to the attempt to get rid of him has not been made apparent. A low-minded person might even suspect that the intent was to rid the force of an activity useful to the city, but embarrassing to the public.

"Young America" Nearing Completion.

All the interior settings of "Young America" have been finished out at the Essanay studios and the exterior views are now in progress. These exteriors are being taken in advantageous spots in and around Chicago. It is expected that this seven-reel feature will be finished in about two weeks.

Praise for Rothacker Tinting and Toning.

President Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, recently received the following flattering letter from an official of the Petrova Picture Company: "Permit me to compliment your organization on the excellent work done in the printing of 'Tempered Steel,' our fourth Petrova production. This print is beautiful in its smoothness and contains many fine examples on the art of tinting and toning."

efficiently that Joe Brandt, general sales manager of Universal, selected him to replace F. W. Barlet, who has held the position for the past year. Mr. Barlet has joined the staff of Mr. McGowen in the New York office.

Crowded houses were the rule on the date mentioned.

Resurrection of Chicago F. I. L. M. Club.

The old F. I. L. M. Club has been resurrected in Chicago for the purpose of solving certain problems which have arisen in film renting. Several meetings were held during the past two weeks, at which exchange men thrashed out some unfavorable conditions in this branch of the trade.

The results of the meetings have been so beneficial in combating certain abuses that it is deemed wise by the members to revive the regular sessions, as in the past. Meetings will be held henceforth in the College Inn, on the first and third Tuesday of every month.

While the main object of the organization is one of business, it will be planned to introduce at times entertaining and social features during the season. An entertainment committee, accordingly, has been formed for that purpose.

Metro's Kaiser Picture Very Popular.

"To Hell with the Kaiser" finished a most successful run of two weeks at the Playhouse, Michigan Avenue, Saturday, July 20. This war feature has a remarkable punch and holds spectators in thrall. It arouses great enthusiasm, which finds vent in prolonged applause at times. The admissions at the Playhouse were 25 and 50 cents. A two weeks' run at the Boston Theater, Madison street, started Sunday, July 21.

Headquarters will be made in Cody, to which point Milton Sills, new leading man for Miss Farrar, and the old Selig favorite, Thomas Santchi, are heading from Los Angeles. Tom Santschi will always be remembered for his fine work in "The Spoilers" and "The Crisis."

Rembusch, national secretary and treasurer of the Association, made the arrangements personally. The closing day, September 6, will be marked by a grand ball, at least that is the present expectation.

Carolina White Plays Leads for Caruso

Handsome Singer from Concert and Opera Selected to Support Italian Tenor.

CAROLINA WHITE, famous on the opera and concert stage, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear opposite Enrico Caruso in his initial Artcraft picture. Miss White is a Boston girl, and made her debut as an opera singer in the San Carlos Opera House at Naples, Italy, in 1910.

Carolina White.

She was engaged later by the Chicago Opera Company, where she created the role of "Minnie" in "The Girl of the Golden West." in 1912 she created, at the Metropolitan Opera House, the roles entrusted to her in "The Secret of Suzanne" and "The Jewels of the Madonna," the latter having scored one of the greatest successes of modern Italian opera.

Associated with the Chicago Opera Company for six years Miss White has also traveled extensively, with the result that she is prominently known as a most successful concert singer throughout the country. She is a striking brunette, and at all times is taken for an Italian, although an American by birth. Her appearance in the Caruso production will further enhance the box-office value of this wonderful attraction, in which the internationally famous tenor makes his motion picture debut.

The important work of staging the first Caruso picture will be in the hands of Edward Jose, well known in the trade as one of the most capable directors in the Famous Players-Lasky organization. The initial plans for the production of Mr. Caruso's film vehicle are now well under way, and a great surprise is promised by the producers when the nature of the story in which he will appear is announced.

O'BRIEN TO RETURN TO STAGE IN FALL.

Eugene O'Brien, leading man for Norma Talmadge, will return to the speaking stage early in the fall, when he will be seen in the leading male role in the Charles Dillingham production, opening at one of the Broadway theaters.

Mr. O'Brien is perhaps better known on the speaking stage than in the silent drama, having appeared in some of the biggest Broadway productions during the past seven or eight years. Recently he has forsaken the stage for work before the camera, and has been seen in all of Miss Talmadge's productions for the past year. He will work in the next three pictures to be produced by Miss Talmadge before taking up his work in the forthcoming Dillingham production.

Mme. Petrova in Los Angeles

Actress Faces Big Houses at Tally's, Sells $5,000 in War Stamps and Sees Chaplin Work.

MME. OLGA PETROVA arrived in Los Angeles on the evening of Monday, July 8, and departed on Tuesday for San Francisco, the next stop on the six weeks' transcontinental tour she is making in behalf of the Government's War Stamp campaign.

Mme. Petrova made two speeches to overflow audiences at Tally's Broadway theater on Monday night and a third appearance and address at the Tuesday matinee performance. The actress was greeted with overwhelming enthusiasm and applause, and five thousand dollars worth of stamps were sold as the result of her appeal, an appeal that was delivered with a force and character that moved her hearers to tears and laughter and left every one who heard her with an indelible impression of her earnestness.

Mme. Petrova spoke with a perceptible accent that in no way interfered with the understanding of her speech, but rather added a delightful piquancy to her remarks. She told in simple words of the purpose of her mission and the Government's need of money to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

T. L. Tally, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, entertained Mme. Petrova, her business manager, Robert North, and a party of friends at a luncheon at the Beverly Hills Hotel on Tuesday, after which a sightseeing trip was made to several film studios, and the actress was enabled to gratify a desire she has had for many years when she watched Charles Chaplin rehearse and work out a comedy scene.

The plans call for some eighteen buildings that will be grouped in the form of a quadrangle; and the glass inclosed stages, laboratories, projection rooms, dressing rooms and the equipment will be of the most complete and improved kind. All the Ince companies will be moved to Culver City as soon as the new studios are completed. The site selected for the studio is about half a mile nearer to Los Angeles than the Triangle studios.

The Los Angeles office is the twenty-first exchange opened by Mr. Sherry in the United States in the last thirty days. Old Time Songs a Hit at Grauman's.

Sid Grauman introduced a few old fashioned songs, such as "Sally of Our Alley," "Sidewalks of New York," "He's Me Pal," and others into the musical program of the Grauman theater a few weeks ago, and ever since he has been flooded with requests for more old-time songs. The genial Sid is nothing if not accommodating, and this week lovers of the popular melodies of a few years ago are delighting in "Mister Dooley," "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," "Bedelia," "Always in the Way," "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," "A Bird in the Gilded Cage" and others.

Los Angeles Exhibitors Want Girl Operators.

The Los Angeles Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, at a meeting held on July 10, gave official indorsement to a plan of instructing women to operate projecting machines, to take the places of men who have gone to war. The association voted to open an operators' school especially for women and girls, on Olive street between Eighth and Ninth, with Leo Ryan in charge.

A complete course in the projection of motion pictures will be given at a nominal sum, and the successful graduate will immediately obtain work, replacing the men who have gone to war in positions paying from $20 to $30 a week.

"We need fifty women operators as soon as possible," says Ryan, "for many theaters are facing the possibility of being forced to close because of the shortage of good operators. Women can easily hold jobs of this kind, and we will give them every opportunity to make good."

Women Ushers for Theaters.

Women ushers are coming to be familiar sights in the theaters of Los Angeles. The management of the Orpheum theater, leading vaudeville house of the city, engaged eleven women ushers on July 13, giving preference to the wives of men in service, as recommended by the Soldiers and Sailors' Welfare Commission.

M. Gore, manager of the Gore Enterprise theaters, is also "The Triangle Western company has noted with real pleasure that you are a candidate to succeed yourself as sheriff and the members are taking this occasion to tell you of the high esteem in which you are held by us. Southern California is the real west. You are a westerner, a pioneer in Los Angeles, and we feel that a true westerner should be retained in office."

Ten Comedies a Year for Fatty.

The Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle comedies have proved so successful in the past months as box office attractions that the number of productions have been increased from eight to ten a year, according to plans announced by the Comique Film Corporation, of which Joseph M. Schenck is president and Roscoe Arbuckle vice-president. Arbuckle will hereafter dispense with his usual week's vacation between pictures, and upon completing a comedy, will immediately begin on a new production. Fatty would also like to "discover" an author who can write suitable comedies for him.

Peacocke, well-known dramatist and photoplaywright, gave a performance of a playlet written by himself called "Sacrilege," for the British Ambulance Society at a downtown hotel in Los Angeles last week. Film Stars to Entertain Jackies.

At a benefit being arranged to take place soon for the Athletic Fund of the Submarine Base near Los Angeles by the Motion Picture War Service Association a number of film stars will assist in the entertainment by appearing in vaudeville numbers, patriotic tableaus, skits and dances. Among the hundred stars and players expected to lend their aid are Mary Pickford, George Beban and Bryant Washburn.

Ince Boys Theatrical Producers.

The three young sons of Thomas H. Ince staged a Red Cross benefit in the Ince gardens in Hollywood recently with nearly a hundred children of the neighborhood as performers. Young Bill Ince, ten years old, rehearsed and directed the children, and displayed much of the genius of his father along dramatic lines. The Ince youngsters prevailed upon their father to lend them costumes and properties for the occasion, and after the dramatic performance was given, a motion picture was made of the play.

Advance Agents of World Democracy.

Lieutenant Tom Forman dropped in on Los Angeles and Hollywood friends recently. Lieut. Forman enlisted as a private more than a year ago, and received his commission last month. Forman will be remembered as the popular Lasky leading man.

Gus Peterson, of the Triangle camera squad, leaves soon to attend the United States School of Cinematography at Columbia University, having been accepted by Uncle Sam as an ultimate war photographer.

Four men from the electrical department at Universal City have gone to war; Joseph Giltech, James Tait, Charles Monroe and C. Bartwell. Douglas Gerrard, Universal director, is a recruit at the Hollywood Officers' Training School.

John Hays and Haig Prieste, Mack Sennett comedians, have enlisted in the submarine service.

Larry Peyton, of Universal, has left for France.

Tom Kennedy, Mack Sennett comedian, formerly a heavyweight boxer, has been asked by the War Department to set aside his motion picture career for a time and engage in the work of instructing the boys at one of the Army camps the art of pugilism. Tom has signed up to go anywhere Uncle Sam sees fit.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Personally Conducted by Giebler.

LADIES and Gentlemen, our itinerary today will include slapstick comedy studios, and you will be allowed to inspect the inside workings of the fun factories we visit, a privilege, I assure you, that is accorded to few—but with the understanding that whatever you see will be kept a profound secret and never be divulged to a living soul!

There was a time when visitors were admitted to the comedy studios without restraint. But some of those visitors, Ladies and Gentlemen, were wolves in sheeps' clothing. They violated the child-like confidence reposed in them by the comedy producers. They carried the news of what they saw in one studio to other studios. You can imagine the result.

A producer who was filming a comedy that he planned to be a veritable masterpiece because of the fact that two dozen pies were used in the action was shocked and staggered to learn that a rival was going him one dozen pies better in a side-splitter he was turning out.

A consultation was hurriedly called, and six dozen pies were written in the play by the scenario writer. But it was all in vain. A miserable miscreant carried the news to the competitor, and when the two comedies were released the rival production had a full gross—twelve dozen pies of mixed materials, including gooseberry, cocoanut cream, and custard!

A bitter rivalry ensued. Other producers took up the fight. The pastry cooks began demanding that their names be put on the screen in equal prominence with the star's. If the food conservation laws had not come along and put a stop to it the future could only have been contemplated with a shudder.

This, Ladies and Gentlemen, is the place where Mack Sennett makes his comedies. On this spot it was that the brave little band of pioneers composed of Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, and Ford Sterling, the "forty-niners of the films," after their hard and arduous journey over the plains and deserts, set up their camera and began making Keystone comedies.

The first building of this plant did not contain as much lumber as was used in the erection of the present animal house and zoo of the studio.

Now look at it. The immense building in which we now stand, the large and commodious structure across the street, the edifices on yonder hill are all necessary for the work of the four companies grinding out comedies.

The large tank on this stage is to be the scene of a water stuff comedy. The ladies grouped on the other side of the pool ready to plunge into its pellucid depths are Louise Fazenda, Vera Steadman, and Marvel Rae.

Seven trained seals, a pelican, and Ford Sterling, who has just returned to this studio after a long absence, will also be in the comedy. The pelican, who sits brooding in yonder cage, is named Percival. This is Percival's first appearance before any camera.

Here we have a scene with Charles Murray, Al McKinnon, and Myrtle Lind. The gentleman looking on, although you would never suspect it, is Chester Conklin. Ches is not the same looking person without his walrus mustache, is he? Mr. Conklin, as well as being an actor, is also a rancher, and is engaged in the culture of the toothsome bean in his leisure time.

On the hill above are various sets used in Sennett comedies. To the left you will see the Western village where the famous Sheriff Nell stories were staged. To the right, the zoo, where are confined a bear, a collection of white rats, a number of rabbits, a half dozen dogs, a large brunette goat named William, Mrs. Pepper, the famous comedy cat about whom there is a scandal, and her six kittens.

All of these animals are trained and able to register their various emotions before the camera as well as many human actors, William, the goat, being very strong in all of his work.

As we proceed to our next stop a few words on the slapstick comedy will not be amiss. Slapstick comedies are so called because of the part played in their early development by the slapstick, an ingenious contrivance invented by Wm. Shakespeare when he was managing a little theater called the Globe in Hounditch, a neighborhood that was the 42d and Broadway of London at that time.

The slapstick is made by fastening two barrel staves together, and is used by applying it in a violent manner to the person of a comedian immediately below the pistol pocket on his north side when he is gazing in a southerly direction. A loud snapping noise is produced, which never fails to cause roars of laughter.

The slapstick was introduced to the movies along with other of the finer and subtler technique of the regular stage at an early day.

There are two distinct kinds of movie comedies, the parlor or polite comedy, and the slapstick; and while there are many people of the so-called high brow persuasion who profess to dislike the slapsticks there is no doubt of their filling a long felt want and an important place on any movie program.

Indeed, there are millions of people who heartily agree with the well known maker of this brand of films who said, "Our comedies are not to be laughed at."

Here we are at the studios where the well known L-Ko comedies are produced. Three large companies of comedians are employed at this modern gizzle works to say nothing of Hughie Mack, who is large enough—and a great many people think funny enough—to form an entire company all by himself.

The somewhat heavy set gentleman walking across the lot is Hughie. Various native sons and other Californians engaged in boosting the climate have tried to get Hughie to state that his present robust physique is a result of our beneficent weather, but Hughie says that California, while a most charming state, has added nothing to his avordupois, and he has pictures taken before he came West to prove it. Hughie is loyal to the salubrious Flatbush district of Brooklyn, his one-time native heath.

The slender young man approaching is Eddie Berry. The strange thing Eddie is wearing is a corset, but, as you will observe, he does not hide it as many of our young men of fashion do. Eddie wears his corset with frankness and abandon on the outside of his clothes. Yes, Lady, comedians do indeed some strange and weird things.

The man in the wide hat with Eddie is Director Charles Parrott. They are talking over a comedy, or, in studio parlance, "doping out gags."

We will now cross the lot to where you see the workmen putting the finishing touches and the chimney of property bricks on the small building. Here you will see one of the most thrilling sights of movie making. You hear much of the death defying chances taken by the dramatic movie makers, but little of the daring things that are done to make people laugh.

Cast your eye on the lady in the car. What woman would consent to appear before the thirty million of people who attend the picture shows of this broad, fair land of ours wearing a hat like that if she were not made of the stuff of which heroines are composed?

In addition to this daring stunt the lady in the car, who is none other than Alice Howells, will drive the car straight through the walls of the little brown house.

The man with the worried look is Director James Davis, called Jimmie by those who know him well. Jimmie is afraid something may happen to Alice and keep her from finishing the picture.

They are ready! Observe the sang froid with which Alice clutches the wheel—there is no fake or subterfuge—you see. She has stepped on the throttle—no double exposure—the only exposure of any kind is that Alice exposes—she is off! —exposes herself to the chance of getting a cracked bean from falling lumber.

She has struck the building—it crumbles like the walls of Jericho at the toot of the ram's horn. You see her emerge scatheless from the other end of the house, worth approximately sixty-seven dollars and eighty cents a few moments ago, now only fit for kindling.

With a final warning to you to consider all you have seen as sacred, and reposing confidence that not a Jane nor a John among you will spill the secrets of any gag you have witnessed—this will be all for today.

Heart Interest Story of Week

A Little Story of Friendship.

MARIE MOSQUINA sat in the Symphony theater, waiting. In a few moments Bebe Daniels, her friend and chum, was to appear to the audience in person. Marie knew that Bebe was good in pictures, but she didn't know how she would be before an audience. It was a tense, dramatic moment. Then Bebe came out, and Marie was so filled with pleased surprise that—we quote from Chit Chats about Rolin-Pathe Players—"when Bebe walked out onto the stage and put her number over like a trouper, Marie liked to have fell off of her seat."

Studio Shorts

WILLIAM FARNUM was out on location at Hermit Creek Camp on his birthday, July 4, but when he came in that evening from a hard day's work before the camera he found a huge birthday cake all frosted over and with the year of his birth worked out in relief, awaiting him.

Winifred Kingston went to San Francisco to attend the opening of the new California Theater tea room which the Naval and Marine Red Cross Auxiliary opened in that city.

Harry Mestayer, recently seen in "One of Us," a dramatic production at the Morosco theater, is now a Triangle star under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton in a play called "High Tide," with Marie Yvonne Pavis at the head of the supporting cast.

A joyful reunion occurred recently at the Triangle studio, when Ethel Fleming and Lillian West met on the lot after a long separation. These girls began their stage career together, worked as a vaudeville team, and for a time were both employed at the Balboa studio at Long Beach.

Frank Terry is a new director at the Rolin studio, alternating with Hal E. Roach in the production of the Stan-Laurel comedies.

Dustin Farnum celebrated the Fourth of July at San Jose, Cal., where he took part in the rodeo that formed one of the principal entertainments of the patriotic benefit.

Bert Seibel has been engaged to assist R. William Neill in the filming of the Dorothy Dalton pictures in the future.

Elsie Van Name, of the Francis Ford Company, has been recuperating at Balboa Beach from a recent illness.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle will lead the grand march at a Red Cross dance to be given in the near future at Long Beach in the glass inclosed studio on Sixth street and Alamitos avenue.

Olive Thomas is expected back from her vacation in a few days to begin on a new production being prepared for her at Triangle.

Harry Harvey is making the final scenes of the last episode of "The Lion's Claws" at Universal City this week.

Victor Schertzinger, director for Charles Ray, composed a song inspired by the making of "The Claws of the Hun," which he calls "I'm Giving You to Uncle Sam," with lyrics by Thomas H. Ince. The song was sung at Grauman's theater in Los Angeles during the week that the film, "The Claws of the Hun," was shown.

Jack Gilbert has returned to Triangle to play opposite Claire Anderson in a production directed by Thomas Heffron.

Francis Paget, author of a new Louise Glaum story, came all the way from his home in Montana to watch the filming of his story at the Brunton studios.

Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels appeared in person at the Symphony one evening recently and drew the largest crowd the house has held since B. C. Steele took over the management.

Joy Lewis, leading woman for the Golden Producing Company, took a few days off a week or so ago to have the measles, thus repairing a grave neglect of her early years.

Kathlyn Williams and her husband, Charles Eyton, studio manager of the Morosco studio, have returned to Los Angeles from a month's stay in New York.

Sessue Hayakawa presided over the "Allies' Cafe" at a social function held in Hollywood recently, where pretty girls of all the allied nations acted as waitresses, and the receipts were turned over to a local charitable institution.

A service flag with seventy-five stars now flies from the flagpole of the Ince studios. Enid Bennett was given the honor of raising the emblem which was donated by Charles Ray.

Al Jolson, who is expected shortly in Los Angeles on a Coast tour, is said to have been offered $50,000 for his services for one picture while he is in the West.

Bessie Barriscale has just completed "Conscience" at the Brunton studios, under the direction of Howard Hickman.

Paul Powell has been engaged to direct Carmel Myers in her next Bluebird production. Powell was a political writer on a Los Angeles paper before entering the motion picture industry.

May Allison, who arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago, has already started on her new Metro picture, "The Return of Mary," and her sister, who is also her secretary, is house-hunting for the star. Miss Allison voices a preference for a residence on La Brea avenue, Hollywood, with grounds enough for a war garden.

George Fisher has been engaged to take the leading male role in a Rupert Julian production starring Ruth Clifford. Kenneth Harlan had originally been cast for the part, but his call to a fighting role in Uncle Sam's army prevented him from keeping the engagement.

Margarita Fisher motored from Santa Barbara to San Francisco to take scenes for her new picture, "The Way It Was."

A little daughter arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Millard K. Wilson on July 4. She was given the name of Liberty Bell because she chose such an important day for her birthday.

All Hustling to Win Pershing Trophy

Exchange Managers from New York to San Francisco Announce Their Intention of Pulling Down the Big Prize Offered by this Publication for the Most Intensive Booking of "Pershing's Crusaders"

NEWS of the offer of the Moving Picture World to present a handsome bronze trophy to the exchange showing the greatest percentage of bookings for "Pershing's Crusaders" before September 1 has had time to reach San Francisco and come back by wire, and one of the first telegrams to be received came from Sol Lesser, of the California State Defense Council. He sent:

"Accept your invitation to compete for trophy to be awarded for the placing of United States war film, 'Pershing's Crusaders,' to the exchange booking the highest percentage of theaters in any territorial division of the United States. Want to congratulate you upon this wonderfully patriotic offer. Am sure it will stimulate the booking of this great picture throughout the country. California hopes to capture the prize. Don't you think length of runs and rentals received should enter into determining the award?"

Mr. Lesser raises an interesting point, but Mr. Lesser does not get our angle. This publication believes that it is doing a patriotic service if it can aid in any degree to stimulate the bookings of this film. It is not interested in the rentals received.

It desires merely to get the subject before the greatest number of persons, that the greatest good may be done. This may suggest that the award should be made upon the basis of showings, but if you carefully consider this angle, you will find it the wrong basis.

The trophy is to be awarded to the exchange doing the most intensive work for the film. All exchanges must have an even chance or the exchanges with the smaller territories would be at a disadvantage. The fair basis is the number of houses in which the film is shown in proportion to the number of houses within the territory of the booking agency. It is no more difficult to book the film for a week or two weeks in a Chicago house, for example, than it would be to book the same film for one day in a town of three or four thousand. The advantage would all lie in favor of the exchange having the greater number of large cities. The proportion of booking to possible bookings is the only fair basis of award.

New York Exchange Aims at 99 Per Cent.

Naturally Carey Wilson, of the New York exchange, was one of the first to declare his organization in the fight. He gets the right angle, for he writes:

"Since we have already realized that the desire of the Government Committee on Public Information is to have 'Pershing's Crusaders' exhibited in every theater in the United States, it hardly needed your wonderful offer to stimulate us to further efforts, but I can assure you that should it be the good fortune of this exchange to realize our ambition of exhibiting in every house in our territory, we shall be doubly proud of our work if we gain the trophy.

"You may rest assured that we are not daunted by the magnitude of the task before us, and have placed as our goal a percentage of not less than 99, if such shall be found possible by the united efforts of our organization."

It will not be an easy job to completely cover Greater New York, but Mr. Wilson has been a hustler from the days he was an exhibitor in a suburban town, and he can be counted upon to stir his staff to the utmost. He gets the exact angle of the contest. We want to help the film to a showing in every theater in the United States.

Floyd Brown, of Indianapolis, is brief, but to the point. He wires:

"Thanks for your splendid offer to exchangemen handling 'Pershing's Crusaders.' Indiana always goes over one hundred per cent., and we are determined to put her over again."

That's the right idea. The exchange that can do better than 100 per cent. is going to do some tall hustling in the hot weather weeks, but it is possible to do better than one hundred. More power to Mr. Brown and his cohorts.

From Pittsburgh, Pa., comes a wire from Joseph S. Skirboll, in which he says.:

"Congratulations on the patriotic spirit that induced you to make this wonderful offer for a trophy to the exchange booking 'Pershing's Crusaders' in the greatest percentage of houses. We are going in to win this prize."

And from reports received it is evident that Mr. Skirboll started his men hustling even before he sat down to write out the telegram.

Holan Says "Send It Now."

We hope that C. E. Holan, of A. H. Blank Enterprises, is not premature in his demand that the trophy be sent him right away. He wires:

"Sincere thanks for your co-operation and initiative in offering a trophy to exchangemen for 'Pershing's Crusaders' bookings. Our crew is working night and day in their effort to get this beautiful tablet. You may as well send it now. We have won it already."

That's the right sort of spirit, but we shall have to wait until after September 1 to send out the trophy, but if Mr. Holan has a nail and a hammer he can start now to make a place for it. With the silk flag that is inserted in the eagle's claw the spread is a few inches short of six feet, and it will drop about four and a half feet. That blank space on the wall in Mr. Holan's office can be filled in with a temporary sign that will spur his salesmen to new endeavors.

It should not be difficult to sell this patriotic number. It is a direct message from the Government to its people. It is the spoken word of our Chief Executive put into pictures. It tells what has been done and what is being done to back up the brave boys across the water who have made all Europe gasp with surprise and have made even the boche realize that the Kaiser and his High Command were palpable liars when they assured their deluded subjects that the Americans could not and would not fight and that this country was merely sending over a few thousand men. Those "few thousand"—plus—have kept the Germans goose-stepping it back to Berlin the past week, and there could not be a more timely subject for showing or reshowing than "Pershing's Crusaders."

Wherein Fabian Differs from His Namesake.

Even Paterson, N. J., once accounted a stronghold of pro-Germanism is over the top with Pershing, for Jacob Fabian, of the Regent, writes:

"In all my years of exhibiting I can truly say I have never seen such enthusiasm or heard such applause. It got every audience on its feet. The first day's attendance was good and it grew daily thereafter until there was a long waiting line, and this in Graduation Week, one of our hardest times as a rule."

At the Garden, Des Moines, people stood in line for hours to see the film, and hundreds are being turned away from the Garden, Washington, D. C. In St. Paul, with a 100 per cent. temperature, hundreds were turned away at every performance and the same report comes from all parts of the country. It is a profitable sort of patriotism to show "Pershing's Crusaders," and it should be easy to sell at least 95 per cent. of any territory. The handsomest trophy ever awarded in the history of the motion picture is waiting for the exchange that shows the biggest percentage.

RAVER'S THREE-REELER A WINNER.

Confirming Harry Raver's contention that "length does not constitute a feature," Harold Edel's experiment with "Outwitting the Hun," a three-reel subject, imported by Raver and shown at the Strand during the week of June 30, proved eminently successful. Harold Edel was so pleased at the outcome of the experiment that he wrote Mr. Raver:

"Without question your picture was one of the most delightful novelties that I have ever had the pleasure of running at the Strand and was enjoyed immensely by our audiences; in fact, I considered it the outstanding feature on the bill."

Kalem's Continuous Performance

Perfects Machine That Winds Perfect Film on Reel Without Intermediate Handling.

CHICAGO boasts that out at Packingtown they have buildings into one end of which they drive live pigs which emerge at the other in the form of hams, shaving brushes, lard, spare ribs, cigar cases and bacon. This stage of efficiency has not yet been fully achieved in the motion picture business, but in the Kalem laboratories they are showing a machine that comes close to that.

Kalem does not brag about the hugeness of its buildings. The Kalem laboratory has always been located in a loft building in the heart of the commercial district, where they estimate space by square inches instead of feet or yards, and compactness has ever been a consideration.

Since the company abandoned the making of film and turned its laboratories over to commercial printing, meeting the demand has been a problem. Kalem has ever been noted for perfect photography and orders poured in. Now with a lot of Government work in addition speed is more than ever an essential, and the new machine is the result. It is safe to say that the Kalem plant is now the most compact laboratory in the world. A single machine is capable of turning out a million feet a week to each eight-hour shift, and the work is so nearly automatic as to do away with a small army of developers, and the situation is closely akin to that in the shot tower of the American Smelting and Refining Company, where the few men employed have so little to do that the trouble is to keep them in the building. It is not quite as bad as that with Kalem, but the experts who have charge of the machine are merely charged with the duty of seeing that the action is continuous.

Positive stock is printed in the usual manner on Duplex printers, which have a capacity of three rolls of film at one time, or 1,200 feet, with but two splices. These 1,200-foot reels are then sent to the developing machine.

In most up-to-date laboratories the shorter lengths would be wound upon racks, immersed in soapstone developing tanks and removed from time to time that the progress of the development might be judged. Then the racks would be dipped into the washing tank, into the hypo, then into another washing tank and finally sent to the drying room to be hung up until ready to be reeled. All of this requires innumerable handlings and is largely dependent upon the skill of the workmen.

In the Kalem machine the full 1,200-foot reel is placed upon the spindle and the end is attached by leader to the previous roll. Once it starts on its half-mile journey it is not handled until the full reel is taken off the other end. By means of a circulatory system with a temperature equalizer the developer is held within half a degree of the proper temperature for as long as the film is in motion, and the line of travel is so planned that frequent inspection can be made at all stages of progress without touching the product or interrupting its progress. If necessary the film can be tinted as it passes through the machine, and toning would probably be practicable, though as yet this has not been attempted.

At a proper point the film emerges from the dark room and passes by daylight to the driers. Here frequent hypometric readings permit adjustments to be made that permit the film to be dried in not less than fifteen minutes nor more than eighteen, experiment having shown that the greatest perfection of product requires that film be dried within these limits. In the entire trip the movement is continuous, and once the developer has been brought to the proper temperature it is practically automatic. Men constantly patrol the length of the machine, but this is more from precaution than necessity.

When the drying cabinet is passed the film is wound upon another reel, and it is possible to turn out a thousand-foot reel with but two splices to the entire length. Should the film break for any reason—and it is seldom that the film does break, in spite of the enormous tension to which it is subjected—there is provision made to take up without delay, and it is generally not necessary to stop the machine, as a splice can be made within the margin of safety.

The machine has been in actual operation for something like three months and, being built in duplicate, can turn out 500,000 feet of finished product every forty-eight hours that represents the six-day, eight-hour shift, yet it is so compact that it requires but a fraction of the floor space of one loft, so light that it comes within the weight limit for loft buildings and is so planned that it can be taken down, removed and set up in a new location, if necessary, within a week.

Rack development is still used for negatives and for toning at present, but even here compactness is as important as efficiency, and a tremendous amount of work can be performed within a limited space, and yet there is no sign of crowding. Miniature projection machines in booths less than three feet square permit an inspection of every foot of film without the waste of long throws, and there is even room for a chemical laboratory, for Kalem is unusual in that it maintains a chemist the year around, and when the first shortage in chemicals was experienced they even made their own developing reagents. In addition it is a licensed distillery, but that will not help any if the prohibtion law goes through, for the still is used only for solutions and the license is merely for the purpose of keeping a line on the retort.

It is a pity that the mechanical niceties of the machine may not be gone into at greater length, for it is easily the most unique machine of its kind in existence, and there are but two other machines known, both of which are older models and vastly heavier. It is an achievement to be proud of from every angle.

Reicher to Lecture to World Cameramen

Director Will Discourse to Them on What Constitutes Drama and How to Photograph It.

ONE of the main requisites for being a good director is a large fund of general information embracing all phases of the motion picture business, as well as things generally, says Frank Reicher, who is now directing Louise Huff in her second World Picture, "The Sea Wolf."

Mr. Reicher realizes that for even the best productions the advertising and publicity adjuncts must be attractive and magnetic in order to stimulate box office activity. Therefore he is spending much time and effort in getting effective and interesting "stills."

"Lobby displays, lithographs, slides, heralds and newspaper cuts are all made from 'stills" taken during the filming of a picture," says Mr. Reicher, "and consequently if they are uninteresting and lacking in dramatic intensity the advertising and publicity material will reflect this fact. It is easy enough to get good 'stills' once the photographer has a thorough understanding of what drama is."

In pursuance of this idea Mr. Reicher is going to give a talk at the World studio in Fort Lee to cameramen and others who are interested on the subjects of what constitutes drama and how to put it into still pictures. One of his basic ideas is to photograph action without interfering with the players—the use of the snapshot as distinguished from the posed "still."

Ovations Greet Clara Kimball Young

Player's Tour Through Western Country Marked by Large Outpourings of the Public.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG'S personal appearance tour of the western coast under the supervision of Manager Harry Garson for the purpose of recruiting eligibles for United States Navy enlistments has proved a remarkable success. While en route to New York from San Francisco, where she dedicated the Red Cross tea room in the California Theater Building, Miss Young stopped to make short visits in the cities of Portland, Oregon, Tacoma, Seattle and Spokane, Wash. It is announced that the entire tour has been one continuous demonstration of western loyalty and friendship.

Upon arrival in Portland Miss Young was tendered one of the most enthusiastic welcomes ever accorded a player in the city. A mile-long procession awaited her, made up in large part of the mayor and city officials, army and navy officers, foreign officers, with Major Baker and the United States spruce division heading the parade.

In Seattle Miss Young was met by a navy band consisting of 140 pieces, accompanying the governor. The line of march led from the railway station to the Washington Hotel, during which time ten speeches were made en route. The one automobile in the parade carried the governor and Miss Young. The same night ten thousand sailors and marines, with five bands, participated in a parade. Charles M. Schwab and a party of friends reviewed the parade from the grandstand in front of the Washington Hotel.

At Tacoma Miss Young was met by the mayor of the city, attended by two bands and battalion troops from Camp Lewis. During her short stay in the city she was elected an honorary member of the Chamber of Commerce, and made two speeches in behalf of Government enlistments.

Miss Young's welcome to Spokane was equally enthusiastic. The mayor of the city, prominent citizens and the United States Army post greeted her on arrival and paraded.

Where Service Really Serves

By Epes W. Sargent

Goldwyn Publicity Starts with the Chief Executive and Continues Effective Until the Last Small Town Has Been Played

PROBABLY no one man can claim credit for being the first to use the much abused word, "service." It began in the mercantile trade papers and seemed to break out in the picture game overnight—like a rash. One day the word was in the dictionary and the next it was all over the announcements of manufacturers and smeared the trade sheets. Everyone was talking service, but the trouble was that it mostly ended in talk. Most large production companies talk service. Most trade papers have service bureaus. Most exchanges spell service with a capital letter, but the trouble is that the man who most needs service to help him sell his wares complains that he gets no service.

The chief trouble seems to be that service starts as a headline in the house organ and stops at the same place. Where it does go further, those who most need its aid get little of it. Where an honest effort is made really to give service it is "too much Broadway," to quote one aggrieved exhibitor. Most service runs to four-column layouts and lobby and stage ideas that require the co-operation of a scene studio and the employment of a property man. The house able to afford these adjuncts does not need the service bureau. It can also afford an advertising man. It has house capacity, patronage and the field from which to draw a greater clientele. It can take huge spaces in the newspapers and employ costly lobby effects. It probably does all those things and mostly in its own way. It is the little man and not the first run exhibitor who most needs the help. The man who can get the high priced runs has also the money for an advertising man and an artist. The man who puts his future in pawn when he books an old run feature and who cannot afford large layout is the man who must be helped to sell his subjects, for unaided he cannot do so. If he were competent he would probably be in a larger house in a better town. Service to serve must care for the great and small alike, and that is the sort of service to which the Goldwyn company pins its faith.

McLaren Was Enthusiastic.

It is to an exhibitor and not the Goldwyn officials that this story owes its inception. Most of you know W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic and Colonial, Jackson, Mich., if you read the Advertising for Exhibitors department. Mr. McLaren paid his annual visit to New York the other day and of course he dropped in to see the Moving Picture World. He came across the street from the Goldwyn offices, the last call on his list of companies supplying his theaters with film, and he fairly bubbled over with enthusiasm at the Goldwyn service.

"They have a real system," he declared. "They have a hundred or so stills on every release, and if you need any they can get them right out of the file. They have got the stars who are coming up instead of falling back, and they help the exhibitor to sell them to the public. They don't try to make money out of the exhibitor until they have shown him how he can make money with them. I tell you it's a treat to see the way they handle things."

And so, appreciating a non-alcoholic treat, this writer went to see, too, and the result is this story, which really is a joint interview with Fred B. Warren, the chief executive, and Dwight S. Perrin, his publicity manager. The quotation marks are lacking, but this is merely to prevent confusion over the dual personality of the interviewed.

The Goldwyn Creed.

Mr. Warren is an enthusiast on salesmanship. His idea of the successful conduct of a film business is to sell film to the ultimate consumer, the public, rather than to the exchange or exhibitor. He does not use superlatives about stars or productions, the vastness of his studios or the excellence of his plays. He will even admit that in the past Goldwyn productions have verged too much upon the stage drama to be always good motion picture plays. He knows this better than anyone else and has arranged that the coming plays will be more nearly motion pictures and less stage dramas done over. He is an enthusiast for the clean, heart-interest play with ample action, but it is not until you mention salesmanship that he really takes full interest. Perhaps nothing will more clearly show his aims than this extract from a letter he had just written to Hunt Stromberg, who is to have charge of the new house organ, the Gold-winner:

> We must teach the buyers of our pictures how to attract the public—how to sell our shows at a profit to the exhibitors themselves.
> We must remember that 90 odd per cent. of the exhibitors have no large financial resources; that whatever exploitation they do must cost them little or nothing; that the big, prosperous first run accounts are not criterions and that most of the big houses with their own facilities will reject your suggestions. You are, therefore, mostly appealing to the sensibilities of the little fellows.
> I have in mind certain elements of the old Success magazine without its sugary stickiness. I want to tell exhibitors—your customers—how the successful showmen get values out of each production in turn; what they did to stimulate patronage and what it cost them to do this. I want to tell not only of productions ahead—still to come—but those that are past release, for thousands of customers are still to play the past releases—the little fellows who most need help.

Mr. Stromberg, by the way, is a good example of the Warren method of picking men. He is not a motion picture man. He is the son of an advertising agent and himself grew up in that business. He was engaged not because he knows pictures, but because he knows selling through advertising in all its angles, with the intimate knowledge of the man who sells advertising. Mr. Warren does not believe in hiring men merely because they know about motion pictures. He hires them because they know about the more important side of the matter. It is much easier to tell a new man about pictures than to tell a picture man, rutted in the old fashioned methods, about selling. In planning a new house organ he got a thoroughly practical advertising man who is now getting his motion picture training.

Prefers Salesmanship to Film Knowledge.

In the same way the exchange managers have been picked for their selling knowledge. His exchange manager in Seattle, for example, comes from the Western Electric Company, and never sold an inch of film until he took up the Goldwyn product. The head of the Denver office came out of a packing house and the Los Angeles man came from a large department store. The nearest approach to a picture man is Lucas, a newspaper editor who runs a big supply house in Atlanta for a side line, and handles Goldwyn in the southeast.

As in the case of Mr. Stromberg, Mr. Warren figures that it is easier to tell a salesman how to sell films than to make a film man into the right sort of a salesman, so he picked good salesmen and educated them by correspondence; not by means of a series of cut and dried form letters, but through a live correspondence framed to fit the make-up of the man he is writing to and dealing with the problems the man himself is facing. The first lesson that a salesman learns is that an exhibitor cannot pay his rental bills unless he can dispose of the film to the public. The second lesson is that the average exhibitor is not an advertiser. To be successful he must advertise, and so the exchange manager has it impressed upon him that to collect his bills he must first help the exhibitor to do the right sort of advertising. Service is more than a word in the Goldwyn offices—it is an act. From Mr. Warren down to the nethermost office boy the one big thought is "help the exhibitor make money with us."

And the exchange manager does not take his cue from the main office. He is supposed to think for himself. That he does so is shown by one recent instance. The Cleveland exchange manager wrote that he had the opportunity to enlist the services of M. J. Brandt, formerly with the B. F. Keith enterprises and more lately with the Stillman theater. He wrote that with Mr. Brandt on the staff he was certain he could increase business by a material sum.

Yet Mr. Brandt was not employed as a salesman. He was a veteran showman, and it was his business to teach showmanship, not to sell films. He "sat in" with the local manager on Goldwyn pictures. He showed him how to advertise in order to get the most money, and he stayed with one group of exhibitors only long enough to be certain that they now could do it by themselves and went on to another set of houses. He simply spreads the gospel of advertising among Goldwyn exhibitors. He shows them how to "clean up" on these and other releases. And business in the Cleveland district has exceeded the estimated increase.

The idea will be used in the other exchanges, but not until the right man can be found. No one will be appointed with the official title and supposed to make good because he carries this title. In each office a man must be found who knows that territory, for advertising methods differ, and the man who would really aid must be a man who knows his territory. More than that he must be a teacher; must be able to communicate his knowledge to others quickly and lastingly. He must be able to put on a few subjects in such a way that the exhibitor gets a great light on the whole theory of advertising film. To merely announce service men is not sufficient. Most of the Goldwyn salesmen know enough about advertising to qualify as "experts," but the service man must be something more than a surface scratcher.

As it stands, the Goldwyn salesmen are able to give advertising hints to their clients and the new sheet should give even more aid, but the personal interpretation of advertising methods is to be a part of the Goldwyn service

The Future Before Them.

And Goldwyn salesmen have something to look forward to as a result of good service. The company is not overnamed at the top. The executives are few and the openings many. The men in the field know that they stand a chance of coming in to a desk in the home office and this is an incentive to hard work. The same spirit is shown by the home staff. A time clock does not form a part of the office furniture, for Mr. Warren takes a pride in the fact that stenographers and clerks, along with the higher officials, are often at their desks and hard at work half an hour or more before the official commencing time. Mr. Warren himself sometimes has to rout out the night watchman, for he has been at his desk as early as 4 o'clock, doing a day's work before breakfast.

All of this is merely prefatory to the real story of Goldwyn service and its planning. Mr. McLaren did not overstate when he said they had a hundred or more stills for each release. The instructions are that not fewer than fifteen stills are to be turned in for each reel of release. This gives a minimum of 75 stills for a five reel feature and 90 for six reels. In actual practice from 150 to 200 stills are made for each subject and the number may run to 300 or more in the case of special pictures. And these stills are not merely shots at scenes. They aim to tell a part of the story or at least to suggest some dramatic moment.

Two Pairs of Stills from "The Heart of the Sunset," Showing a Duplication of the Poses as a Precautionary Measure.

Two sets of the stills are mounted on linen and bound in leather covers. One book goes to Mr. Warren and the other is retained in the press room, for reference. A sample still and its negative is filed in a letter case and other cases contain duplicates. Ten or fifteen sets are kept on hand for special use, apart from the sets picked out for the regular lobby display. These can be taken from the file at a moment's notice and given or sent some inquiring exhibitor. When the stock runs low others are ordered. And it must be remembered that these are not photo reproductions but actual photographs themselves. They cost more, but they are worth more.

The books tell their own stories of the care used in getting these stills. The photographs are set in in the order in which they appear in the story, all from one scene being held together. The earlier in the play the scene occurs the closer to the front of the book that set of photographs is. The cut shows two pairs of stills from "The Heart of the Sunset." It will be seen that each pair is practically like the other, but one is bound to be better than the other and the better of the two can be chosen. Often three or four stills are made of practically the same pose and perhaps a dozen or more pictures will be taken of an important scene, showing the advancing action. As a result it is always possible to get a first class set of lobby pictures and still have others to use for general purposes or to amplify displays.

The standard sets represent the pick of at least a hundred poses, and these are printed in quantities to supply the exchanges. If more prints are desired they can be had from the exchange or from the home office, but no house could possibly show the three hundred odd pictures used for "Polly of the Circus," for example. From another angle, the exhibitor in a town who plays a picture after the first showing can offer the newspapers new prints for the photoplay page and for advertising cuts.

A Photograph of the Drawings from Which the Larger Exhibitors May Make Up Their Own Layouts or Reproduce in Enlargement.

Both Cuts and Mats.

Some of the stills are worked up into stock advertising displays which are offered the exhibitors in both electros and mats as may be most convenient. Four of these are supplied for each subject, two of them being one column width and two double column size. One of each is short and the other deep, supplying practically all ordinary needs. It has been found that where an exhibitor desires to take more than a double column space he generally prefers to make his own layouts, but a mat service is issued which offers the exhibitor the full pages used in the Moving Picture World, but provided with a newspaper screen cut in place of the fine screen halftone.

If you will notice these Goldwyn full pages you will see that they serve as well for the public as for the exhibitor, for Mr. Warren's theory is that the exhibitor is merely the public once removed and that what appeals to him will appeal to his patron. For this reason you will find that the subject pages for Goldwyn carry a punch appeal instead of "greatest ever" and similar superlatives. It is the aim to catch attention through an interest-getting line rather than through the use of monstrous adjectives. Take "The Venus Model," for example. It does not announce "the popular star" but "the girl who found a fortune in a bathing suit." The exhibitors and most of the public know that Miss Normand is a popular star, but the allusion to the bathing suit, when accompanied by a smashing picture of the suit and the star attracts attention. The advertisement "sells" the exhibitor and he uses the same line to "sell" his patrons.

This was being done long before all this talk arose of producers turning their advertising pages into service bureaus. Goldwyn had already solved the problem. The catch phrases were there, the cut was there and all that was necessary was to use them. The mat will give newspaper screen and the clipped page can be used for the lobby display, either plain or touched up with the brush to cover a larger surface.

Special Drawing Sheets.

For the man who wants to make his own layouts there are the scene cuts and a special photograph sheet giving the reproduction on highly glazed paper of the four ready made advertisements. These are photographs of the drawings and the blacks are jet black and the whites absolutely white. It is the same as though the exhibitor had been handed original drawings, for the photography is so clear that enlargement to any size within newspaper limits is entirely practicable. The general proportions of width and height must be observed, but the one column cut can be raised to a half page or more if desired, or the cut may be routed to let in other type. The illustration shows an original layout made from a portion of one of these sheets by the Standard theater, Cleveland. The figure was cut out and a new background provided. In most cases a manager can get the services of a sign painter where a good figure artist may seldom be had. With the figures supplied it is only necessary to cut them out to use them as the attractor of a drawn in background which may be mortised for type or hand lettered in proportion.

The Goldwyn Packets.

Four weeks before any Goldwyn subject is released all exhibitors who do a reasonably large business are sent a packet of material. This does not mean the first run houses alone, but the larger of the second flight. In each packet is a post card invoice which is to be returned as an acknowledgement of receipt, to guard against omissions. If any of the material has been omitted, the deficiency is at once made good. To check delivery the packages are sent by first class mail, special delivery, registered and with a return receipt demanded. If there is no receipt received the fact is noted and a tracer is sent or another package forwarded. The package, which is sent in a special envelope, stiffened with board, contains stills and portraits in quantities varying with the house and its needs. The post-card reproduced here was returned by the Strand theater, Erie, Pa. The contents of the package consisted of twenty stills, five portraits and two press sheets. Two press sheets are always sent, as they are printed on both sides. There is material on both sides for clipping, and it is little more expensive to send two than to send an eight-pager printed on one side only.

The press sheet, of course, lists all other aids, and these may be ordered from the exchange in ample time for first run. The regular lobby displays, which are supplied in 8 by 10 inches and 11 by 14 inches, are different from these special shipments. The press sheet also suggests a campaign in keeping with the picture, and this campaign varies with each subject. In this it differs from many press campaigns in which the title seems to be the chief variant.

No Trade-Marks Used.

And there is no immense Goldwyn trade-mark plastered all over the cuts and mats. Mr. Warren does not feel that he has a right to require the exhibitor to do his advertising for him. The line "It's a Goldwyn" is generally used, often being placed where it may be routed out if desired, but there are no three-sheet displays to overshadow the house signature.

One recent innovation is the use of the editorial advertisement. This advertisement is an adaptation of the editorial style of the Hearst newspapers and is used on the proposition that if the editorials contribute so materially to the circulation of these papers the same idea will profit the exhibitor. But the adaptation is not merely a physical copy of the style. The text itself is patterned after the Brisbane style. It is not so much the manner in which the type is set that counts. It is the thought back of the type; the realization that simple argument, simply presented, is more forceful than the grandiloquent parade of many-syllabled words. They take the essence of the story, present it in simple phrase, but with a cunning appeal to the emotions. It is recommended that it be set in the general style of the Hearst papers, double column, leaded, short paragraphs and a generous use of all capital words. A bit from the first story, on The Service Flag, gives the idea.

> THE SERVICE FLAG of the warm-blooded, nation-loving millions who have made this the greatest country the world has ever known.
> The star of the negro cabin in Alabama, where a black boy has gone from the Cotton Belt.

The star of a Columbia River salmon fisherman.

The star of a waiter in a Chinese restaurant in New York's submerged civilization.

The star of the millionaire or the millionaire's son rubbing elbows with the son of his mother's laundress.

The honor token of a Great Lakes deck-hand and a California fruit packer.

One hundred million people are today thinking of these assorted products of our American civilization who are being re-made in the crucible of war.

It looks like simple stuff to write, but it is not easy if it is properly done, for it takes a keen appreciation of the story and an equally good knowledge of how to express the idea at once simply and forcefully.

To show how an idea is followed through by Goldwyn, when the first of these advertisements was prepared, a letter was sent to the advertising managers of the leading newspapers in the cities and larger towns, telling of the new scheme and suggesting that he get after Goldwyn users to take up the new form. It meant a larger space, in most cases, which interested the advertising manager, and made him a personal local "plugger." It meant more business for the house, which is why the advertising manager was turned loose.

To Help the Exhibitor the Idea.

In most instances the press department strives to get out good looking advertisements and nice sounding stunts. These please the chief executives who seldom know what good advertising means. If it sounds all right and properly features the company and its stars and producers, then it is pronounced good, whether it has pulling power or not. It is not sufficient to show Mr. Warren pretty advertising. He wants effective advertising and more, he knows what will and will not be effective. He wants a scene cut that tells something or a line that makes a portrait a problem. He is not content to present Mae Marsh merely as herself, popular as she is. He wants a line drawing attention to the predicament in which Miss Marsh finds herself in this particular production. He wants the pull of her name plus the pull of the story. If a scene cut is used it is more than ever necessary to make it interesting with a line telling what the scene means and rousing interest in the story. The tableau must illustrate a punch in the story and then be presented in words as well as picture to get the double appeal.

And the service is not ended until the last man in the smallest town has been shown, personally, if necessary, how to make money with that picture. The exhibitor, large and small, is regarded as a partner in the Goldwyn enterprise. He must prosper or the company will not prosper. He must make money in order that they shall be able to show a profit and no exhibitor is too small an account to be worth while. One first run account may be worth a dozen exhibitors at the other end of the line, but those twelve exhibitors are at least as worthy of effort as the man at the head of the column. The exchange managers have been trained to go after the small accounts as well as the big ones. They have been trained to take an interest in all exhibitors, whether they now deal with Goldwyn or not. "Service that really serves," might well be the Goldwyn slogan, for the press department and the selling end is not content until every possible exhibitor has been booked up and helped to clean up with a story. Mr. McLaren was right. It is a treat to survey the Goldwyn service and trace it to its end, for the end comes only when no further service is possible.

World Film to Classify Posters

Will Issue to Exhibitors According to Clientele Either Scenes Melodramatic or of Heart Interest.

A NEW help has been arranged for World customers. It is an important link in the World service chain, as it guarantees that every exhibitor will receive the particular kind of paper best suited to meet his requirements.

It is the custom when issuing lithographs to have them include, when the action of the play permits, a one-sheet and a three-sheet poster depicting intensely dramatic situations (fights, murders, etc.), and the other one-sheet and the other three-sheet depicting love scenes or scenes of heart interest or pathos or straight portraits, all strong in their appeal, but of a character entirely unlike the other posters.

Arrangements have been now completed whereby a distinctive mark is placed on all the paper so that the theater catering to a class attracted by the ultra-melodramatic will receive the paper that will boost its box office. By the same token the theater of an opposite kind will receive the paper that will appeal most forcefully to its patrons.

Arrangements for putting this plan into effect have been perfected and the necessary orders issued to branches and salesmen.

Break Wires to Stop Gerard Film

Performance of "My Four Years in Germany" Interfered With—How Would-Be Buyer Was Interned.

WHAT looked to Manager Kelly of the Lincoln theater, Massillon, Ohio, like a well defined plot to prevent the showing of the moving picture, "My Four Years in Germany," Ambassador Gerard's story of his experiences at the Kaiser's court, was discovered about 3 o'clock on a Tuesday afternoon when the picture house was suddenly plunged into darkness, says a recent issue of the Evening Independent of Massillon, and the picture abruptly stopped. Manager Kelly made a hurried investigation and traced the trouble to the rear of the theater building, where it was found that the wires furnishing the electric current had been cut or broken in two. The electric light company was notified, and linemen were dispatched to the theater and the break repaired. Expert wiremen declared that the wires had been tampered with.

In this connection it was learned that when the picture was first shown to the producers in this country one man offered $350,000 for the rights in America. In less than two weeks this man was interned in a German camp by Government agents on other charges. It was supposed that if he had bought the rights in this country the picture never would have been shown publicly.

Washington Men Face Express Difficulties

New American Railway Organization Serves Notice on Exchanges There'll Be But Two Collections.

THERE is a great deal of consternation in the Washington exchanges following the notification received by them from the American Railway Express, the organization resulting from the consolidation of all of the companies, that hereafter only two pick-up calls would be made daily, at 10:30 a. m. and 2 p. m. It is the feeling of the managers that this will not be at all adequate and that they might just as well have no calls at all as to have these. Since the first of the month the express service has become more troublesome than at any other time except perhaps during the embargo period.

The Washington Exchange Managers' Association is doing all that it can to arrive at more efficient means of getting films to the exhibitors in the territory. To this end a committee, consisting of W. P. Wilson, chairman; Vivian Whitaker and Herbert E. Elder, has been appointed to confer with the express officials to see what can be done toward more satisfactory service. Being on the job here this committee will be able to do good work for the benefit of the whole country, for it is felt that if a schedule of this kind is laid out for Washington a similar practice will be adopted in other large cities.

STERNBERG DOING GOVERNMENT WORK.

Joe Sternberg, of the World Pictures laboratory, who has had charge of all film for this concern from the time it left the camera until it was shipped to the branches, has joined the photographic division of the signal corps.

Mr. Sternberg has been stationed at Columbia University, where he will be engaged in important work connected with the preparation of a film which will be used as an aid in training recruits. This film will show the molding of a citizen into a soldier, from his induction into the army to his advent on the field of battle, and will include the first steps in training, such as learning to salute, the manual of arms, etc., up to bayonet practice and bombing.

For the past nine months Mr. Sternberg has been in the employment of the Government, in addition to working for World Pictures. During this time he was employed by the War College in an advisory capacity supervising laboratory work for the Government at the Paragon studio.

GILROY (CAL.) THEATER CHANGES OWNERS.

The World Theater, which has had a successful record under the management of Mrs. Anna Wicker, who has been operating the place since her two brothers, the original owners of the World, joined the army, has been sold to C. D. Stickley and Harry Brooks, of San Francisco.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Scene from "Beyond the Shadows" (Triangle).

Triangle's "Beyond the Shadows" Is Story of Canada

DIRECTOR GILBERT P. HAMILTON has just completed his production of "Golden Fleece," a picturization of Frederick Irving Hamilton's story by that name. It is offered as the first release of the Triangle program for the week of July 28, and features Joe Bennett and Peggy Pearce, the former Keystone comedienne. Jack Curtis, who played the Drainman in "The Servant in the House," is also in the cast.

Disappointment and discouragement follow in the trail of the penniless young inventor who buoyantly comes to the city to seek a market for his device. At first he is downcast and morose when he finds he has fallen into the hands of a patent shark. Then his despair is turned to fury, transforming the innocent country boy into a temporary desperate outlaw when he comes to believe the police are crooked.

Joe Bennett is Jason, the farmer inventor; Peggy Pearce appears as Rose, the boy's sweetheart, and Jack Curtis is Bainge, the misjudged detective through whose efforts the swindler is finally jailed when Jason reaps the just reward of his labors. George Elwood Jenks scenarioized the story and Gilbert Warrenton photographed.

"Beyond the Shadows," the second Triangle release for the week of July 28, features William Desmond with Josie Sedgwick, who appears for the second time as his leading woman. It pictures life in the Canadian woods, and the exploits of the free traders are vividly related. The cast is of unusual length, and it is said that J. W. McLaughlin, who directed the production, has secured an unusually good atmosphere for the picture.

Desmond, as Jean Du Bois, will have a chance to strengthen his reputation as a fighter for justice. As a free trader he falls in love with Eleanor Wyatt only to find that she is the wife of his long-forgotten brother, a quitter and a smuggler who remained in the settlement of Charlemange when his parents left to seek their fortune in the northwest.

Ralph R. Westfall wrote the story, with scenario by Charles J. Wilson Jr. Steve Norton was cameraman.

How Schade Got 'Em For "The Venus Model"

HOW one exhibitor made the most of Mabel Normand's appearance in her recent Goldwyn production, "The Venus Model," is demonstrated by report from Sandusky, Ohio, where the picture enjoyed a highly successful two-day run at the Schade theater.

George J. Schade, owner of the theater, utilized his knowledge of showmanship and advertising in the most practical and original way, and with the aid of Service Expert Brandt, of the Goldwyn Cleveland branch offices, a swimming contest, open to all women of Erie County, Ohio, was staged in Sandusky Bay.

The contest was held Saturday, July 13, two days in advance of the showing of "The Venus Model." Ample newspaper publicity was given the event and enthusiasm reached fever heat when it was announced that a handsome loving cup, to be known as the Mabel Normand "Venus Model" cup, would be presented to the winner. In addition to the cup, each contestant was presented with an autographed photograph of Miss Normand. The rules of the contest barred professional swimmers, resulting in a large entry of Erie County's best amateur talent. Preliminary publicity included the publishing of a telegram sent from the Goldwyn Fort Lee studio over the signature of Miss Normand, in which "The Rainbow Girl of the Screen" officially announced her presentation of the loving cup and wished every contestant the "best of luck."

As an added attraction, mainly to entertain the huge crowd which turned out to witness the event, a professional swimmer wearing the fetching Mabel Normand Venus Model bathing suit, thrilled the spectators with fancy diving and swimming stunts prior to the start of the swim. Intense excitement prevailed when the leading mermaid swept over the line and was formally presented with the Mabel Normand trophy.

The "stunt" was a money-maker.

Fox Schedules Strong Quartette of Specials for August

FOUR productions from the east and west studios of William Fox are to be released as special features in August, according to a schedule just announced. This is the order in which the pictures will be issued:

Jane and Katherine Lee in "Doing Their Bit," a fast, sprightly story of two children's war on slackers and disloyalists, written and staged by Kenean Buel.

Gladys Brockwell in "The Bird of Prey," a story of Mexican border intrigue, love and vengeance, written by Charles Kenyon and staged by Edward J. LeSaint.

Virginia Pearson in "The Liar," a powerful story of an alien blood strain that brings shame and suffering to a beautiful woman, directed by Edward Lawrence.

Peggy Hyland in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a Scottish tale of love and patriotism written by Hamilton Thompson, and directed by Harry Millarde.

The first of the announced films, "Doing Their Bit," shows the impish Jane and Katherine in a drama of strong plot and stirring action. The Fox starlets are supported by Franklynn Hann, Gertrude Le Brandt, Beth Ivins, Alex Hall, Kate Lester, William Pollard, Aimee Abbott, Jay Strong, R. R. Neil and Edwin Sturgis.

"The Bird of Prey" is said to be one of the strongest plays yet enacted by Gladys Brockwell. The scene of the play is laid along the Mexican border during the days when Villa and his bandits were troubling the United States, and Miss Brockwell gives a powerful delineation of a woman who sacrifices herself to Mexican bandits to save American ranchers. Supporting Miss Brockwell are Herbert Heyes, L. C. Shumway and Willard Louis.

Virginia Pearson is nearing the completion of "The Liar," which is being directed by Mr. Lawrence at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn. The play is understood to be one of striking originality in plot, and the director is said to have introduced several unusual scenes.

"Bonnie Annie Laurie" is said to be of a particularly high order of excellence. In it Miss Hyland for several scenes portrays the role of an English Red Cross nurse.

Scene from "The Savage Woman" (Select).

Select Denies "The Savage Woman" Will Be a Special

THE Select Pictures Corporation wishes to deny officially the persistent rumors which have been in circulation, to the effect that Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming production, "The Savage Woman," would be treated as a "special" and released on the open market. It is true representations have come from many quarters requesting the picture be thus handled. These requests, naturally, come from exhibitors who are not holders of Clara Kimball Young series' contracts.

If the Select Company were looking only to the monetary return there would be little to the argument in opposition to such a course. But Select officials are looking further. They have decided positively against thus exploiting the picture. "The Savage Woman" will be treated in every respect as one of the Clara Kimball Young series of Select pictures. This is despite the fact that this latest of Clara Kimball Young's pictures has been produced at a cost almost double that of the average subject in the series.

In "The Savage Woman" Clara Kimball Young is seen in the novel role of a girl of French extraction who has grown to maturity in the wilds of Abyssinia, where she has seen the face of no white man save that of her father, a half-savage outcast from the world of civilization. She roams the jungle, meagerly clad in the skins of animals shot by her father, bedecked with the gewgaws and ornaments of savagery. When her father dies she is driven through necessity into a series of adventures the telling of which forms a most novel story.

For some of these scenes it was necessary for Director Edmund Mortimer to re-create the ruins of a mammoth temple, which really exists in the Abyssinian wilderness. For other phases of the story there were created an Abyssinian village, an Italian villa, complete with its appointments and surroundings, and a French chateau, with its many rich interiors. A large company was assembled in California, where the picture was made, and held together during the weeks of its filming. Miss Young's sartorial equipment, again, ranges from a meager skin worn about her body, through all the barbaric trappings of a jeweled Priestess of Abyssinia, to the rich and varied equipment of a favorite of fashionable Parisian society striving to maintain her own against other favorites of the French capital.

"The Savage Woman" is the next succeeding production after "The Claw."

Big Six Films Going Strong.

The first of the William Fox Big Six of 1918, "A Fool There Was" and "The Bondman," were released last week and, according to a statement issued by the corporation elicited not only the most favorable comment from exhibitors, but also inquiries regarding future releases in this group of successes.

"Thousands of persons," read one letter from an exhibitor, "who didn't see 'A Fool There Was' and 'The Bondman' when I showed them at my theater a few years ago have come to see them in their new form. I played to capacity houses all week. Many of my patrons asked me when I was going to show the others of the Big Six, declaring that there was little wonder that these films should be chosen among all the Fox productions for release."

Cracks Three Ribs for Camera.

So realistic was a fight which Victor Sutherland and Edward F. Roseman, members of the William Fox company that staged "The Liar," starring Virginia Pearson, that Victor Sutherland is now going about in a surgeon's plaster, three of his ribs having been broken. Both Roseman and Sutherland are six-footers, and when Director Lawrence called for a good he-man battle they went to it without any regard for the late Marquis of Queensbury. At length Roseman pierced Sutherland's guard and with a stiff right jab sent his opponent sprawling into the camera. Sutherland picked himself up and was for continuing the battle, but Director Lawrence said he was well satisfied. Later it was discovered Sutherland's three ribs were broken.

Elinor Field Picture Set for August.

The first of Elinor Field's pictures under her contract to appear in Strand-Mutual comedies will be "What Will Father Say?" Cullen Landis heads the supporting cast. The director is Scott Sidney, who has directed the last series of Strands. The story is by Clarence A. Frambers. The picture deals with the efforts of a bride and bridegroom to make a favorable impression on the young man's father, whose violent objection to the son's marriage has cost him an interest in his dad's business.

Miss Fields has a chance to smile her most bewitching smile in this first picture, which will be an early August release.

First Betzwood Issue Is "When East Meets West"

THE title of Lady Tsen Mei's first release for the Betzwood Film Company has finally been decided on and will be "When East Meets West." That much overworked and seldom realized phrase, "something new," will be seen in both this super-feature and in "Sandy Burke," which is the second release of the company, starring Louis Bennison, of "Johnny Get Your Gun" fame. In connection with the latter star it is interesting to note that the scenes of Harry Leon Wilson's "Ruggles of Red Gap" and "Ma Pettingill" stories were all laid on the ranch of Louis Bennison, in Modoc County, California, and all the characters in these stories are real and live on the ranch today. "Ma Pettingill" lives there now and is the wife of the ranch manager.

Lady Tsen Mei has insured her hands, arms and back against possible injury in the sum of $10,000. The full beauty of these indispensable portions of her anatomy are shown in her first release, "When East Meets West," in her scenes in Washington in American evening clothes. Her back is believed to rival the famous Kitty Gordon's and other female stars who have earned a reputation of "beautiful backs."

Mutual Sets August 18 for Riley's "A Hoosier Romance"

A HOOSIER ROMANCE," by James Whitcomb Riley, produced in five parts by William N. Selig, will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation August 18. It was directed by Colin Campbell. The cast is headed by Coolleen Moore and Thomas Jefferson. Mr. Campbell is now at work on "The Country Fair," which will be in six parts.

"A Hoosier Romance" is one of the best known and most widely read of the writings of the famous Indiana pot. In anticipation of the forthcoming production a cameraman was sent to Mr. Riley's home shortly after the purchase of the book, and some interesting informal pictures of the poet were filmed. These will be shown for the first time in "A Hoosier Romance."

"'A Hoosier Romance' comes up to the standard that I have set for Mutual productions," declared Mr. Sheldon in announcing the release. "I have promised the motion picture exhibitors that no production will be released over the Mutual name which does not measure up to the best in screen art and does not offer money-making opportunities for the exhibitor. 'A Hoosier Romance' does both."

Another Star in Her Service Flag.

The list of service stars in Leah Baird's dressing room is growing. The most recent addition was occasioned by the enlistment of her brother-in-law, Emmett Beck, in the naval forces of Uncle Sam.

Mr. Beck is well known in motion picture circles, having been a member of the Imp, Victor and Vitagraph stock companies, as well as having at different times appeared in Thanhouser special features. Previous to his motion picture experience he worked in vaudeville and also in concert work, being an accomplished musician both in band and orchestra.

Sixteen Ebonies Have Been Released.

Sixteen Ebony comedies have been released by General Film Company, according to a statement issued this week, and the increasing demand for these subjects is making necessary the working out of production plans far in advance. A surprise finish is one of the novel features in "When You Hit, Hit Hard." The climax comes when the changes from a closeup to a long shot, showing all the action to have transpired in a motion picture studio with director and cameraman in the continuity.

"Triple Trouble" Is New Essanay-Chaplin Comedy

ESSANAY announces the release of a new Charlie Chaplin comedy, "Triple Trouble." This picture is in the usual length of Chaplin comedies, two parts. The comedy is new throughout. Although Chaplin has not been working with Essanay for some years the company states that this film is not a reissue, nor a rehash, but a new film in its entirety.

The film was made when Chaplin was working with Essanay, but was not issued at the time. It was decided to hold it up for a more opportune time for release. There having been but one new Chaplin film issued in several months, George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, decided that the time was ripe for its release. While the market has been flooded with reissues and old films it was believed the public would eagerly welcome an entirely new comedy by the master comedian.

The comedy is declared to be full of the famous Chaplin antics, replete with Chaplin humor and brimming over with the genuine Chaplin fun.

The film was taken at the Essanay studios on the Coast and several thousand feet made. It has been carefully edited down to two reels so as to snap with action and life.

The comedy is being released through the George Kleine system, and prints have been shipped to all the branch offices and exhibitors invited to see the film for themselves.

The full amount of advertising is being got out on this comedy, more material in fact than on the usual feature production. This will include a full line of paper with snappy scenes from the play, slides, window cards, lobby displays, 11 by 14 and 22 by 28, both in color and sepia, cuts of scenes, mats, stills, press sheets and advertising hints for exhibitors.

Princeton Campus in World-Picture.

An altogether unusual honor was recently bestowed on World-Pictures when Princeton University permitted the use of its campus for the filming of a number of important scenes in a new picture, "The Unveiling Hand," in which Kitty Gordon is starred. The picture for this reason ought to be of intense interest to all sons of "Old Nassau" and also for the additional reason that unconsciously a number of professors who were on the campus at the time posed before the camera and were included in several of the scenes. Before the university would give permission for the use of the campus they insisted that the manuscript be submitted to them for approval.

Fine Cast Behind Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm"

HARRY L. FRANKLIN, who is to direct Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm," has assembled an unusually splendid cast in support of the young star.

King Baggot, he of widespread fame and popularity among movie fans, will play the role opposite Miss Stevens, namely, that of Clayborn Kildare, the young southerner. Although the parts formerly played by Mr. Baggot have been many and varied, of wide range in type and big opportunities in character and delineation, the role of Clayborn Kildare gives this sterling actor one of the best in his entire career, calling, as it does, for the most subtle psychology of motives, the most delicate shadings of characterization—in other words, a far reaching knowledge of human nature.

The Jacques Benoix of the piece will be played by Crauford Kent, who thus makes his Metro debut, although he is well known to lovers of the photoplay. Mrs. Benoix will be played by Mrs. Maggie Breyer, an established favorite with Metro audiences. Another Metro actress is also a member of Miss Stevens' company. Helen Lindroth who will play Mrs. Leigh, the mother of Kate Kildare—Emily Stevens. It was in another mother role that Miss Lindroth made her first appearance before a Metro camera, in support of Emmy Whelen in "The House of Gold." Edward Davis will play the lawyer.

"Kildare of Storm," was originally the first novel of book length by Eleanor Mercein Kelly, who, at the time of its publication had already won for herself an enviable position among the short story writers. Mr. Franklin will be assisted in directing Miss Stevens by P. Thad Volkman who has been a member of the Metro staff for some time.

"Over the Top" for Liberty Theaters.

"Over the Top," Vitagraph's famous war special with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, is to be shown to Uncle Sam's soldiers in all of the National Army camps, according to a statement issued this week by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. This comes close upon the announcement that the American Defense Society had listed "Over the Top" as a patriotic subject for benefits to be conducted all over the United States, and Mr. Irwin says that as soon as dates can be settled upon it will be shown under the auspices of the Women's National committee of the society all over the country. These benefits, however, will be separate from the showings planned for the Liberty theaters in the sixteen training camps of the country.

Here's Lila Lee's Supporting Cast.

For her first appearance in films, Lila Lee, newest Paramount star, of recent and delightful vaudeville memory, will have an exceptionally fine cast. The picture is "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," by Tom Gallon, with the scenario by Edith Kennedy. George Melford is director. Harrison Ford is leading man.

Raymond Hatton has a character role. Others in the cast are William Brunton, Parks-Jones, Spottiswoode Aitken, Bud Duncan, Eunice Moore, Maym Kelso, Nina Byron, William McLaughlin and Jane Wolff.

The picture is a whimsical story of New York tenement life and an imaginary place known as Dream Valley.

First National Pushing "Crusaders."

Full page advertisements are being used in Collier's Weekly, The Literary Digest and Leslie's Weekly to acquaint the general public with the merits of "Pershing's Crusaders" now being released under the auspices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in the various parts of the country.

These "ads" are expected to supplement the local advertising campaigns of exhibitors.

Official War Review No. 4 Is a Stirring Release

THE Official War Review No. 4 will be released by Pathe, July 22. This is issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. In this new war review picture one beholds for the first time on the screen in this country just what happens after a great German assault on the lines along the West front. These pictures, taken by British cinematographers at the risk of their lives, show British soldiers weary after days of fighting leaving the first lines. They are covered with mud and exhausted to the point where they seem barely able to drag one foot after another. But the smile of victory illuminates their dirt-streaked faces, and as they observe the cinematographers pointing the eye of the camera in their direction they wave their hands cheerfully, and apparently muster up a hearty cheer. They are shown on their way to rest. Good food and a chance to fraternize with their French comrades in the rest billets a few miles back are also given them.

Another view shows roads being prepared for an artillery advance, munitions trains bring up shells from the big guns, the field artillery prepares for an attack, and the "Liliputian line" that carries munitions to the batteries at the front is clearly pictured. Just what kind of people the plain soldiers are in the ranks of the German army is a question paramount in the minds of all Americans at home. In this reel are shown thousands of Germans who have been captured by the French and are being marched to the rear. These pictures vividly show the low order of mentality of the Germans in ranks, but at that these prisoners appreciate their good fortune in falling into the hands of their enemy, for they grin and nod, and bow and scrape for their warm food which to them seems to be the treat of a lifetime.

Another vivid part of this reel shows a French village that has been made the target of the big guns of the Germans and is a devasted and heart-breaking ruin. There are many pictures in this view taken by the official Italian army cinematographers, and show the Austrian positions at Valbella Peak as they appear from an Italian outpost; Italian guns on Monte Grappa bombard the foe, other batteries throw a curtain of shells to cover the advancing Italian infantry, the Italians reach their objective capturing possessions on Valbella Peak. In this section, too, are shown pictures of hundreds of Austrians captured by the Italians and being treated by doctors and being fed by kindly Italians.

American soldiers are shown pushing forward to take their part in the heavy fight in a sector in France. Our crews man a battery of big guns, and there is a stirring picture of a brave American soldier who was severely wounded in holding the post and now stands before his admiring fellow doughboys while the cross of war is pinned upon his blouse.

Golden Filming Serial Scenes in Newfoundland

DIRECTOR Joseph A. Golden of Western Photoplays left New York recently for Newfoundland, taking with him the entire company employed in filming the Leah Baird serial, including the leading man, Charles Hutchinson, who recently recovered from a spell of sickness.

Several sea episodes will be filmed, the principal scenes occurring aboard a beautiful yacht which has been chartered for the purpose. The company will live aboard the yacht during their Newfoundland stay.

A small fleet of motor boats will also be used by Director Golden, and it is said that a number of exciting and thrilling scenes will be filmed.

Lytell at Work on Fourth Metro.

Bert Lytell, the young Metro star, finds his role in "Unexpected Places" very much to his liking. Under the direction of E. Mason Hopper Lytell has romped through the first week's work on the picture at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, and the results has been not only substantial but satisfying.

Rhea Mitchell again is leading woman, Rosemary Theby is playing her second time with the young Metro star in the role of Cherie, an adventuress. Others in the cast are Edythe Chapman, Colin Kenny, Louis Morrison, John Burton, Staton Heck and Jay Dwiggins.

Fox Has Produced Many Works of Standard Merit

WITH the announcement that William Fox has just purchased "Buchanan's Wife," by Justus Miles Forman; "The Strange Woman," by William J. Hurlbut, and two more Zane Grey books, "The Last of the Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger," the Fox Film Corporation can point with pride to the list of notable works of literature which it has put into the films.

This list includes some of the best known works and the names of the best writers in this country and Europe. Not only have the books of contemporary writers been bought, but William Fox has gone into the classics. Among these are "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Salome," "Cleopatra," "Camille," "The Two Orphans" and "The Clemenceau Case."

"Jack and the Beanstalk" was adapted from the childhood classic of the same name, as were "Babes in the Woods," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." "The Conqueror," starring William Farnum, was based on the life of Sam Houston, the great pioneer of the Southwest. "Treasure Island," of course, was the picture of Robert Louis Stevenson's famous book. "Heart of a Lion" was adapted from Ralph Connors' "The Doctor," and "Du Barry" was the picturization of the famous play of the same name.

Affiliated Is Explained to Delegates in Boston

THE co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated Distribution Corporation at the Boston convention occupied some attention upon the part of the convention's delegates. This interest was given added impetus by the presence at the convention of Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, who attended the convention in response to an invitation of the leaders of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Pettijohn let it be known upon his arrival that the sole purpose of this attendance was to devote himself to the interests of a harmonious union of exhibitors and that the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated would have no part in this discussion.

Notwithstanding Mr. Pettijohn's stand, however, a number of the delegates upon their own initiative held informal conferences upon the subject. Especially was this true among the exhibitors present from New England and St. Louis. It was the first time that these exhibitors had had an opportunity to investigate at first hand the merits of the movement, as the Affiliated organization has not yet entered those fields.

Following the convention John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and a director for the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Greater New York on the Affiliated board, remained in Boston to cooperate with the exhibitors of that city in the formation of the New England unit of the Affiliated.

Gerard Film Cracks El Paso Precedent

WHAT has been termed by local newspapers as the biggest event in El Paso theatrical annals has been the conversion of Liberty Hall, El Paso, Texas, one of the largest auditoriums in the country, into a motion picture theater for the first time in its history for the showing of Ambassador James W. Gerard's, "My Four Years in Germany."

The great demand for seats and the magnitude of the picture prompted the management of Liberty Hall, which heretofore was devoted exclusively to the staging of operatic productions, concerts, pageants, and other elaborate forms of entertainment, to break a precedent.

K. C.'s Liberty Plays Goldwyn's Full Week

THE new Liberty theater, Kansas City, Mo., among the beautiful playhouses in the West, was recently opened with many city officials and scores of representative citizens as invited guests. In many respects the Liberty is said to be a noteworthy achievement in theater building.

Erected exclusively for motion pictures, everything in it is adapted to them—the seating arrangement, the peculiar system of aisle lighting that makes all parts of the theater accessible, the spacious lobby and the large foyer beyond. The Liberty seats 1,200, room for more than two hundred other chairs having been sacrificed to gain space in aisles and between rows.

Samuel Harding, manager of the new Liberty, advertised the opening of his house on a lavish scale. His enterprise was reflected in a splendid page advertisement in the Kansas City Star. Aside from a picture of the manager and a four-column reproduction of the pretty playhouse the page was devoted to the attractions that are to be shown.

Manager Harding has arranged to present all Goldwyn Pictures for a full week at the Liberty. The Goldwyn-Rex Beach productions will also have week engagements.

Mr. Harding and his brother, Dave H. Harding, the latter acting in the capacity of secretary and treasurer, have organized an orchestra second to none in the West. As director the Hardings have Frederick J. Curth, for several years concert master of the Kansas City Symphony orchestra. Mr. Curth directs an orchestra of sixteen pieces at the Liberty. Then there is a beautiful Austin organ of special design, with an echo organ.

The Liberty was erected at a cost of $250,000 on ground worth more than a half million dollars.

Roccardi Has Role in Fox Play.

The person who made lemonade out of the lemons Fate handed him had nothing on Albert Roccardi, a player in the Virginia Pearson company which just completed "The Liar" for William Fox, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence. Roccardi, several months ago, was in an accident which resulted in the fracture of several bones. He was in a hospital for a long time and underwent several operations. "The Liar" was the first play he has appeared in since his recovery from the accident. His injuries had been of such a nature as to make it easy for him to play the part of a cripple.

Gail Kane.

Gail Kane's "Love's Law" to Be Released in September

MISS GAIL KANE has completed the first of her new series of productions for Mutual release under the title of "Love's Law," a thrilling story of life and love, and is at work on another not yet named.

The new Kane offering was just written by Joseph F. Poland, the author of more than one hundred produced photoplays. The scenario was prepared by J. Clarkson Miller, who is responsible for some of the best acting plays on the screen.

The success of Miss Kane's former Mutual productions is a fair index to the quality of the forthcoming series of eight plays, the first of which will be released early in September.

The successful Mutual productions of Miss Kane included "The Serpent's Tooth," "Souls in Pawn," "Southern Pride," "The Bride's Silence," "Who's Wife," and "The Upper Crust," all of which proved box office assets.

The play is finely staged and the photography is excellent, according to Mutual. The direction was in the hands of Francis J. Grandon. Included in the cast are Courtenay Foote, leading man; Reed Hamilton, Frederick Jones, Mathilde Baring, and Emile LaCroix.

Murder Mystery for Virginia Pearson.

A murder mystery forms the basis of "The Goddess of Chance," which Virginia Pearson has just started under the direction of Edmund Lawrence for William Fox at the Blackton studios in Brooklyn. The play was written by Harry O. Hoyt, and in it the heroine unravels the mystery which surrounds the murder of her father. It is said several novel situations are involved in the play. Miss Pearson is supported by a large and capable cast.

Miss Heilstadt Puts Over "Tarzan" in Novel Fashion

THE showing of "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Marquette Theater in La Salle, Ill., during the first week of July, was signalized by one of the most effective lobby displays ever seen in that city, although put on at a minimum of expense and the maximum of ingenuity.

Miss Olga Heilstadt, the young woman who manages the Marquette Theater, wished to give "Tarzan" a proper lobby exploitation, having read of the excellent work accomplished along this line in other big cities. She found, however, that it was simply impossible to secure either live or stuffed wild animals for the occasion, so she very cleverly hit upon the idea of utilizing toys instead.

Dressing the entire front of the theater in heavy green foliage with some imitation Spanish moss and a thick mat of stage grass to give the proper jungle atmosphere, she then erected various cages and small tanks in which miniature lions, tigers, apes, alligators and other fierce denizens of the wild were incarcerated. A small bronze elephant standing on a pedestal at one side of the entrance also added to the effectiveness of the display. Signs warning spectators not to feed the animals or to enrage them in any way were posted in conspicuous places.

Needless to say "Tarzan" did a big business in Marquette besides creating no end of humorous comment.

The effective manner in which Miss Heilstadt overcame the seeming handicaps that confronted her in putting on "Tarzan" shows how much can be accomplished when the exhibitor applies brains and originality to the problems of showmanship.

"The Bluffer" Starts At World Studios

Clara Beranger's picture play, "The Bluffer," was put in work last week at the World studio at Fort Lee. It will have an all-star cast, including June Elvidge, Irving Cummins, Frank Mayo, George MacQuarrie, Muriel Ostriche, Tony Merlo and others. Travers Vale is directing.

Griffith's "Great Love" Makes August Artcrafts Notable

FOUR Artcraft productions are announced for release during August. The schedule includes two special productions of D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. DeMille, a Douglas Fairbanks feature, and a Thomas H. Ince production starring William S. Hart. The release of these productions have been scheduled as follows: August 5, Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco"; 12, D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love"; 19, William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne"; 26, Cecil B. DeMille's "Till I Come Back to You."

As the title "Bound in Morocco" would indicate the scenes of this latest Fairbanks offering are laid in Africa. The story was written by Allan Dwan, who also directed the picture, and the author-director is said to have woven a tale of mystery, adventure, romance, and love through which the athletic comedian runs and leaps with reckless abandon to afford his audience laughs. With its scenes of desert life, its picturesque costuming, its pretty women and savage-visaged men, Hugh McClung, the cameraman, had a lot to work with. Pauline Curley is Fairbanks' leading woman, Frank Campeau again is seen in the "heavy" role, and other players of note included in the cast are Tully Marshall, Jay Dwiggins, Edythe Chapman, and Fred Burns.

Much has been said and written concerning "The Great Love," the first of David Wark Griffith's special productions for Artcraft. In making the picture, Mr Griffith had the sanction and co-operation of the British Government, and the actual help of many of the foremost people of England, including Queen Alexandra, mother of King George. Also appearing in the picture are Lady Diana Manners, the Princess of Monaco, the Countess of Drogheda, the Hon. Mrs. Montague, Countess Massereene, Violet Little, Elizabeth Asquith, daughter of the former Prime Minister, and others of prominence. In the cast of professional players appear Lillian Gish, George Fawcett, Robert Harron, George Siegmann, Henry B Walthall, Mansfield Stanley, Rosemary Theby, and Gloria Hope.

Thomas H Ince presents William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne," a Western story said to be perfectly suited to the talents of the popular Western star. Charles Alden Seltzer is the author of the tale, which ran serially in the Argosy under the title, "The Vengeance of Jefferson Gawne." Katherine MacDonald is Mr. Hart's leading woman, and in the supporting cast are Lon Chaney, Gretchen Cohill, and Tomanoto the Japanese actor. Lederer, Gertrude Short, Leon Kent, Milton Ross, and E. B. Tilton. Mr. Hart, himself, directed the production under Mr. Ince's supervision.

"Till I Come Back to You" is the title of Cecil B. DeMille's special Artcraft. It is essentially a war picture, the scenes being laid in Belgium just prior to and subsequent to the Hun invasion. The story has until now been announced under the title "Paths of Glory," and was written by Jeanie MacPherson. The production is also notable in the fact that Bryant Washburn, who will hereafter appear as a star of Paramount pictures, makes his bow as a Famous Players-Lasky player in the leading male role. Opposite him is Florence Vidor, and others in the cast are Winter Hall, G. Butler Clonbough, Georgia Stone, Julia Faye, Lillian Leighton, and Clarence Geldart.

Edith Story at Work on "Shadow and Substance"

MANY rarely beautiful exterior scenes for "Shadow and Substance," the Edith Storey picture by Lois Zellner, were filmed last week at the four hundred acre estate, the summer home of a prominent New York business man at Tarrytown on the Hudson. In fact, Director Herbert Blache, assisted by Edward Lawrence, arranged some really remarkable effects, particularly so in view of the fact that the play, a strong, virile story of the northwest, replete with breeze and decisive action, calls for scenery of the particularly rugged type.

And it is in these scenes that Baby Ivy Ward, who plays little Billy, has an opportunity to again display the rare emotional ability of which she is such a wonderful exponent, although but four years of age. Her part not only calls for the depicting of the normal, happy, playful child, but she is also called upon to display, first, suppressed feeling, then genuine grief, then, with the tears still streaming down her baby face, the radiant happiness brought by the return of a dear lost one.

In Miss Storey's company are Frank Mills, Lilie Leslie, Joseph Kilgour, George Stevens, Augusta Perry, Mathilde Brundage, Harry Linson, Ben Walker, John

Wake Farnum by Shots. Then Hand Him Vibrator

WILLIAM FARNUM, the William Fox star, celebrated his birthday, July 4, in Hermit Creek Camp, Grand Canyon, Arizona, where he was at work on the picturization of Zane Grey's novel, "The Rainbow Trail," under the direction of Frank Lloyd. In honor of the occasion the members of Mr. Farnum's company presented a vibrator to the star.

Mr. Farnum was awakened at 6:30 o'clock in the morning by a volley of twenty-six revolver shots fired by the members of the company. The echoes flung back by the 3,000 feet of rock that rises from the camp to the rim of the canyon awoke the star on the sleeping porch of his little one-room house. At first he thought all the racket was in honor of Uncle Sam, but when he found that he shared the day with the nation he fired six shots himself.

Mr. Farnum made a brief speech expressing his gratitude and his pride in being thus remembered by his friends, and then spent most of the day making scenes for his picture.

Engineers Watch Motor "Accident."

Representatives from two automobile factories and also from an accident insurance company requested permission of producers Golden and Alperstein to witness an "accident" which the film men were arranging to take place last week.

In one of the episodes of the Leah Baird serial an incident is recorded before the camera showing the head-on collision of two automobiles, both approaching each other at terrific speed.

Representative engineers of the auto factories were allowed to examine and make a report on the condition of various parts of the autos in question immediately after the shock, and it is believed valuable information was obtained which may be the means of safeguarding the lives of other "movie" stars whose auto accidents may not be so premeditated.

"Her Only Way" for Norma Talmadge.

It has been decided to give the title of "Her Only Way" to the production on which Norma Talmadge is working to be released by Select Pictures. The story is from the pen of George Scarborough, the playwright, and was prepared for the screen by Mary Murillo, scenario writer for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation.

This is the picture upon which Director Sydney A. Franklin has been working for the past few weeks, and in which Miss Talmadge is supported by Eugene O'Brien, her leading man; Jobyna Howland, and Ramsey Wallace. Miss Talmadge is working hard trying to complete the filming of the production during the fourth week of July, but the rainy weather of the last two weeks has greatly interfered with the schedule.

Charles Hutchinson Recovers.

The recovery of Charles Hutchinson from his recent accident while working in the coming Leah Baird serial was an occasion of a volley of cheers at the Crystal studio. "Hutch" is a prime favorite with every one of his co-workers.

Mr. Hutchinson as an actor, athlete, "dare-devil," and all around screen performer is popular and widely known. Featured by Harry Raver in his series of Alma Hanlon productions he rapidly became a strong favorite, and will be followed through the Leah Baird serial by many admirers.

Charles Hutchinson.

Starting in the screen profession at the old Imp studio he rose rapidly. Later he played leads and directed for the Victor Company, and also in many well remembered Blache features. Then he went to the Crystal. Thus he was then as now under the same roof, and under the directorship of J. A. Golden.

Some of his best known dramatic work was in "War Brides," with Nazimova; "Not Guilty," with Cyril Scott; "Divorced," with Hilda Spong, and "Hearts and Flowers," with Mrs. Thomas Whiffen.

Under the directorship of Mr. Golden a skillful blending of the dramatic ability of "Charlie" Hutchinson with samples of his athletic prowess and "hair-raising" nerve should make the coming serial a succession of heart throbs and real "movie" punches.

Third Snakeville Series Starts.

"Sophie's Birthday Party," the last of the second series of Snakeville comedy reissues, is released this week by General Film. This is the twentieth Snakeville comedy released. It will be followed by a third block of ten subjects, the first of which, "When Slippery Slim Went for the Eggs," is scheduled for release next week. The Snakevilles have been given a hearty reception by exhibitors who are in search of high grade slapstick comedies, General Film reports.

Some of the subjects in the new series just announced by Essanay are "When Slippery Slim Went for the Eggs," "Others Started but Sophie Finished," "Slippery Slim Gets Square," "Snakeville's Twins," "Snakeville's Beauty Parlor" and "Versus Sledge Hammers." Sophie Clutts, Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete remain as the chief characters in the new series.

Louise Glaum.

In Photodrama of France Louise Glaum Finds Ideal

As a story for the filming of her fourth Paralta picture, Louise Glaum has found one which is her ideal film play. It is a drama laid in the Champagne district of France, with the war as a background, in three periods, each ten years apart. The story was written by Francis Paget.

"I have liked many of the pictures in which I have appeared, especially the non-vampire type of my Paralta Plays. In fact, I love my part in each, and, of course, do not accept a story that I am at all doubtful about liking—it would not do, because that feeling would grow, and I could not do my best with it. But when Mr. Paget's story was given me I knew before I had finished reading it that it was the best I had ever been given from the standpoint of the star.

"I suppose many would consider the part too hard to play, for it involves much study and work to play what is really three separate parts in the same picture. The fact that the story is built around events rather than around the star gives opportunity for the star to put forth effort and win greater popularity, interest, and sympathy than in those conventional star vehicles where all is prepared for her to walk the stage and emote a time or so.

"Then there is the satisfaction in being able to portray three different ages—three different women—all in the same picture, putting myself into each one of them."

Justus Miles Forman Story

"BUCHANAN'S WIFE," the well-known novel by Justus Miles Forman, who lost his life on the Lusitania, has just been purchased by William Fox. The purchase is in line with Mr. Fox's policy of buying only the best stories by the best-known authors, this policy being exemplified very strikingly in the last two weeks by announcements that Mr. Fox had purchased "The Strange Woman," the great stage success by William J. Hurlbut; "The Last of the Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger," by Zane Grey, and "The Two-Gun Man" and "The Coming of the Law," by Charles Alden Seltzer.

Friends of Justus Miles Forman have spoken of "Buchanan's Wife," which was the last book Mr. Forman wrote before sailing on the last voyage of the Lusitania, as being almost supernatural in its foreboding of disaster.

In speaking of the purchase of "Buchanan's Wife," an official of the company said he "considered the book one of the strongest and best adapted for motion pictures he had read in a long time."

Goldwyn Closes Prize Contracts for Showing Star Series

EVIDENCE of the immediate approval of Goldwyn's adoption of the Star Series booking policy is afforded by the announcement by the company of the signing of contracts with S. L. Rothapfel for both the Rialto and Rivoli theaters, and with Harold Edel for the Strand. Thus Goldyn's individual star series productions will have their New York first-run presentation in three leading screen institutions.

Goldwyn also announces the closing of and important contract for all of the Ascher Brothers-Lumliner & Trinz-Schaefer houses, numbering twenty-seven in all, in Chicago, for the complete output of fifty or more productions in the coming season under the star series plan. Announcement likewise is made of the signing of the Stanley and Palace theaters and all of the great Stanley chain of houses in Philadelphia under contract with Jules F. Mastbaum for the complete new year's output of the company.

"The signing of New York's three great motion picture theaters and the Stanley and Ascher bookings are matters of pride to Goldwyn," says Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. "The Stanley group represents the second largest booking of theaters that it is possible for a company to obtain in the United States. The booking, obtained through Messrs. Nathan, Harry and Max Ascher, is the third largest available in the country.

"It is worthy of note that Mr. Rothapfel is giving his endorsement to the Goldwyn standard of production and that the endorsement first given us in New York last year by the late Mitchel H. Mark is continued this year by Mr. Edel.

"The endorsement that the late Stanley V. Mastbaum gave us by a solid booking of all Goldwyn Pictures at his Stanley theater is repeated for the coming season by his brother, and we continue to have our splendid representation in the largest and best houses throughout the Philadelphia territory.

"In our first year we played all of the Ascher Brothers' houses in Chicago, as well as every representative theater in that territory. Mr. Nathan Ascher has just closed his contract for every production we are to make in the coming twelve months in twenty-seven houses, all of his own and the theaters of his allies."

Goldwyn Pictures distribution for the Dominion of Canada for a period of years will be in the hands of J. J. & Jules Allen, rated as the largest exhibitors and distributors in the Dominion. This announcement follows the signing of a contract this week between Goldwyn through Samuel Goldfish, its president, and J. J. Allen, of Toronto.

The Allens, besides being powerful distributing factors in Canada, also own and operate the Allen theater, Toronto, the cornerstone of their theater interests, and theaters in Montreal, Quebec, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Brandon, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Regina.

Distributing offices are maintained in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, N. B., Calgary, Winnipeg and Vancouver, B. C. In addition these two successful brothers are the heads of the Monarch Film Company, Ltd., and Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.

Mystery Sets Dominate Leah Baird Serial

ONE of the most intricate sets ever erected for motion pictures is being installed at the Crystal studios for the use in several episodes of the coming Leah Baird serial. In order to supervise the preliminary installation of same before taking the serial company up to Newfoundland Monday, Director J. A. Golden worked from Saturday morning until Monday noon without rest. However, under his supervision the Crystal studio electrical and carpenter staffs have produced a set declared to be a marvel of mechanical skill.

To explain thoroughly the manner in which the results are obtained would be betraying stage-craft secrets. However, suffice to say that to enable Sheldon Lewis to checkmate Leah Baird, the set opens apparently in an old book store with a stock of thousands of reading matter on the shelves. An entire section of this shelving and wall is made to swing open by the pressure of a button. This opening reveals a complete workshop containing electric motors, switchboards and tools, lathes and revolving steel saws—also a perfect model of a huge radio-torpedo.

A section of the floor of this workshop drops, acting as an elevator down to the bottom of an underground passageway. Constantly running water simulates the trickling dampness of a dismal vault, situated deep under the city. This vault-passage leads to an underground council chamber wherein is located an electrically controlled steel chair.

This set, or rather series of sets, is made to work mechanically at the touch of hidden buttons and levers, and constitutes an important factor in the development of the Leah Baird serial.

Making of "Judgment" Nears Finish.

A majority of the exteriors for "Judgment," a Metro production co-featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, supported by Herbert Standing and an all-star cast, have been photographed. The most imposing of the interior sets is a massive courtroom, in which the sensational murder trial in "Judgment" takes place. An unusual twist in the plot of "Judgment," which was scenarioized by George D. Baker, make it more expedient—because more artistic—to reproduce the courtroom instead of attempting to photograph the scene in a real tribunal of justice.

Besides Miss Nilsson and Mr. Farnum and Mr. Standing, who is seen as a supreme court judge, the cast of "Judgment" includes Spottiswoode Aitken, Harry S. Northrup, Edward Alexander, Lydia Knott and Katherine Griffith. Will S. Davis is directing the production.

Select Titles for Blue Ribbons.

Two of the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features for August which were listed under the title they bear in story form and which titles were declared to be temporary now have been definitely named for the screen. They are:

"All Man," made from "Fiddler's Green," a magazine story by Donn Byrne, and listed for release on August 5. Harry Morey is the star, with Betty Blythe featured in his support, and the play was made at the Vitagraph Eastern studio under the direction of Paul Scardon.

"The Changing Woman," made from the O. Henry story, "A Matter of Mean Elevation." This is scheduled for release on August 19, and will present Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, stars of "The Woman in the Web" serial, in their first Blue Ribbon feature as a starring combination.

War Fireworks in Secret Telegram.

Spectacular pictures of trench fireworks are an exclusive feature of Screen Telegram No. 40, Mutual's latest news release. The film was taken at Columbia Heights near Washington, D. C., and is a graphic and realistic display of war pyrotechnics. The demonstration includes aeroplane bombing, fighting with liquid fire, gas attacks, rocket firing, and hand grenade throwing. The picture covers both day and night scenes.

The cameraman was so close to the actual test of the bombs, aeroplane and grenade, that several times in the course of the exhibition he was forced to abandon his camera and flee.

Madelyn Clare Is Leading Woman in "Young America"

WORK on "Young America," the George K. Spoor feature production now is nearing completion. Interior scenes have all been taken and Director Arthur Berthelet is working on exterior settings which are being made in and about Chicago.

"Young America" is a picture in seven parts, taken from the Cohan and Harris stage success written by Fred Ballard. The role of leading woman is taken by Broadway's mystery girl, Madelyn Clare and sympathtizes with the village bad boy, the part taken by Charles Frohman Everett, a nephew of the late Charles Frohman. It is through her influence that the boy's better side is brought out and the village bad boy finally turned into the typical manly young American.

Miss Clare comes from a theatrical family. She herself has played before the footlights ever since she can remember. Later she was sent to school at Mount St. Joseph's, Cincinnati, and to Mount St. Vincent, on the Hudson.

After finishing school she played in stock in New Orleans and then was signed with the Orpheum circuit. Her first picture was with Tyrone Power, in which she played the leading woman's role. She also starred in "Love Thy Neighbor," but made her greatest success with the Lincoln Cycle, in which she created the part of Nancy Hanks, mother of Lincoln.

When playing on Broadway she was known as the "Mystery Girl." Miss Clare is a typical athletic, outdoor girl, being an enhtusiastic golfer and horsewoman, besides being an expert with the oars.

Authenticity Sought for Fox's "The Prussian Cur"

ONE of the notable features of "The Prussian Cur," the William Fox dramatization of the German spy system in America, is said to be the fidelity to actual events which R. A. Walsh has observed throughout the picture. Not only are the big episodes based on many court records, government announcements and authenticated newspaper reports, but the "inside" workings of the Kaiser's secret agents are exposed by Captain Horst von der Goltz, ringleader in the plot to blow up the locks of the Welland Canal in Canada and self-confessed German spy.

The activities of enemy agents and propagandists, it is declared, are followed closely from the time when Ambassador Bernstorff launched his "invisible embassy" in Washington up to the present hour. The damaging of airplanes by pro-German workmen, the destruction of war supplies, the burning of factories, the stirring up of labor troubles—all these crimes have been faithfully depicted on the screen from the most trustworthy information.

The scenes in the palace at Berlin were shot in sets that were exact duplicates of the originals, with all the "atmosphere" and local colors that it was possible to create. The same truth holds with regard to the German Embassy at Washington. For these scenes in the nation's capital some of the furniture used actually came from the former offices of Count von Bernstorff, having been disposed of shortly after the Ambassador was sent home.

The big scene in which President Wilson reads his famous war message to a joint session of Congress is said to be an impressive film portrayal of a historic event. She plays the part of the young married woman, the only woman who understands

Four All Star Series for Release by Metro

METRO will issue four exceptionally strong All Star Series pictures during the month of August. The first and most notable of these is the picturization of Edith Wharton's greatest novel, "The House of Mirth," with an all star cast including Katharine Harris Barrymore, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Edward Abeles, Christine Mayo and Lottie Briscoe. Miss Wharton's masterpiece, which was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, has been produced on a scale commensurate with the famous classic itself under the direction of Mr. Capellani. The three other August releases will be "In Judgment Of," co-starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum with a cast of unusual distinction headed by Herbert Standing; "Flower of the Dusk," in which Viola Dana is starred, and "Shadow and Substance," starring Edith Storey. They will be released in the order named.

"The House of Mirth," which will be issued August 5, calls for scenes of luxury.

The story is not only a powerful one, but keen as well, with the keenness of which Edith Wharton, the celebrated author of "The House of Mirth," is mistress.

"In Judgment Of," starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, supported by Herbert Standing and an all-star cast, will be the August 12 release, George D. Baker, Metro's western manager of productions, is the author of the scenario. It is a tense drama, strong in its appeal to the emotions. Miss Nilsson has the role of Mary Manners, daughter of a political dictator. Mr. Farnum has a part peculiarly suited to his personality.

Myrtle Reed's celebrated novel, "Flower of the Dusk," will be the August 19 release with Viola Dana as the star. John H. Collins, who adapted the novel for the screen, also directed the picture.

Edith Storey's picture, "Shadow and Substance," which will be the August 26 release, is a story of the great north woods by Lois Zellner. Herbert Blache directed the picture. Frank Mills, Lillie Leslie, Joseph Kilgour, George Stevens, Augustus Perry, Harry Linson, Ben Walker, John Cohill, Tomanto, the Japanese actor, Mathilde Brundage, and Baby Ivy Ward gives Miss Storey splendid support in the picture.

Vitagraph Serial Gets Big Start.

"A Fight for Millions," third of the Vitagraph serials, featuring William Duncan, was released to exhibitors on July 15, when the first episode, entitled "The Snare," was shown. A following episode will be exhibited weekly.

Like its predecessors, "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman" and "The Woman in the Web," this serial was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Duncan appears in the dual role of star and director, and has with him Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, and a large company of cowboys and athletes, many of whom have appeared with him in his other serials.

The serial has been booked for all of the houses in B. S. Moss circuit in the New York territory, on the Pantages circuit on the Pacific Coast, and in many other chains in different parts of the country.

"Her Moment" Goes to Loew's.

The first appearance of "Her Moment," the sympathetic problem story by Samuel London, featuring Anna Luther, will be in the principal Loew houses in New York in the first week in August. General Film's New York exchange closed arrangements for this engagement after a special showing of the film for the Marcus Loew reviewing staff.

Donzella Cross,
Saleslady of Universal's Salt Lake City Office.

In accordance with an announcement from the Triangle Distributing Corporation, Harry Mestayer will be the featured player in "High Tide," a Triangle play scheduled for release on the program for the week of August 17. He will replace Jack Livingston as the lead in this production.

Two Noted Players for Metro's "Pals First"

TWO important additions to the cast supporting Harold Lockwood in "Pals First," which Metro will distribute under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc., were made last week with the engagement for the picture of Ruby de Remer and James Lackaye. Miss de Remer will play the leading feminine role, while Mr. Lackaye will enact the part of Dominie, the pal of Danny Rowland, the character portrayed by the star.

Though her career covers a period of only two years, Miss de Remer has achieved considerable success, both on the screen and on the stage. Her stage engagements included appearances as a principal in the last winter's "Midnight Frolic" and as prima donna in the Weber and Fields production of "Back Again." In her several screen engagements Miss de Remer played leading roles, her most noteworthy appearance being as the featured player in "The Auction Block."

Mr. Lackaye has been appearing on the stage and screen for thirty years. He was with Sol Smith Russell for two years; also with David Warfield in "The Grand Army Man," James A. Herne in "Shore Acres," the original "Cameo Kirby" company, in which he played opposite Nat Goodwin and later Dustin Farnum; Lew Fields in "The High Cost of Loving," "Excuse Me" and "The Gentleman from Mississippi." For six years he was starred in "York State Folks."

His picture appearances have also been numerous, and include a long engagement in the Bingle series and parts in many Metro releases, among them "The Upstart," which Edwin Carewe, who is directing "Pals First," produced.

Mr. Lackaye is a prototype of Thomas A. Wise, who played the same part in "Pals First" on the "legitimate" stage that Mr. Lackaye is playing in pictures. This is the second time he has played parts created by Mr. Wise, the first occasion arising when he was engaged to play the Wise part in "The Gentleman from Mississippi."

"Salome" Being Booked Only in the Big Towns

THE big ruled chart in the offices of Samuel F. Kingston of the Fox organization, whereon are noted the bookings of "Salome," biggest of Fox offerings of the season, is fairly sprouting datings. The ever-spreading drive already has penetrated to Seattle. The enveloping movement now in process of formation will effectually pinch off the southwest—and then Salome, siren heroine of the great Pagan court drama, re-enacted for the first time on the screen, will have the entire country in the grip of her fascinating arts.

Dates already set for primary offerings of the new spectacular drama, which embodies in its scenic investiture a complete rehabilitation of the Jerusalem of forty years before the coming of the Saviour, include such diverse centers as Boston, Kansas City and Seattle.

With the routing of the various editions of the picture play begun only four days ago, nine cities of importance have been booked for engagements of a week upward.

The Seattle engagement will begin on August 10 at the Orpheum. "Salome" will be seen at the Plymouth in Boston on August 19. It will be shown at the Teck in Buffalo on August 25, and at the Shubert in Kansas City on September 27.

Scores of requests for booking have been rejected by the Fox management, which is independently presenting the spectacle. It has been necessary to emphasize all over again that the production is absolutely reserved for the larger cities and that booking arrangements will be closed only with the biggest houses in those cities. A two-dollar scale will prevail.

Scene from "The Dream Lady" (Bluebird).

Universal's "Dream Lady" Preaches Happiness Gospel

PREACHING the gospel of happiness, "The Dream Lady," with Carmel Myers in the title role, is the sort of light and amusing entertainment which exhibitors find most welcome during the summer months. Although she has risen during the last few months because of the manner in which she has handled roles of a character nature, Carmel Myers shows in this five-reel Bluebird feature that she is just as much at home in portrayals which do not require her to appear as an Italian, Spanish, or Gypsy maid.

In "The Dream Lady" the Bluebird star enacts the role of Rosamund Gilbert, who all her life had indulged in dreams which circumstances made it impossible for her to realize. When she finally came into possession of a legacy, Rosamond promptly set out to bring about the realization of every last one of them—and did.

The cast supporting Miss Myers includes Thomas Holding, formerly leading man for Olga Petrova; Kathlees Emerson, Harry Von Meter, Philo McCollough, and Elizabeth Janes. "The Dream Lady" is scheduled for release on July 29.

Twenty More Prints for "The Geezer."

So many requests for bookings on "The Geezer of Berlin" have been received by the various Jewel exchanges that orders for twenty more prints than originally arranged for have been placed with the home office of that organization.

Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., is authority for the statement that there is every indication that "The Geezer of Berlin" will exceed in point of volume the number of bookings obtained to date on "The Kaiser."

"The fact that the first comedy ever handled by our organization combines mighty fine comedy with patriotic propaganda is undoubtedly the reason for the demand for 'The Geezer of Berlin' that has already made itself felt," declared Mr. Berman.

The release date for "The Geezer of Berlin" has been definitely set for Aug. 1.

Studio Leased for Flagg Comedies.

The Fifty-Fourth Street studio has been leased by Jack Eaton, of Town and Country Films, Inc., to be used for the making of the James Montgomery Flagg comedy series. They started there on picture No. 2, "Romance and Brass Tacks," in which picture they are starring Peggy Adams as the romantic girl.

Playing opposite Miss Adams is Olin Howland, late star of "Leave It to Jane." The leading juvenile part is played by Harold Foshay, formerly a Vitagraph player.

Fred Stone Starts Work On His Second Artcraft

FRED STONE has finished "Under the Top," his first production for Artcraft, at the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood, and almost immediately plunged into the production of his second picture. This will be "Johnny Get Your Gun," from the successful stage comedy in which Louis Bennison was starred. Under the direction of Donald Crisp a number of the opening scenes have already been taken, and the picture is said to be progressing with whirlwind speed.

The final week in the production of "Under the Top" in all probability was one of the busiest ever experinced by Fred Stone. In fact the seven days may fairly be called "stunt week" for the comedian, for he probably did more stunts in that period that he would ordinarily do in several months at any other time. He jumped, ran, rode, climbed, and tumbled from early morning till late at night until he must have had difficulty in remembering whether he was going or coming.

For one thing, the other day Stone vaulted over seven horses, a considerable stunt for one who has not been doing it day in and day out for some time. Later he rode bareback, doing all the things a lady in fluffy skirts and fleshings usually does on a curveting steed.

"The Hypocrites" in New York.

"The Hypocrites," the six-part George Loane Tucker productions starring Elizabeth Risdon, will open its New York engagement in the principal Marcus Loew houses in the metropolis, it is announced by J. A. Hammell, manager of General Film's local exchange in the Godfrey Building.

The strength of this feature, the Broadway popularity of the story and the excellence of the production from every standpoint are said to be the deciding reasons for the adoption of this attraction for the Loew houses. The film, although just announced, has brought in a great flood of inquiries already and its prospects in New York are represented as more than flattering.

Scene from "Flower of the Dusk" (Metro).

Viola Dana Going Fast on "Flower of the Dusk"

RAPID progress on "Flower of the Dusk," Viola Dana's current starring vehicle, is reported by Director John H. Collins. It is the second of Myrtle Reed's famous novels to have been secured by Metro for picturization. Director Collins has made the scenariozation in five acts.

"Flower of the Dusk," always one of the most popular of Miss Reed's human stories, calls for many charming New England scenes, many quaint types, and provides Miss Dana in the dual role of Constance North, the mother, and Barbara North, the daughter, with splendid opportunities.

Director Collins has engaged a cast, really two casts, one for the prologue and one for the play, that comprises not only many well known favorites on stage and screen, but those whose artistry will bring to life our friends from "Flower of the Dusk."

In the prologue we find Viola Dana playing Constance North, the mother when she was a young girl, and opposite her is Guy Coombs in the role of Lawrence Austin, whose love for her, as hers for him, is the great joy and at the same time sorrow of her life.

The part of Constance North, Miss Dana's husband, is played by Howard Hall. Mattie Austin is played by Bliss Milford, a well known Edison favorite. Alice Martin plays Miriam, Charles Sutton is the minister, and the roles of the two aunts are in the capable hands of Mrs. Ford and Maggie Breyer.

In the play others in the cast are Jack McGowan and Margaret McWade.

Two Fairbanks' Aids Go To War.

Joseph Henaberry, author and director of two of Douglas Fairbanks' greatest Artcraft successes — "The Man from Painted Post" and "Say, Young Fellow"— has been called to the colors. He left Hollywood for Fort MacDowell, San Francisco, where he will be permanently stationed until he leaves for overseas service.

Henaberry's contract with Douglas Fairbanks covers a period of five years, and should the war end before that time, as it is fervently hoped it will, he will again assume his duties.

Another member of the Fairbanks organization to be called to the colors is William Shea, who holds the distinction of having assembled and assisted in the editing of every Douglas Fairbanks production for Artcraft to date, starting with "In Again, Out Again," and concluding with "Bound in Morocco." Shea is now at Camp Kearney, Cal., where he has been assigned to special duty that deals with film entertainment for the soldiers.

Ince Engages Walthall to Star in "False Faces"

AS one of its special releases the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will offer Louis Joseph Vance's story, "False Faces." This subject will be produced by Thomas H Ince, and will present a most elaborate visualization of the Saturday Evening Post serial, disclosing the further adventures of "The Lone Wolf."

Henry B. Walthall has been engaged by Mr. Ince to star in "False Faces." Walthall's latest screen work will soon be viewed in D. W Griffith's "The Great Love," in which he appears to particular advantage. The screen version of "False Faces" will be prepared by J. G Hawks, who has many Ince scenarios to his credit.

The main plot deals with the establishment somewhere near Martha's Vineyard of a U-boat base and the destruction thereof through the chance intervention of the French ex-criminal, now virtually a secret agent. A lovely girl is an apparent intrigante, but in reality is also connected with Governmental work, and the result is the foiling of the plans of the Huns in America.

"No Children Wanted" (At Oakdale).

Gloria Joy, the youhtful child star of the Oakdale Productions, makes her appearance in the second of the series, "No Children Wanted," this week, according to General Film. This is in accordance with the bi-monthly release schedule adopted by General Film Company in the distribution of the series. Ethel Ritchie, R. Henry Grey, Edward Jobson, Neil Hardin and Daniel Gilfether are the other well known players who appear in this feature.

"No Children Wanted" is a sympathetic story of the struggle of a small daughter for parental love, which is denied her by a society-loving mother and a literary father, who becomes involved in an arms-smuggling case.

The next Oakdale production to be released is "Miss Mischief Maker," again featuring Gloria Joy.

Fox Completes Four Plays and Has Five Under Way

WITH four plays just completed, William Fox has five more productions in work at the Fox studios in the east and in California. At Hollywood, Tom Mix is entering the third week of "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.

J. Gordon Edwards, directing the superproduction, "The She-Devil," has entered the third week, and William Farnum and his company are in the Grand Canyon, working on "The Rainbow Trail."

In the east Peggy Hyland is still at work on "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a story of Scotland and the great war, written by Hamilton Thompson. Virginia Pearson is nearing the finish of "The Liar."

Plays that are finished include a big production just completed by Richard Stanton in the east; another play in the east and two in the west.

George Walsh has completed "Under the Yankee Flag," described as a "breezy stor of love, adventure and war," and Gladys Brockwell has completed "Kultur." This picture, which reveals German secret intrigues which caused the war, has just been shipped east from the Hollwood studios. The other Fox production just completed is "Lawless Love," which was done by Jewel Carmen under the direction of Robert Thornby. Miss Carmen has just returned from a ten-day trip in the mountains, where the final scenes were taken at Huntington Lake.

Animated to Show Flight of Big Bombing Langley

EDITOR JACK COHEN, of the Universal Animated Weekly, is celebrating a scoop which he scored over his contemporaries when he succeeded in obtaining the only pictures filmed of the Langley's premier flight recently.

The Langley is the largest aeroplane ever made in America, and the initial flight, which took place at Elizabeth, N. J., was surrounded with considerable secrecy. The Universal Animated Weekly, however, was invited to send its representative to film the event, and was the only news weekly accorded this signal honor.

Although it was expected the usual pictures of the trial flight would be made an agreeable surprise was in store for M. M. Flanders, the cameraman who covered this assignment, when he was invited to accompany the Langley into the air. Quick to take advantage of the opportunity, Flanders obtained some remarkable pictures of the manuevres through which America's largest aeroplane was put while being thoroughly tested.

Incidently, this particular Universal cameraman has the distinction of having made more aeroplane flights than any cameraman not in actual service. He has taken motion pictures in these bird machines while they were performing sideslips, loop-the-loops, nose spins, and other exceedingly dangerous acrobatic stunts which every birdman in charge of a battleplane must know.

The flight of the Langley will be shown in one of the forthcoming issues of the Animated Weekly.

"Triumph of Venus" Progressing.

Results from the limited territory in which General Film Company has begun to release "The Triumph of Venus" for exhibition indicates tremendous popularity for the feature, the home office of the company states. Bookings have been particularly heavy in the Cleveland territory and at other points in Ohio.

In New York City the picture is being played steadily at a large number of houses, and the Edwin Bower Hesser mythological story, with Betty Lee featured as Venus, seems to have considerable appeal centered in the unusually clever swimming scenes.

Exchange Manager and Star.

Baby Marie Osborne of Diando, appearing in Pathe productions, and E. D. Tate, manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., Los Angeles.

May Allison at Work on Coast.

May Allison, rounding out her first week at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood after her arrival there from New York, is making excellent progress in Hale Hamilton's "The Return of Mary." The star is being directed by Wilfred Lucas in George D. Baker's screen adaptation of the successful stage play.

As before her arrival Director Lucas already has photographed all the scenes in the picture in which the star does not appear, the production was well advanced when Miss Allison began work.

Darrell Foss, lately of the Triangle forces, is Miss Allison's leading man, and the cast also includes Clarence Burton, Frank Brownlee, Joseph Belmont and Claire McDowell.

LEON SCHLESINGER ON ROAD FOR MANX-MAN COMPANY.

J. L. KEMPNER, the newly appointed sales director of the Manx-Man Company, which is distributing the Hall Caine photoplay through the Goldwyn exchanges, announces that for the purpose of getting in touch with the exhibitors, Leon Schlesinger, general sales representative, will leave New York this week to tour the country.

Mr. Schlesinger will also confer with the managers of the Goldwyn branches in the territories through which he passes and with their press representatives. He is especially interested in talking to the publicity men, as the publicity angle on the "Manx-Man" is a strong one. The impressive publicity fact about the picture is that it cements Anglo-American feeling better than almost any other big picture on the market now and that the British-American clubs and societies that exist in every state will be glad to boost the work of exploitation.

"For instance, in Providence, R. I., we found a British-American society that offered to print its own invitations to the showing, so interested were they in the picture and the chance for publicity for their own work," says Mr. Kempner. "The Providence Journal, one of the leading newspapers of the country, gave the society, the picture and the exhibitors booking it no end of fine publicity."

Mr. Schlesinger will first visit Middle West exhibitors, covering Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin. He will carry with him a condensed film version of the "Manx-Man" and complete plans of the publicity mentioned above. He will frequently call on editors and societies, but because of the amount of territory he wishes to cover, will usually leave that branch of the work to the exhibitors and Goldwyn representatives. However, he will give the publicity campaign in each territory such a start that its final success will be guaranteed—at least, that is his expectation, and further reports from him should prove interesting.

Kansas City Supply Company Busy.

The United States Government is showing at the Garden theater in Kansas City for the third week the celebrated "Fit to Fight" pictures. The two Power's machines for the projection were furnished by the Kansas City Machine and Supply Company, Inc.

A notable event in Kansas City was the opening of the Liberty theater, owned by Harding Brothers, and which, it is reported, cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 to build and equip. The complete booth equipment, consisting of two Power's latest type 6-B machines, with double dissolving stereopticon, and also a Gold Fibre Screen, were furnished by the Kansas City Machine and Supply Company.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" SHOWING IN YORK STATE.

CAREY WILSON, sales manager of the First National Exchange of New York, spent the early part of last week in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica, where he arranged for showings of "Pershing's Crusaders."

Despite the fact that the big war film was given a run of ten days at the Teck Theater in Buffalo during the early part of last month Mr. Wilson closed a contract with Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome in that city, for a special engagement of "Pershing's Crusaders under unique circumstances. The picture will be released in seven weekly installments, and in order to give it adequate publicity Mr. Franklin has erected a large electric sign in front of Shea's Hippodrome, which will be in operation continuously for two months.

In Rochester, "Pershing's Crusaders" will be shown at the Gordon Theater and at the Avon in Utica. It has not yet been definitely decided at what house the picture will play in Syracuse.

Mr. Wilson is enthusiastic regarding the prospects for business in the above mentioned towns, and has been assured of the most thorough possible co-operation on the part of exhibitors.

Busy Days for Alice Brady.

Alice Brady, whose new Select Picture, "The Whirlpool," has just been released, has been putting in a busy week. Saturday night she returned from a three days' "location" trip. Sunday night she sang at the Casino theater in New York City at an entertainment for soldiers and sailors.

Patriotic Marching Song Founded on Perret Picture

Will Bear Same Title as Film, "Lafayette, We Come"—Complimentary Autographed Copies to Be Sent to Exhibitors—Elaborate Musical Score and Setting for Complete Orchestration Also Arranged.

LEONCE PERRET announces that arrangements have been completed for an elaborate musical score and settings for a complete orchestration for "Lafayette, We Come" (Pershing '17). The theme of the score has been written into a patriotic marching song which will bear the same title as the film, and the publishers are negotiating with a well known concert singer to include the song in his repertoire. This is in line with the movement inaugurated by the Lafayette League to perpetuate and immortalize Pershing's inspiring words. It is further contemplated that the song will be sung at the premier performance of Mr. Perret's patriotic film which will be given for the benefit of some war fund.

A large number of copies are now on the press and Mr. Perret will autograph and send them complimentary to exhibitors throughout the country.

Although this patriotic motion picture spectacle has not yet been completed or shown to anyone except Mr. Perret's associates, he has received offers from numerous theater managers, including M. Kashin of the Broadway theater, New York.

This production, which is the first one made by Mr. Perret for his own producing organization, is said to be a timely story of love and mystery, embodying intrigue and war, in which has been ingeniously incorporated powerful propaganda

Mr. Perret's previous productions include "Lest We Forget," "The Million Dollar Dollies," "The Mad Lover," "The Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Silent Master."

Artistic Posters Issued For "Hand of Vengeance"

TO advertise properly its new twenty-reel photo-serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," the Gaumont Company announces the preparation by well-known artists of strikingly artistic lithographs in the form of one, three and six-sheet posters. These posters, with beautifully toned drawings of some of the most dramatic situations in the story, have been prepared to attract the eye of the public to such an extent that it will want to see at least one episode. The story is claimed to be so absorbing, the photography so well done and the action so thrilling that no person who sees one episode will miss seeing the others. The manager of a theater in one of the Rocky Mountain states who ran a former Gaumont serial had to repeat it twice, making three runs of the entire serial, before he could satisfy his patrons.

The artistic posters are not restricted to the first few episodes, as each episode will have its full quota of slides, photographs and beautiful lithographs. The Gaumont Company has issued a special one-sheet on heavy calendered paper, somewhat in the nature of a "hanger," which is a novelty and which should make a hit with the distributors and their salesmen. This one-sheet contains three-color facsimiles of all the posters for the first five episodes, with the synopses of these episodes. A similar sheet in three-color work will show facsimile posters and synopses of the last five episodes. These will not only prove attractive publicity aids for the exhibitors when hung in their offices, but will prove equally attractive to the public when hung in theater lobbies.

World Rights on New Film Secured by M. H. Hoffman

M. H. HOFFMAN is understood to have secured world's rights to a six-reel photoplay which will be handled on the state right market. Mr. Hoffman is at present in Mt. Sinai Hospital, New York, where he is recovering from the effects of a serious operation, and it is announced that a statement regarding his plans will be issued as soon as he is able to leave the hospital.

Mr. Hoffman has also secured from Crest Pictures Corporation the New York City and northern New Jersey rights to "The Grain of Dust," featuring Lillian Walker, which will be distributed under the direction of Hy Gainsborg, who reports one hundred advance bookings of this picture based on David Graham Phillips popular story.

For several months Mr. Hoffman's health has been failing. As announced in a previous issue, it was necessary for him to undergo an operation. However, he has so far recovered that he has obtained special permission from the hospital authorities and is holding conferences and outlining his future activities. It is said that his forthcoming announcements will be of especial interest, particularly to producing managers.

"Patience Sparhawk" Is Now "The Tiger Woman"

PETROVA Picture Company announces that the final editing and titling of Madame Petrova's fifth production has been finished. The picture is a film version of the celebrated novel, "Patience Sparhawk," by Gertrude Atherton, and it will be released as an adaptation under the name of "The Tiger Woman."

The scenario is the work of Mary Murillo, who has been responsible for many successful screen vehicles. The production is the first to be made in the new Petrova studios at 230 West Thirty-eighth street, and marks the second appearance of Ralph Ince as director for Madame Petrova. Director Ince is said to have achieved many remarkable effects in "The Tiger Woman," both as regards tricks of the camera and scenic investiture.

Practically all of the players who will be seen in the leading roles of "The Tiger Woman" are playing with Petrova for the first time. It is announced that this has been done in order to give the cast a touch of freshness and to dispel the set atmosphere which the same players usually carry from picture to picture. The cast includes Vernon Steel, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Norma Seifert, Mathilda Baring, Gene Burnelle, Frederick Treusdell and Tefft Johnson.

Arrow Announces Sales on Variety of Subjects

ACCORDING to Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, the usual activity of State Right buyers attending New York for fall purchase of productions is somewhat anticipated this year as is evidenced by the following sales of productions made by the Arrow Film Corporation during the week ending July 20: "The Grain of Dust" to the Specialty Film Company for Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Mississippi. Kerrigan reissues thirty single reels and ten two reel subjects to Specialty Film Company for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Four five reel Allison-Lockwood reissues to W. H. Film Company for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. "The Hand of Vengeance" Gaumont ten episode serial to the American Film Company for the six New England states. "The Eyes of the World" to the First National Exchange of New Jersey for Northern New Jersey. "To-Day" and "The Mad Lover" to the Four Square Pictures Corporation for Michigan. Four five reel Lockwood-Allison reissues to Harvey B. Day for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. "The Sunset Princess" to C. C. Hite Attractions for Ohio.

"This," said Mr. Shallenberger, "to my mind, is the answer to two questions—first, is there a healty State Right market, and, second, is the independent field of motion pictures in a prosperous condition?

"A glance at the sales recorded will show every variety of productions including one and two reel reissues, five reel reissues, special attractions, serials and a road show attraction and all of these sales were effected in our office without expense excepting the necessary expenditure for trade paper advertising and screenings and the minor disbursement entailed in the issuance of the Arrow Bulletin." Mr. Shallenberger just returned from Boston where he attended the Convention and will announce, shortly, the closing of exclusive contracts for representing producers.

Metro Exchange to Handle "The Warrior" in New York

GENERAL ENTERPRISES, INC., announces that arrangements have been completed whereby the New York Metro Exchange will release "The Warrior," starring Maciste, in New York. The film will open in New York City as a hot weather attraction on the Marcus Loew circuit on July 22, which will mark its first presentation in New York outside of the special engagement at the Criterion theater last season.

Special music has been arranged, and an elaborate series of posters will be used to advertise "The Warrior." This picture deals with the struggle on the Italian-Austrian front, contains many comedy incidents and is said to be exceedingly timely in view of the recent victories of the Italian army.

Gaumont News Reels Show Many Interesting Events

GAUMONT GRAPHIC No. 16 shows one of the most impressive funerals ever held in New York City. The body of Major John Purroy Mitchel, who fell to his death from an airplane in which he was practicing to fight against the Hun, was borne to his grave with the ceremony of a full military funeral, attended by the dignitaries of the nation, who acted as pallbearers, and comrade flyers who dropped flowers from their planes overhead as the cortege passed up Fifth avenue.

This issue also shows the biggest "splash" the West has ever known—the launching in one day in San Francisco of eight destroyers and nine big freight-carrying vessels.

Among the other subjects: Official War Pictures show our boys handling heavy howitzers, and coast artillery somewhere in France; Edward V. Rickenbacker, famous auto racer, who is now an American "Ace"; the seizing of a big New York evening paper, said to be owned by the German government, and many other news events.

Gaumont News No. 17 pictures the annual convention of the B. P. O. Elks at Atlantic City; the enormous wheat crop of 1918; the visit of Dr. Naon, Argentine Ambassador; the presentation by the government to the city of San Francisco of a service flag commemorating the 33,487 sons of liberty of that city who are now fighting in France, and many other scenes showing the activities of our womanhood, etc., etc.

From the nation's capital come pictures of General March, chief of staff, who gives the American war news to the public each week; the testing of a new invention which will cut German wire entanglements like paper, and a "gunless battle," showing how we will be able to fight the Prussian devils with their own weapons—bombs, liquid fire and gas.

Effie Shannon Engaged For New Graphic Film

AMONG the well known players engaged by Director Ivan Abramson for his latest production, "Ashes of Love," which he is now making for Graphic Film Corporation, is Effie Shannon.

Miss Shannon has had a number of years' experience on the speaking stage, having appeared with the late Herbert Kelcey in a great many successes, including the David Belasco production, "Years of Discretion." She has also been seen in motion picture productions, including "Her Boy," for Metro.

Change in Type of Petrova Pictures Proves Popular

"TEMPERED STEEL," the fourth special vehicle starring Madame Olga Petrova, is said to be meeting with success throughout the United States and Canada, and numerous letters are being received by the Petrova Pictures Company stating that the writers consider "Tempered Steel" to be the best vehicle in which the Polish star has appeared.

The reception accorded this film is gratifying to Madame Petrova and her associates, inasmuch as the production marks a radical departure from her customary type of story. In this picture she interprets a character utterly unlike any she has been seen in heretofore—that of a stage-struck Southern society girl. The story is a melodrama and contains a variety of thrills. It was directed by Ralph Ince and written expressly for the Polish actress by George Middleton.

Selznick Secures New York Rights on Brady Film

"Stolen Orders," Featuring Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Montague Love, to Be Handled with Extensive Exploitation Campaign—Tennessee and Alabama Franchise Sold to Special Feature Company.

RIGHTS to William A. Brady's "Stolen Orders" for New York state have been purchased by Lewis J. Selznick, and this production will be handled by Select Pictures Corporation in this territory, in connection with an extensive exploitation campaign which will soon be inaugurated. The sale of rights for the states of Tennessee and Alabama to W. E. Drummond of Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tennessee, is also announced. Mr. Drummond has been very successful with Mr. Brady's previous spectacular production "The Whip" and is said to be enthusiastic regarding "Stolen Orders."

This production, with a star cast, including Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montague Love and June Elvidge, is said to be particularly timely in view of the startling disclosures of the operation of enemy secret agents in this country, and the daily intimations in the press of even more sensational disclosures in connection with systematized propaganda and spy work in existence here. It is a stirring story of diplomatic intrigue and an exposition of the fact that the innocent are not infrequently made the tools of those higher up in the game to sow discord and stir up strife that the Huns may profit.

Simmonds Speaks of "Mickey"

JOSEPH SIMMONDS, president of W. H. Productions Co., in connection with the announcement that this company would distribute "Mickey," says:

"We are now on the brink of a great change in the public sentiment toward motion pictures. From the beginning of the war a gradual dislike of war pictures, bloodshed and destruction and misery became apparent.

"My experience with motion pictures in England the first two years of the war has been helpful to me. I found that the English people demanded interesting and entertaining comedies and comedy-dramas in preference to other types of film. The same conditions prevail in this country now, and comedies and comedy-dramas of good quality are greatly in demand.

"We have taken a step in advance by acquiring the rights from the Western Import Co. of 'Mickey,' which we intend exploiting on the state rights market. We believe that 'Mickey' will become a household name with motion picture fans, and our exploitation campaign will be so thorough and concrete so as to make it possible for any exhibitor not only in this country, but in foreign countries to properly exploit 'Mickey.' A great deal has been said about the merits of this production, and a great deal more will be said, but this is one instance where the picture itself will more than live up to its praise. This is also a psychological time for the release of this feature, because it is a big, clean production possessing every element of human nature, and one of its strongest assets is the fact that it is not a war picture, so that men, women and children in seeing 'Mickey' will be carried away with its beauty and entertaining qualities.

Form New England Company to Handle Griffith Picture

IN connection with statements appearing in one of our earlier issues that New England right to D. W. Edwin Golden has been appointed general manager, and an office opened in the Little Building, Boston, rooms 612 and 614.

Expressmen's Combine Disrupts Shipping

Amalgamation of Forwarding Companies of Seattle Works Havoc with Film Distributing Concerns—Collections Are Made Regularly, But Hitch Is at Railway Stations.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The consolidation of the express companies of Seattle this week is causing the film exchanges a lot of trouble. The regular collection trips are being made, but it seems that no system of handling the films at the railway stations and on the trains has yet been established. One exchange sent a film to Tacoma, an hour's run from Seattle, and did not receive it back again until four days after it was due. The officials of the express company were unable to say where it had been in the meantime. It is hoped that order will be established and some sort of efficient service assured within the next week.

Griffith's Film Draws Big Crowds.

"Hearts of the World," the big Griffith picture, is playing to bigger business this week than any other picture which has appeared in Seattle since the first run of "The Birth of a Nation." It opened at Levy's Orpheum on Saturday, July 6, and on that and the following day thousands were turned away from the doors, while during the week the crowds have not abated. Warren F. Lenon, of Los Angeles, is managing the showing here for Mike Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, which bought the Northwest rights.

Big Producing Company for Seattle.

Frank Montgomery, who has just resigned as director-general of the Titan Film Corporation, of Spokane, will arrive in Seattle next week to investigate the possibilities of a big, first class producing company in this city. Mr. Montgomery is familiar with Seattle and its surroundings, having been formerly connected with Alexander Pantages in this city.

Danz Opens His Third Theater.

John Danz, who opened his new theater, the Star, on South Second avenue this week, holds the record in this city for building and equipping a real motion picture theater. The Star, although a small house seating only 350, is the prettiest and most up-to-date theater south of Yesler Way, and it was opened just 29 days after the closing of the soft drink establishment that previously occupied the location. This makes Mr. Danz's third motion picture theater in Seattle, the two others being the Colonial on Fourth avenue in the upper part of the business district and the High Class in the lower part of the city on South Second. Paul Shulz, who has been managing the last named house, will also have charge of the new one.

Lannon Buys Arbuckle Reissues.

Jack Lannon, president of Greater Features Company, announces that he has bought 24 reissue Arbuckle comedies from the W. H. Productions Company, which gives the Greater Features Company more comedies than any other two exchanges in Seattle, according to Mr. Lannon.

Melvin Winstock Does Patriotic Work.

Melvin G. Winstock, manager of the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions Company, was asked by the Washington State Harvesters' League to distribute through the territory a film entitled "Harness Your Holidays to a Harvest." The single reel picture was furnished to the exhibitor free of charge, except for the express. Mr. Winstock distributed it to 250 houses in 35 days. The work was done by Mr. Winstock free of charge in order to help along the food conservation program. Another feat in patriotic work was accomplished by Mr. Winstock during the recent War Savings Stamp drive. He was appointed to conduct the sale of the stamps in his precinct, where he sold $17,090 worth in one evening.

Seattle Film Men to War.

Al. Rosenberg and Billy Nelson, who enlisted in Base Hospital Unit No. 50, have left this country for France, having spent several months in a training camp in California. Al was formerly secretary of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, of Seattle, and Billy was booker at the Kleine office.

S. P. Peck, well known film man of Seattle, will report for training at Camp Lewis on July 29. Mr. Peck was most recently connected with the Exhibitors' Film Exchange as assistant manager.

Louis Amacher, booker at the World office, will also report at Camp Lewis on July 29. Mr. Amacher has the reputation of being one of the best bookers in the Northwest.

R. T. Stone, formerly shipper at the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office, is at the Non-Commissioned Officers' Training Camp at the University of Washington.

H. B. Dobbs Helps Re-edit "War Brides."

H. B. Dobbs, manager of the Seattle Select office, who was called to Chicago to attend a conference of branch managers and home office executives, was sent to the New York office by Lewis J. Selznick to re-edit "War Brides" for national redistribution. The new edition makes this picture a preachment against Germany and everything German instead of a pacifist propaganda picture as it was before.

Exchange Personals.

Harry Lustig, Western special representative for Metro, and Carl Steare, Seattle branch manager, left for Los Angeles this week, where a conference of Western branch managers is to be held starting July 12.

J. W. Parry, well known in Seattle film circles, who left to go on a wheat ranch in Alberta early last spring, has returned to the film business as booker at the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office. Mr. Parry bought his wheat ranch and left it in charge of his brother-in-law.

A. Butler has installed a motion picture machine at Ashford, Washington, near Mt. Rainier. He will run pictures once a week for the entertainment of the tourists.

Sam Mendelson, who formerly managed the Empire theater, Anacortes, is now operating his own house, the Rose. Jack Kaufman, who operated the Green Lake theater in Seattle last winter and spring, is the new manager of the Empire. Business is booming in Anacortes on account of the shipbuilding going on there, and there seems little doubt but that both houses will do well, especially since it is known in film circles that both managers are live wires.

J. W. Hedges has opened a new theater in Middleton, Idaho. It has seating capacity of 500, and was built at a cost of about $8,500.

The management of the Majestic, Boise, Idaho, has opened a house in Middleton, Idaho.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Idle Hour theater, which has been operating for about five years in this city, and is the only house west of New York to remain open all night, has found it necessary to enlarge its seating capacity. W. D. Scoville, proprietor, has taken a lease on the adjoining rooms on Grand avenue, which will double the capacity, giving the theater room for about 800 patrons. About $15,000 will be spent on remodeling, an entrance being put in on the Grand avenue side, and the 12th street entrance still maintained. A new front of glazed terra-cotta, French windows, and a hanging canopy is to be built and rest rooms furnished up. The policy has been changed to run features on account of the difficulty of securing a split program. "We will have a new house here inside of a month," said G. T. Scoville, manager. "The whole interior is to be redecorated. For the past three years we have kept open all night, averaging about 500 patrons after ten o'clock. This has been so successful that we do not feel inclined to make any changes in that respect." The Idle Hour is known among exchange men as being one of the most successful small theaters in Kansas City.

Want Sunday Opening in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Sunday opening is again being advocated in Philadelphia owing to the great increase in the population, which is due to the vast number of new shipyards now operating in this vicinity. Thousands of men and women are at present engaged in facilitating the output of the many munition factories and other essential industries. Owing to the fact that a large number are required to work at night they are unable to secure any recreation whatever during the week. In order to try and relieve this situation a great many are of the opinion that motion picture theaters should be permitted to operate on Sundays.

Frisch Aids Theater Manager.

M. J. Frisch, manager of the Universal office, was "special delivery boy" on July fourth, when he took "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" to Marshalltown by auto rather than disappoint Manager J. J. Although he arrived after the regular starting time, Mr. Frisch made the trip from Des Moines in record time, and Jones broke all records for the house in the business the picture did.

Ship Workers' Influx Boom for Exhibitors

Arrival of Thousands of Workmen in Orange, Texas, Helps Swell Attendance at Theaters—Three Picture Houses, Each with Seating Capacity of Between 1,200 and 1,500, in Course of Construction.

By Phil E. Fox, c/o Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—There is a moving picture boom on at Orange. In this south Texas town at the present there are three moving picture theaters each with a seating capacity of between 1,200 and 1,500 in the course of construction.

The reason is the new shipyards which are bringing thousands of workmen eager to aid Uncle Sam to the banks of the Sabine River. Moving picture exhibitors at Orange declare that within the past two months the population of their town has increased over 10,000. They claim that the 25,000 mark in population has been surpassed and that business is excellent.

H. R. Ritterman, of the Princess at Orange, is building a new theater. W. T. Minder will open his new Liberty theater at Orange, August 1, with a seating capacity of 1,200. Mr. and Mrs. Minder were in Dallas in mid-July booking First National features. Mrs. Minder is the daughter of J. A. Holton, of Port Arthur, one of the best known Texas exhibitors. The third theater is the big airdome to be opened at once by Haschel Thomas. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were in Dallas last week. Rumor says that it is possible that they may open a new moving picture theater here.

Kelly Gets Up an "Excuse" Letter.

Smiling Jimmy Kelly, of the General, declares that a stereotyped "excuse" letter for exhibitors has long been needed. He sends them return post cards, which saves them the trouble of writing excuses when solicited. It has excited considerable comment and brought in a lot of business. It reads, "My town is small—business is bad, our young men have gone away to the war, and I cannot pay you any big price."

Civic Appeals Board O. K.'s "Shackled."

Mrs. Ethel Boyce, Dallas moving picture censor, put the Indian sign on "Shackled," a Paralta picture, when the Hippodrome theater management tried to show it during the second week in July. Delegation to Convention Smaller.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — The Northwest's delegation to the national moving picture convention left here Friday, July 11, for Boston. This year's delegation was about one-third the size of last year's, and was composed of President William H. Deeth, Vice-President Ralph E. Parker, Secretary Clyde H. Hitchcock, and Dan W. Chamberlain and Thomas Furniss. Mr. Parker and Mr. Furniss are from Duluth, while the other men are all Minneapolitans. The reason for Minnesota's small delegation this year is due to the fact that Boston is about 1,100 miles farther East than Chicago. The Northwest delegation went to Boston with the intention of waging war on the fifteen cents per reel war tax imposed by certain producers. The Northwest delegation will do its utmost to bring about a reconciliation between the National League and the American Exhibitors' Association.

War Picture Plays to High Prices.

Members of the Washington State Press Association and their wives were guests of Manager J. W. Allender to witness this production. Prices run 25, 50 and 75 cents, and $1.50 for matinee performances, and 25, 50 and 75 cents, and $1.50 for night shows. Suggests Employing Girl Ushers.

Spokane, Wash.—Suggestions have been made by the local section of the National Boys' Working Reserve that girl ushers be used in theaters.

"We have taken up the matter of girl ushers in the Clemmer theater with A. D. Brewer, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and find that there are more boys between the ages of 16 and 21 just now than there is work to do," said Dr. Howard S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater. "Our ushers, 10 in number, range from 16 to 21 years of age, and in view of the fact that the conditions of labor in Spokane are such as quoted it would seem unfair to the boys to replace them with girls. We have, however, served notice upon the United States Boys' Working Reserve that we stand ready to make the change upon a week's notice from them, with assurance of employment elsewhere for those now in our employ.

"In case we are called upon through the agency of Government endeavor we will engage for our theater none but red-headed girl ushers, thus forwarding in Spokane the spirit and sentiment which evidently has become a fixture of the institution and its management."

This photograph shows L. J. Schlaifer, president of the L. J. Schaifer Attractions of Seattle, Wash., in the new suit which Uncle Sam bought for him. Mr. Schlaifer joined the marine corps several months ago and has been stationed at the Mare Island training camp in San Francisco Bay.

Picture Business at Low Ebb in California

More Theaters Closing Throughout State Due to Hot Weather—Others Cutting Down Showings Per Week—But Shipbuilding Brings Prosperous Times in San Francisco Bay Region.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The tendency toward closing moving picture houses in California during the summer season and to cut down the number of show days per week in others continues, and fewer theaters are now in operation than has been the case in several years. Business in the interior is generally reported to be quiet, with the exception of a few cities where there is manufacturing activity. In the San Francisco Bay region the shipbuilding and shipping industries are causing prosperous conditions and are attracting many workers, with the result that attendance at moving picture houses is very satisfactory, and with some theaters breaking all former records with an astonishing regularity. Taking the territory as a whole, however, there is no doubt but that business is well below normal.

Madame Petrova was a recent visitor in this city, and appeared in person on the stage of the Tivoli theater on the afternoon and evening of July 10 in the interests of War Savings Stamps. In spite of the fact that the special drive for the sale of these stamps came to an end before her arrival, with this city passing its quota of $10,000,000, stamps to the value of $13,000 were sold at the two appearances of this star. Many noted film folks have appeared here during the past few months in the interest of various Government activities, but none made a more profound impression than Madame Petrova, whose speeches were masterpieces of diction and delivery. From here she left for Portland, Ore., and plans to visit theaters in forty-five cities in forty days.

Tom North Back in California.

One of the most pleasing bits of news that has come to California exhibitors and film men in a long time is the announcement that Tom North has been made manager of the Western division of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., with headquarters at San Francisco. Flynn Serial Not to Be Exported.

Zar and George Mann, division manager for the Fox Film Corporation; Mrs. E. Keller, Miss Ruth Keeler, Miss Olson, Miss Haddock, Mrs. Raymond, and Bert Levy. They were brought back to this city on a navy launch. On the following day D. H. Bergh, personal representative of George Kleine, who has been here for the past two weeks, his sister, Mrs. Chevington, and Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Cohen were guests of Major C. C. Riner, Post Adjutant, Marine Barracks, Mare Island. The recent benefit for the Marine Corps band and the recreation fund held at the Exposition Auditorium, San Francisco, under the management of local film men, netted the handsome sum of $5,100.

Kleine Film Aids Marine Recruiting Drive

"The Unbeliever" Plays Big Part in Buffalo Campaign for New Members—Sergeant Robert C. Graham Gives Lectures Where Picture Is Shown to Good Results.

By Joseph A. McQuire, 152 North Elmwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO.—In connection with the Marine Corps recruiting drive being conducted in Buffalo and vicinity "The Unbeliever," the Kleine picture, is playing a prominent part. Sergeant Robert C. Graham, a member of this famous fighting organization, has delivered many lectures at the theaters where this picture has been shown. A cut of Sergeant Graham appears herewith. That his talks go over with a bang is testified to in a letter which he has received from Manager J. E. Byrne of the Piccadilly theater, Rochester. The letter says in part: "Your daily talks to our audiences have unquestionably been of material aid to us in making 'The Unbeliever' a success in Rochester, and we believe, also that it would be difficult to place a limit on the interest which you have created throughout the city in the United States marine corps.

Sergeant Graham recently had charge of a special section of the Buffalo Express in which the Marine Corps and "The Unbeliever" were featured. The production had a week's run at the Family theater, Buffalo, the week of July 15.

Preceding the showing of the picture at the Family, Buffalo, there was a big recruiting rally held by the Marine Corps at Lafayette square, near that house. Mayor Buck of Buffalo, Council Malone and Sergeant Graham were the speakers. This programme was followed by a flag raising at the Family in charge of a squad of marines. Sergeant Graham lectured at this theater, as well as at the Elmwood, Buffalo, and at the Grand, Bradford, Pa., where the George Kleine picture drew the crowds.

Over his own name Manager Hyman makes this announcement in the program: "Camp Gordon will focus its eyes on the Liberty, for it has made arrangements whereby the coming season will witness a procession of the nation's greatest men and women photoplay stars wending their way Camp Gordonward." The program also prints the names of the members of "the commission on training camp activities." One of the commissioners is Raymond B. Fosdick, formerly of Buffalo. Mr. Hyman also does the booking for other camp theaters, according to Mr. Montgomery. The latter has also heard that another Buffalo boy is also making good in the same business. He is Mat Whitham, former manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, this city. Mat is now manager of the Liberty theater at Camp Wheeler, at Macon, Ga.

Streimer Acquires United Exchange.

Charles H. Streimer, manager of the Modern Features Photoplays, New York City, was a Buffalo visitor. Mr. Streimer has taken over the United exchange at 51 Exchange street, this city, and has opened the offices under the name of the Modern exchange. The manager is G. H. Christoffers, former United manager here.

Lyric Being Redecorated.

The Lyric theater, Buffalo, has closed for the summer. Decorators are making the place spic and span so it will be ready for the opening about Labor Day. Charles Bowe, who says he is opposed to long vacations in wartime, is enjoying his midsummer as assistant manager of the Academy, Buffalo. In the old days Charlie was on the Academy staff. Jules Michael, manager of that theater, has returned from his vacation.

Praises the Moving Picture World.

Mitchell Fitzer, of the Happy Hour, Syracuse, and Ben Fitzer, of the Regent, that city, were Buffalo visitors. Mitchell had his pockets stuffed with cigars for his friends, who congratulated him on the recent birth of a daughter. In his conversation with the representative of The Moving Picture World Ben's enthusiasm consisted of undisguised praise of the Moving Picture World, which, according to his well known circus expression, is "the best film paper on earth."

Many Theaters Will Show First Runs.

DETROIT.—John H. Kunsky will show first-run pictures in his Washington, Adams, Madison, and possibly his Columbia theaters, all of which are downtown. The Majestic will use first-run pictures, booking open and putting on pictures more elaborately than ever before, letting them stay two and three weeks if they will hold up that long; the Broadway-Strand will be a first-run house, as formerly; there is considerable talk of the Regent going to pictures exclusively and using first runs; there is also considerable chance that the Colonial theater, Woodward and Sibley street, will be a first-run theater, showing features a full week.

Affiliated Stockholders Meet.

Stockholders of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation met in Detroit on Tuesday, June 23, to pay in their money, secure their franchises and to discuss the co-operative booking plan. Walter S. Says Public Is Tired of "Sob" Films.

CINCINNATI, O.—According to I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, who has a double view of the film business by reason of his dual work as an exhibitor and as a film man, the public is tired of morbid pictures, whether dealing with death and crime on this side of the water or with the war. He believes, from his observation recently, that the public is feeling the strain and sorrow of the war more and more as time goes on, and notes an increasing demand, therefore, for comedies which will make people forget their troubles. "Nobody wants to see sob stuff," declared Mr. McMahan, "they have troubles enough of their own to cry about. People want to laugh."

Gerard's Picture Going Strong.

Cincinnati.—The film presentation of the Gerard book, "My Four Years in Germany," ran a fourth week at the Grand opera house, beginning with Sunday, July 14, and as attendance kept up steadily the picture's total pull during the long engagement will in all proability break records for a consecutive run, although it may not come within a good many thousand of equalling the total number of people who have seen "The Birth of a Nation" in its several engagements. Figures already compiled, however, make it virtually certain that over 100,000 people saw the picture in Cincinnati, which is quite a few. A number of special exhibitions, such as one at the University of Cincinnati for the benefit of prospective National Army soldiers training there, helped materially in swelling the number who saw the film.

Lyric Puts on a Chaplin Picture.

Cincinnati.—The management of the Lyric theater made a pronounced hit during the week of July 14 with the latest Chaplin release, "Charlie's Wet Nurse," coupled with "Nine-Tenths of the Law" as an added feature. The views of exhibitors who believe that the public prefer comedies to more serious stuff were abundantly verified by the crowds which flocked to see the Chaplin film. The Lyric is also running a pair of singers with success.

Film Folks Hold Outing.

CLEVELAND, O.—Cleveland film folks have passed up vacations this summer owing to the war, and instead are giving a series of picnics. The first was held at Willoughbeach, July 12, and over 100 exhibitors and exchange people attended. The party formed at the Belmont building on Prospect avenue, Cleveland, at one o'clock, and went by auto to the beach, a three-quarter of an hour ride.

At the grounds a ball game was staged. This was between the exhibitors and exchange men, in which the score was so mixed up that it was forgotten. The former claimed they won, 68 to 15, while the exchange men say the game was theirs, 90 to 21.

Later there were races, one for fat men, which was won by Joe Deutsch, although Mark Greenbaum and Harry Charnas both claimed they won. The committee, however, ruled that neither of those gentlemen won, because they ran into the race from the side lines, thereby having a better start. There was a women's race, which was won by Mrs. Pupikofer. Miss Kerr was second, and Anna Gusdanovic, third. Then a luncheon was served, and the evening was devoted to jazz dancing, love scenes on the beach, and other diversions.

Notes of the Affair.

The committee in charge was Emery Downs, E. J. Smith, Walter Luck, S. A. Gerson, and M. A. Malaney.

The Plain Dealer not only had a staff artist and reporter present, but also had its movie camera director and a cameraman. Movies were taken of each event, and were turned over to the committee.

Frank Greenwald was yelling "when do we eat?" all afternoon, and then when supper time came he had disappeared.

Mark Greenbaum and Harry Charnas indulged in a little wrestling match which the camera missed.

Leon D. Netter retired from the ball game very gracefully after the third inning owing to a casualty to his pants.

There were quite a few still muscles among the ball players the following day. Some hadn't played ball for 10 years.

To furnish a little excitement, Gerson and Dave Schuman got into a little argument about nothing in particular.

Huber Buys the Mystic Theater.

Findlay.—W. T. Huber, one of the oldest exhibitors in the state of Ohio, has bought the Mystic theater in Findlay, O., and renamed it the New Royal. Mr. Huber formerly ran the Royal theater there, but this house was closed and remodeled.

Ohio Censors Very Active.

Cleveland.—The Ohio Board of Censors has been rejecting pictures and ordering changes of title with regularity of late.

"Whose Your Father?" one of the latest Fox-Sunshine comedies, was rejected because of the title.

"The Mortgaged Wife," a Universal feature, was held up until the name was changed. It is now known as "The Bargain," and has been passed under that title.

The censors also held up "Berth Control," a Lyons-Moran comedy, because of the name, but they passed it under the title of "Caught in Transit."

Salesmen Change Positions.

Cleveland.—Numerous changes of positions by salesmen of Cleveland have occurred the fore part of July. Nate Fleisher, for some time with the Kleine exchange, has resigned to go with the Universal. C. A. Browne has resigned as manager of the Fox exchange, and is taking a vacation before getting back into the harness again. Joe Diener has sold out his stock in the Sterling Film exchange and assumed the management of the Foursquare exchange. Lou Gieger has resigned from the Masterpiece, and is now with the Success Film Attractions.

Farren Sends Smokes to Boys "Over There"

Rochester Theater Manager Each Week Forwards Packages of Tobacco and Other Comforts to Soldiers Overseas—Secures Names of Khaki-Clad Lads in the Trenches from Patrons.

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main Street East, Rochester, N. Y.

ROCHESTER.—Jack Farren, secretary of the Rochester Theater Company and manager of the Victoria theater, has for long shown a decided and deep-rooted interest in the boys in khaki. He has sent out each week to the men "over there" scores of packages of smokes and other good things. In each package he has enclosed a copy of The Pictureplay News, a local publication. During the past two weeks he has received many letters, and all agree on one thing—the men over in France take great pleasure in reading the stories of the plays and players and the gossip of movieland that is published in The Pictureplay News. So now Jack is handing out coupons to his patrons, requesting them to fill in the name of a soldier boy overseas. To each soldier so listed Jack says he is going to enter a subscription for The Pictureplay News.

Grand Meeting with Success.

The newly reopened Grand theater is meeting with success. Manager Thompson has some progressive ideas and bids fair to bring back to the Grand much of its old-time prosperity.

Take Instruction Films in Rochester.

Moving pictures that are up to the minute have been taken in Rochester almost every day this week. Aeroplanes manned by officers of the Kodak Park School of Aerial Photography have been going aloft, and sailing over the city have taken all kinds of pictures to be used in the instruction of men in the school. During the past week it has been a common thing to see the birdmen flying about, often swooping down quite low in order to get a good shot at some object of particular interest.

Kleine Manager in Town.

Louis Green, manager of the Kleine office in this territory, has been in town this week and reports a splendid outlook for business. He has booked several plays at downtown theaters for early showing. The splendid work of "The Unbeliever" during its first run here has created a big demand for the picture which should redound largely to both the distributing company and the theater men.

Taylor Now with Triangle Company.

"Hub" Taylor, probably one of the best known men in the film game in this territory, former representative of Pathe for years and later in business for himself, is now with the Triangle company in western New York.

Rochester Small Items.

The official "Thriftettes" issued by the Treasury Department will be seen in all local movie houses this week.

Manager Sanford, of the Princess theater, is running off a short film taken in his neighborhood, with the neighbors as actors and actresses.

Mason New Manager at Mutual Exchange.

WASHINGTON.—H. R. Mason, exhibitor and exchangeman of Goldsboro, N. C., is the new manager of the Mutual Film Company's exchange in this city, he having succeeded J. M. Cummings, who formerly held sway.

Mr. Mason is quite well known to the trade in this section. He has been in the game for about eleven years and knows it from both sides of the fence. He opened the second theater to be established in North Carolina and has operated the Acme since that time. In 1907 he became connected with the Consolidated Amusement Company, of Baltimore, and later he took charge of and developed the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of Atlanta, Ga., with an office in Charlotte, N. C. He was general manager until 1912 and during his regime he had charge of a dozen offices in different localities. He was later connected with the Mutual and World film companies in Atlanta, devoting the past two years to the management of his personal interests in Goldsboro.

Film Men With the Colors.

Eugene Zukor, son of Adolph Zukor, is to be seen in the natty uniform of a chief petty officer in the Navy, he having been sent to this city for duty in the explosives bureau.

Henry Randel, who has been traveling through North Carolina as a salesman for the Famous Players Exchange, has donned the uniform of a soldier in Uncle Sam's Army and is now stationed in one of the southern training camps.

Samuel J. Mayer, for many years connected with the film business in this city, has gone into the Signal Corps as an accountant. Mr. Mayer started in the game when it was young and he has served in various capacities with the large companies, having held the position of manager with several of these at different times. His latest connection was with the Pathe Exchange.

Among the Exchangemen.

The resignation of Henry Randel as salesman for the Famous Players-Lasky Company when he left this city to join the colors, and the movement of Owen D. Weems from the company to the Goldwyn exchange, have brought about several changes in the representatives in this territory. It brings back to Washington Fritz B. Wathne, who opened the office of the International Film Service when that was in its glory. After leaving here he was connected with the Triangle in Philadelphia for about a year, but more recently he has been in the automobile business in New York City.

W. A. Busch, who has been traveling in the Virginia territory for about a year, goes to the Maryland and Delaware territory. Mr. Weems formerly handled Maryland. The State of Virginia will be covered by F. L. Greenhalge, who was formerly connected with the Mutual Film Service in this city.

Marcus Loew Visits Washington.

Marcus Loew was among the visitors of the last week, coming here for the purpose of going over the plans of the new house now undergoing construction. According to reports now, it is a safe bet that this theater will be ready for opening October 1, and when it is opened it will be devoted exclusively to the showing of motion pictures. The rumor for some time has been that vaudeville would be the principal attraction, with pictures as fillers. Mr. Loew is understood to have announced to the contrary.

Beattus Off on Vacation.

Lawrence Beattus, manager of Loew's Columbia, is taking a well earned vacation and has gone to his former home in Nashville, Tenn., to visit his family. Because of the unusual conditions now existing in the National Capital he has felt it necessary to cut down his vacation this year to a single week.

"TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER"

Five-Part Vitagraph Picture Offers Alice Joyce an Appealing Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SIMPLE in theme, but filled with the human touch that lays hold of the heartstrings, "To the Highest Bidder," a five-part Vitagraph release arranged from a story by Florence Morse Kingsley and directed by Tom Terriss, receives much of its appeal from the sincere and attractive figure Alice Joyce makes of the heroine, Barbara Preston.

The story of an orphan girl's brave struggle to save her old home and help a young brother, the situation that gives the picture its title, is quite out of the ordinary. Finding that she cannot keep up the payments on the mortgage and being warned that she must raise the money or Stephen Jarvis, the holder of the mortgage will foreclose, Barbara conceives the plan of selling her services for five years. She is noted for her skill as a housekeeper and hopes to realize enough to satisfy Jarvis' claims.

At the auction two men bid steadily against each other. One is an old sweetheart, David Whitcomb, who is just returned from the west. The other is a secret agent acting for Jarvis. Whitcomb puts up his last penny, but his rival outbids him. Jarvis has had but one desire in life, the acquiring of money—until he meets Barbara. At the conclusion of the story the heroine learns that Whitcomb is unworthy of her, and that Jarvis is the unknown master who has the right to her services. Matters are adjusted happily and Barbara becomes the mistress of the Jarvis home.

Tom Terriss has directed "To the Highest Bidder" with the thoroughness found in his previous pictures. Walter McGrail as David Whitcomb, Percy Standing as Stephen Jarvis, Edna Murphy as Jennie, Jules Cowles as Pug Morrison, Mary Carr as Miss Cottle, and Stephen Carr as Jimmy Preston, round out a competent cast.

"THE VAMP"

Paramount Picture Starring Enid Bennett Is Along Familiar But Entertaining Lines.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

BEARING the Thomas H. Ince supervision stamp, the Paramount five-part picture, "The Vamp," has evidently been written for the purpose of fitting Enid Bennett with a congenial role. It fulfils its mission. C. Gardner Sullivan, author of the scenario, has not attempted to experiment with any new material, but the scenes and situations permit the pleasing young star to realize to the fullest extent on her own personality and to show her skill and earnestness as an actress.

The picture does not make the slightest pretense of digging beneath the surface of life, but is always consistent to its class. Intended for entertaining purposes only, it is not morally obliged to take part in the uplift game or to point out the wonderful new forces that are at work in the world today. The very nature of its theme forbids it. Nothing but highbrow preachment would make the screen patron disgusted with the shadow stage. "The Vamp" belongs to the recess hour. No one wants to be instructed every time he enters a moving picture theater.

After the above little preachment of our own, a return to the plain duty of the reviewer is in order. "The Vamp" tells of an unspoiled young girl who marries a youthful minister, and the pair take charge of a community house in a mining town. An interfering uncle, a vicious strike agitator, and a German secret agent, almost succeed in wrecking the happiness of the minister and his wife, but the girl pretends to be a vampire and traps the pair of villains.

A humorous old Irishman, capitally played by John P. Lockney, is one of the best features of the picture. Douglas MacLean, Charles French, Robert McKim, Melbourne MacDowell, complete the well-selected cast. The production was directed by Jerome Storm, and is a thoroughly satisfactory one. Most screen patrons will enjoy "The Vamp."

"THE HOUSE OF HATE"

Concluding Episode of Pathe Serial Winds Up Story in Blaze of "Old Glory."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Hooded Terror comes to the end of his criminal career in "Following Old Glory," the last episode of the Pathe twenty-part serial. He is shot by Harvey Gresham while trying to escape from the Weldon house, and after a lively tussle with Pearl. The end of part first sees Pearl and Harvey married, and the second part shows them on the battlefields of France doing their share to aid the Allies. Harvey enlists as a soldier and his wife becomes an ambulance driver. The American is severely wounded, but Pearl helps to nurse him back to health. Pearl White and Antonio Moreno maintain their interest in the serial to the last and act with their usual zest.

"THE FIRST LAW"

Irene Castle the Star of Five-Part Pathe Picture That Recalls a Serial.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MELODRAMA that sacrifices character study to physical movement and the baffling qualities of the crook story is the only ingredient to be found in "The First Law," a five-part Pathe picture that recalls a serial by its construction and the rapid shifting of its events. Produced by Astra and directed by Lawrence McGill, the story was written by Gilson Willets, and turned into scenario form by Roy Somerville. Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno head the cast.

The plot always aims straight at its mark. It sets out to chain the attention of the spectator and to keep him guessing until the final fadeaway, and succeeds in its purpose. This sort of story will always have a large following. It has been popular in the novel and on the stage, and has its place on the screen. The production, acting, and direction all tend to make the picture acceptable.

The mystery underlying the plot is centered about Norma Webb, the daughter of a retired surgeon who lost his fortune through bad investments. Hugh Godwin, a wealthy young chap, comes to the Webb house to board and falls in love with Norma. She entertains the same affection for Godwin, but will not marry him. It turns out that she is already married to the man who ruined her father. This unwelcome individual turns up one night and acts so ruffianly toward Norma that she is obliged to shoot him. Thinking him dead, the girl is the prey of a blackmailing private detective, and is forced into becoming the wife of Godwin and using his money to help guard her secret. The discovery that the detective is the real murderer permits Norma to live in peace with the man she has learned to love.

Irene Castle is by no means a remarkable actress. She has acquired ease, however, and holds up her end of the performance quite satisfactorily. Antonio Moreno, J. H. Gilmour, Marguerite Snow and Edward J. Connelly are the main props of the cast.

"NEIGHBORS"

Madge Evans and Johnny Hines Featured in World Juvenile Fiction Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BOUND in pasteboard covers, "Neighbors" would be found in Sunday School libraries and the juvenile departments of the public collections of books. The story is by Maravene Thompson, and World Pictures has produced it with clever little Madge Evans and droll Johnny Hines in the cast. Whatever value the picture possesses it owes to the acting by the stars and their support and the direction by Frank Crane.

The series of incidents that are supposed to link the plot together is of a mildly interesting nature, but will prove diverting to the juvenile mind. There are one or two attempts at drama in the story and a love interest between two grown-ups, but the doings of the kiddies always hold the center of the screen. Views of charming New England scenes, stretches of wood and stream, and quiet village life add greatly to the pleasing qualities of "Neighbors."

Clarissa Leigh, a little girl of ten, and her sister, Ruth, the village school teacher, live next door to the Hardings, and Paul Harding loves Ruth. The Hardings are the richest family in town, and Mrs. Harding, having social ambitions, objects to the match. Effie Harding, about Clarissa's age, complicates matters by accusing her little neighbor of stealing a dollar from her, and Clarissa is forced to resort to strategy before she proves her innocence. She also saves Effie from being swept over a dam while adrift in a canoe. Scenes of childish squabbles and merriment fill in the story, which ends with the happiness of the two families over the engagement of Ruth and Paul.

Madge Evans is as natural and unaffected as ever, and Johnny Hines is human and amusing as Paul. Maxine Elliott Hicks, Violet Palmer, J. A. Furey, Mathilde Brundage, Herbert Pattee, Kitty Johnson, Frank Beamish, and Charles Hartley lend effective aid by their impersonations.

"MAID O' THE STORM"

Six-Part Paralta Picture with Bessie Barriscale Has Romantic Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AN EXCELLENT indication of the nature of the six-part Paralta picture, "Maid o' the Storm," is given in the title. It is romantic fiction from start to finish, and was written by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. Bessie Barriscale plays Ariel, a waif of the storm who is found on the seashore by a Scotch fisherman when a baby and who becomes a celebrated dancer in London. The story keeps to its class, its incidents seldom departing from the conventional. It moves along steadily, however, and the heroine's battle to lift herself up to the level of the man she loves will be followed with interest.

Ariel, after her rescue by the fishermen, grows up without any knowledge of the world outside of her narrow surroundings, until a wealthy young man with a taste for flying tumbles on the beach with his machine, and the girl helps to rescue him. She falls in love with him at once, but recognizes the wide social difference between them.

Determined to bridge this obstacle, Ariel runs away to London and finds a refuge with two old musicians. She makes no headway with her plan until they learn that their charge has great natural ability as a dancer. The girl is taken to a manager who offers to pay for her training on certain conditions. Ariel tells him of her ambition and agrees to give herself to him if her hero does not want to marry her after she has been transformed into a cultured woman.

In the meantime Franklin Shirley, the man Ariel loves, becomes engaged to another woman, and the dancer's chances of getting him are very slim. She is about to keep her word to the manager when Shirley's bride-to-be elopes with another man. Orange blossoms for Ariel and Franklin.

The production is generally creditable, although American telephones are used in the London scenes. Bessie Barriscale presents an attractive personality as Ariel and makes the most of all her scenes. George Fisher, Herschel Mayall, Joseph J. Dowling and Howard Hickman are prominent members of an able cast. Raymond B. West directed the picture.

"THE PLUNDERER."

William Farnum Scores Again in Ruggedly Forceful Fox Five Reeler.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE patron of a theater who would not be immensely pleased and entirely satisfied after witnessing William Farnum and his support present "The Plunderer" will mean nothing in the life of an exhibitor. The man or woman who would feel that they had been denied their money's worth in this presentation will be so few that their patronage would make mighty little difference in a year's receipts.

Farnum is fine, manly and wholesome in his creation of the upstanding chap who took his less forceful "pal" into the West to redeem from the earth the fortune hidden in an abandoned mine to which he had fallen heir. The two friends found in nominal possession of the property a man who, under the guise of caretaking, had robbed the veins of precious metal of their riches by thievish stealth.

The man in charge had a lovely daughter, with whom the weaker "pal" fell in love, and it is their "heart interest" that threads the rugged scenes with pleasurable coloring. Not far away there is another mining camp where a self-reliant woman runs the principal saloon and dance hall. This woman, meeting the leading male character, falls in love with him, and it is her rather unexpectedly awakened high ideals that make her eventually close up shop and leave for parts unknown to begin a better life.

With the thieving "plunderer" reformed and made to give back his stolen treasure; with the weaker "pal" holding the girl he loves in fond embrace, the pictures story "fades out" with the character played by Farnum stalking away, footing it up the mountain side, and bent upon finding the woman who had declared that her love for him had made her abandon saloonkeeping to become better in spirit and deed.

"The Plunderer" is one of the "Big Six" William Fox has announced for reissue in 1918. It is in every detail suited to present ideas of picture entertainment and will furnish excellent amusement to those who depend upon the screen for their favorite amusement.

"LESS THAN KIN"

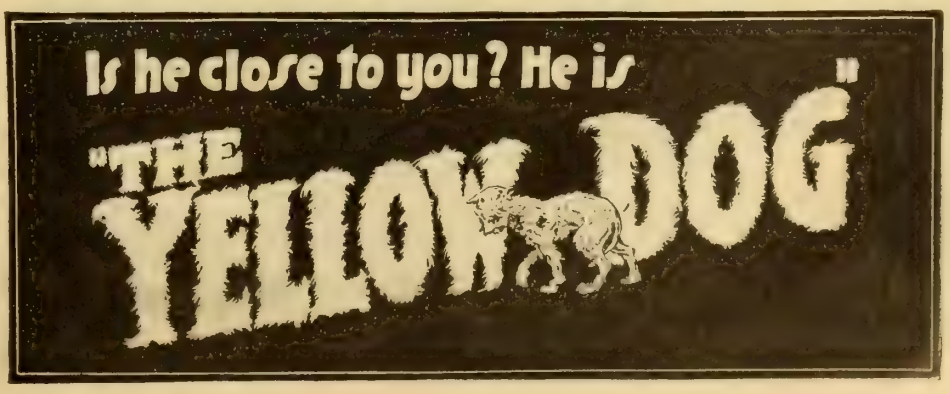
Wallace Reid in Dual Role Makes Paramount Picture Entertaining.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALICE DUER MILLER is the author of "Less Than Kin," a five-part Paramount picture featuring Wallace Reid in a dual role. Marion Fairfax did the scenario and Donald Crisp directed. There is a great amount of incident in the story, but it is not always well balanced. A firmer grip to several of the scenes would improve the impression created by the picture.

Wallace Reid is admirable in both the characters portrayed by him. The main role is a young New Yorker, Lewis Vickers, who accidentally kills a man and goes to Central America. Here he meets Robert Lee, who bears a remarkable resemblance to him. Lee is a worthless young chap whose father is anxious to have him return to the United States. On his death bed Lee turns his papers over to Vickers and begs him to assume his name.

Arriving in New York, Vickers goes to the Lee home as Robert Lee, and discovers that the dead man has willed him a badly blotted past that includes a wife and two children and a large collection of debts. He also finds a beautiful adopted daughter in the Lee household and promptly falls in love with her. The only way he can stand any chance of winning the girl is by telling the truth about himself. The arrival of his undesirable family and several of its friends and connections helps to bring out the truth, and the picture ends with a runaway marriage between Vickers and the adopted daughter.



Ann Little as Nellie Reid is a sufficient excuse for Lewis Vickers' devotion, and Raymond Hatton does a clever character impersonation as James Emmons. Gustav Seyffertitz, Noah Beery, James Neil, Charles Ogle, Jane Wolff, James Cruze and Guy Oliver have the other important roles.

"DANGER, GO SLOW."

Universal Special in Six Parts Features Mae Murray in Pleasing Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE majority of people will like the six-part Universal Special entitled "Danger, Go Slow." It was directed by Robert Leonard, and features Mae Murray with a competent cast, including Jack Mulhall, Lon Chaney, Frank Brownlee, Joseph Girard, and Lydia Knot. A little trimming would have improved the version shown to the press, but in spite of a slight bit of padding it must be admitted that Mae Murray as she appears first in male attire, the youngest member of a gang of crooks, and later as a charming bit of femininity, holds the interest of the onlooker every bit of the way. There is no attempt to explain the presence of the girl in the gang of crooks.

The story opens on a division of swag among a gang of thieves followed by a raid which scatters the bunch and causes the youngest of the lot, a girl in male attire, to seek refuge on a freight train. Finally she arrives at a village where she enters a home of which the mistress turns out to be the mother of one of the gang she has just left, and who is on constant watch for the safe return of her boy. Revealing her sex through the influence of a picture of George Washington which hangs on the wall with the inscription beneath it, "Who Never Told a Lie," she lives with the woman, and in an entertaining way recovers money from the meanest man in the town to pay the interest on a mortgage which he holds over the old home. Upon the release from a prison term of "Jimmy," the long lost son, the girl meets him, rescues him from returning to the gang, and brings him to his mother.

"MISS INNOCENCE."

June Caprice Gives Vivid Impersonation Of Madcap in Fox Picture.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

PICTURE lovers who are satisfied to ignore inconsistencies will find this story sufficient unto the pastime it provides. In the earlier sections of the offering, where scenes reflecting convent life may be accepted as faithful representations, there is much interest, and until the heroine, to tangle the plot, does an utterly inconsistent thing in leaving a perfectly good home for an atmosphere of wantonness the interest holds and the story satisfies.

Dolores May (Miss Caprice) has been left at the door of a convent by a mother who had found the babe's advent into life a nuisance. The mother had cast her lot illegally with the main villain of the piece after aiding in sending her husband to prison on fifteen years' sentence.

The Mother Superior and Sisters at the convent discovered that Dolores May had grown into a wilfully tempered and stubborn dispositioned girl, and the subtitles would have us believe that the inconsistencies in the child's conduct had come as an inheritance from her mother. Until the very late scenes in the play the observer is in doubt as to the father's identity, but this is all cleared up after two hastily assembled murder trials following the shooting of the principal villain and the release from prison of the felon-father.

It would serve no special purpose to find all the faults possible in the construction and execution of the story. The picture has been made and will be released without serious detriment to anyone's peace of mind or without marking any "high spot" in the William Fox screen achievements.

As for June Caprice she may be credited with one of the most vivid and effective examples of screen "temper" ever photographed. The complacent Sisters of Charity must have been relieved to know that all things ended well for the babe they had garnered at their door-step.

Marie Shotwell had a difficult and unsatisfactory office to perform as the inhuman mother to whom repentance came just in time to carry on the weakling plot. Frank Beamish as the villain in the case was outstandingly effective, and other players in Miss Caprice's support proved both adaptable and effective.

Alice Brady Shows Artistic Advancement in Select Picture of Fair Merit.

TWO things in connection with the Select picture, "The Death Dance," will strike the spectator very forcibly—Alice Brady's acting, and her personal appearance. Both seems to have advanced artistically since her last photoplay. It is almost as if a new Alice Brady had arrived, a woman who had looked much deeper into life, and whose knowledge had given her greater self-control and greater powers of expression—a woman whose artistic gain was reflected in her face.

Not that "The Death Dance" is a particularly worthy piece of dramatic writing or that the character of Flora Farnsworth, its heroine, offers unusual opportunity for fine acting. Marie Eve, the author of the story, has written a melodrama of fair merit. The characters are quite ordinary individuals, and the entire plot is twisted to bring about the situation that gives the story its title. The picture has action, however, and sufficient interest to justify the admirable production it received at the hands of the star, Director J. Searle Dawley, and the supporting company.

The unfaithful wife of Arnold Maitland brings about the tragedy at the end of the story. M. Boresky, a dancer to whose company Flora Farnsworth belongs, has an affair with Mrs. Maitland. Her husband discovers this, but keeps silent for the sake of his child. Boresky's wife and dancing partner having died of a broken heart the dancer offers the latter position to Flora.

Arnold Maitland becomes interested in Flora, and asks that she let him send her abroad to study singing. She consents. As she is about to leave Maitland is killed in an automobile accident. His partner, Philip Standish, meets Flora and falls in love with her. Mrs. Maitland has begun to want Standish for herself, and, when she finds Flora in her way, goes to Boresky and suggests that in "The Death Dance," in place of pretending to stab Flora, he really kill her. The dancer is infatuated with his new partner, and attempts to carry out the plan. Standish wards off the blow, and the knife makes a fatal wound in Boresky's breast.

Malloln Hamilton, H. E. Herbert, Helen Montrose, Robert Cain, Rita Spear, Charles Slattery, and Nadia Gary are members of the cast. Paul West constructed the scenario. H. Lyman Broening had charge of the camera.

"BY PROXY."

"Red" Saunders Story Produced by Triangle with Roy Stewart a Winner.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANOTHER of the "Red" Saunders stories by Henry Wallace Phillips has been produced by Triangle, with Roy Stewart as the hero. Directed by Cliff Smith, the picture contains several fine "long shots" on a cattle range, and the humor of the story is brought out to the best advantage. There is real romance in it also, and "Red" finds a wife for himself when he imagines he is only helping out a friend. Anyone acquainted with the entertaining qualities of this series of tale among the cowboys will not need to be urged to see the picture. Roy Stewart's selection for the character that dominates the story could not be improved upon. The good nature, love of fun, and honesty that he puts into "Red" wins him no end of friends.

Matters start at the point where "Red" and his cow-punchers find themselves with a large herd of likely cattle and no purchaser who is willing to pay anything approaching a fair price. While waiting for a reasonable offer to turn up the boys start a poker game. They have no money, so bet their shirts and trousers and other articles of clothing. The Chinee cook wins everything in sight, takes his plunder to town and pawns it.

While this is going on "Red" discovers that Aleck, one of the cow-boys, is in love. Saunders finds out where the lady lives, and offers to go for her, bring her to the camp, and see the couple married all straight and regular. Aleck is delighted. The scheme works beautifully—except that "Red" brings the wrong lady. However, it doesn't take him long to rectify his error by marrying the young woman himself.

Maud Wayne as Lindy, Walter Perry as Aleck, Wilbur Higbee as a cattle buyer, John Lince as "Shorty" Stokes, and Harry Yamamoto as Ah Sing are excellent, the last named being especially clever as the Chinaman. Steve Rounds should not be forgotten. His skill with the camera is responsible for some of the most enjoyable qualities of the picture.

"BREAD."

Mary MacLaren Appears to Advantage In Six-Part Universal Special.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE author of the story, "Bread," on which the Universal six-part production of this name is based, evidently endeavored with considerable realism to reveal the unspeakable methods followed by a certain class of theatrical managers in obtaining the most attractive of girl life for stage productions. The result is that while the picture is no doubt truthful in its portrayal, the subject necessitates the use of scenes not pleasant to look upon. We understand, however, that there will be eliminations made in the recutting of the picture which will be a great improvement. Mary MacLaren is the featured member of the cast, and as such does herself and Universal company credit.

The story tells of a village girl who meets accidentally a stage star (an unsavory type) and her manager, who promise her work if she should ever come to the city. Inheriting a small legacy she takes the first opportunity to leave her native village, and in the course of events falls into the clutches of the unscrupulous manager, from whom she manages to extricate herself without harm. Following this, and after her small fortune is spent, come days of starvation. With her last few pennies she goes out to buy a loaf of bread which is accidentally knocked from her hand on to the running board of an automobile. A day dream of what might have happened to her through the loss of the bread breaks into the story at this point, the memory of which helps her to choose between the right and the wrong path when the crisis comes.

"IMPOSSIBLE SUSAN"

Five-Part American-Mutual, Featuring Margarita Fisher, Has Unconvincing Characterization.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IF one is looking for big dramatic values or faultlessness of construction, "Impossible Susan" will fail to please. On the contrary those looking for a pretty little photoplay narrative with a tinge of comedy and a sprinkling of romance will find what they are after. Margarita Fisher plays rather monotonously the role of a child woman, which is more convincing in character, however, than that of Ted, the younger brother of her wealthy benefactor, which is totally inconvincing.

The story covers a part of two chapters in the life of an orphan girl who at her father's death comes to live with her aunt, housekeeper in the home of a wealthy bachelor. The bachelor, a woman hater, decides to experiment with the girl, dressing her in the latest and most beautiful gowns for the purpose of winning a wager in which he has declared that his younger brother will finally fall in love with and marry a gutter girl. When he has succeeded in causing his brother to give up his trifling acquaintances and the wedding of the pair is about to take place the fickle brother goes to bid his old friends good-bye, and marries an old flame over night. The secret is then divulged that the girl is in love with the older brother, and the story closes on their betrothal.

"SHE LOVED HIM PLENTY."

Paramount-Sennett Farce with Polly Moran, Charles Lynn and Ben Turpin.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

JUST a rollicking farce, so exaggerated in characters and incidents as to be almost formless, yet filled with ingenious devices from that unfailing Sennett font of invention. Sennett seems to be afraid he will not provide enough material and runs over the edge with a rapidity of action that makes it almost impossible to keep the sequence of events. One has barely time to grasp a situation and laugh before it is rushed off to make room for another, and these follow one another in such quick succession that much of the purely humorous, the amusing side of human nature, is entirely lost.

What is needed in these tremendously active Sennett productions is a diminution of speed, so that the audience mind can have brief periods of relaxation. High tension is all right by itself, but combined with a speed of movement beyond that of average comprehension, it may prove a strain on attention and hinder its own purpose. Some of the Sennett farces have enough sensational material to supply twice as much film as is used, but they usually get plenty of laughs, and, in that respect, "She Loved Him Plenty" is no exception. Charles Lynn and Ben Turpin make a great team for acrobatic farce, and Polly Moran can easily travel where either of them dares to go. The farce will win, but this character of release can stand, what most of the five-reelers cannot, a little letting up of speed. They travel too fast.

"FALSE AMBITION."

Alma Rubens Pleasing in Poorly Constructed Triangle Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE author of "False Ambition," E. Magnus Ingleton, has utilized many dramatic situations, but shown little skill in building his plot. This five-part Triangle picture is helped vastly by having Alma Rubens as the star. Gilbert P. Hamilton has directed the acting of the cast with good effect, and selected his locations with an eye to their scenic beauty. Jack McKenzie, the cameraman, doing his share of the work in an artistic manner.

"False Ambition" tells of a self-willed young girl who lives in a small fishing village, but who is determined to gain the good things in life at the expense of others. She makes her sister's sweetheart think that she is in love with him, gets him to give her the money for a trousseau, goes away with the money and forgets to come back. Once in New York she takes the name of Zariska and opens a fortune-telling establishment. Prosperity follows her, and she has many clients. Among them is Peter Van Dixon and his friend, Paul Vincent, both of excellent family.

A great temptation overtakes Zariska. The body of a woman is washed ashore from a wreck. The fortune teller finds out the woman is the sister of a Mrs. Horace Pemberton, who is well known in society. Zariska obtains the jewels belonging to the dead woman and impersonates her. She is successful in deceiving Mrs. Pemberton for a time, but is exposed by the man she cheated back in the fishing village, and loses her chance of marrying Peter Van Dixon. Her better nature being awakened by Paul Vincent the two are made man and wife.

The cast, a long one, comprises Peggy Pearce, Alberta Lee, Edward Peil, Walt Whitman, Iris Ashton, Alice Crawford, Myrtle Rishell, Lillian Langdon, Lee Philips, Ward Caulfield, and Lee Hill.

"THE DEMON"

Edith Storey Appears in Interesting Comedy-Drama of Corsican Hills.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

GOOD entertainment for warm weather is provided in "The Demon," the Metro five-reel feature released July 22. The plot is light, and has been treated in broad opera bouffe style. Edith Storey as an untrained girl of the Corsican Hills with a will of her own is well cast, and again demonstrates her ability and versatility.

Jim Lassells goes to Africa to seek his uncle who is reported lost. He finds no trace of him, but at a slave auction buys a white child, and places her in a school in Corsica. Years later, while motoring through that part of the world with a party, including his fiancee, fate throws the girl in his path. After many amusing vicissitudes in which a donkey, a goat, and a Corsican nobleman who is a refugee in the hills figure prominently, and in which the nobleman tries his hand at being an amateur brigand to kidnap Lassell's fiancee, all ends in approved fashion, with a match between Lassell and the girl who proves to be the daughter of Lassell's lost uncle and the real owner of the fortune, while the Corsican nobleman's title appeases the former fiancee for her loss.

There is considerable humor and excellent character work particularly on the part of Miss Storey. Lewis Cody does well with a congenial role as Lassell, while Fred Malatesta makes a good comic opera brigand. Among the remainder of a large cast, all of whom are pleasing in their respective roles, are Charles Gerard as Lassell's chum, Virginia Chester as the one-time fiancee, Mollie McConnell as Virginia's mother, and Frank Deshon as an impoverished remnant of the nobility.

The production is an adaptation of a novel by C. N. & A. M. Williamson, and has been well directed by George D. Baker. There are many picturesque scenes, including attractive mountain views. The subtitles are clever, although there is an inclination to use too many of them.

"WINNER TAKES ALL"

Bluebird Features Munroe Salisbury in Stirring Story of the West.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Bluebird five-reeler for July 20 features Munroe Salisbury in the role of a sturdy western homesteader with Helen Jerome Eddy and Betty Schade maintaining the feminine interest. The production is a good one, filled with stirring adventure. Its characterization is interesting, and while its story, written by G. W. Ogden, causes us to recall the westerns of a few years back, we are pleased because in this particular case the elements of heroism and villainy have been skillfully directed by Elmer Clifton, and the hero, without appearing in the slightest degree abnormal, is a hero indeed.

The story treats of the daring and chivalrous deeds of a western homesteader named Alan MacDonald, for whose demise a certain professional killer is to be paid the sum of $500 should he succeed in bringing it about. MacDonald being the stoutest hearted and most heroic of the group of settlers in his part of the country, is naturally the center of appeal of the others whose homes are being wantonly destroyed by a greedy and influential ranchman. His love story with a pretty daughter of wealth and his rescue of the daughter of his would-be destroyer when she is kidnapped by the professional murderer, form interesting incidents of the story. The picture contains considerable human interest, and the action is carried rapidly and smoothly enough to hold the interest of the audience.

"HEREDITY."

World-Picture Tells Entertaining Story of Girl Who Inherited Fine Qualities.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE theme of hereditary influence is usually a sordid one, showing the battle of some poor mortal against drink, drugs, or other presumably inherited weakness. In this World Picture, Maravene Thompson has contrived a story in which a girl from the lower west side of New York has fallen heir to the grit and brave spirit of one of her ancestors who once saved the life of his king. The new style of plot based on heredity will prove a welcome one no doubt to multitudes of observers even though, as in this instance, the events are not all entirely convincing.

The opening reels depicting the girlhood of Nedda Trevor are really the best of the story, though the later incidents are not without a strong interest. Madge Evans, who portrays Nedda's early childhood, makes the most of her opportunities. She pictures a typical little street urchin who narrowly misses being killed by the hero's automobile. The hero takes her for a ride after the averted accident opening her eyes to the beauties of another world outside her own tawdry surroundings. These scenes are presented with appealing naturalness.

Barbara Castleton plays Nedda in later years, a beautiful girl still living in her poor surroundings, but dreaming of the life she once glimpsed and of the hero who befriended her. The dramatic incidents in which the drunken stepfather shoots the mother and Nedda is charged with the crime are handled in a very conventional and scarcely convincing way. But the story interest continues, and the hero, of course, appears later to rescue Nedda from the fate which threatens her.

The production was directed by William P. S. Earle. Others in the cast are John Bowers, George MacQuarrie, Jennie Ellison, Anne Warrington, Jack Drumier, and Joe Smiley.

"OUT OF THE NIGHT"

Keeney Adaptation of Sheldon Play Features Catherine Calvert with Herbert Rawlinson.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A SIX-PART adaptation of the play, "Out of the Night," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, made by the Frank Keeney Pictures Corporation, affords Catherine Calvert and Herbert Rawlinson, the featured members of the cast, opportunities of which they made the most. The production was directed by James Kirkwood, with C. M. Unander as art director. The latter has succeeded to an unusual degree in providing interior settings with artistic atmosphere. The opening scenes of the picture include a group representing Christ's rebuke of his apostles on their criticism of the Magdalene and views in the studio of an artist who has chosen a daughter of the night as a model for a picture of the Magdalene.

The dramatic quality of the production is good, it depicts the struggle to rise on the part of a fallen woman without dragging in unwholesome scenes. The retort of the hero that he will take his wife to a land "where they don't ask women what they've been, but what they are" is the keynote of the morale of the picture.

The story covers the career of a young woman who has been driven to the streets by force of circumstances, and is picked up as a model by an artist who has been employed to paint a picture of the Magdalene to be placed in a home for fallen women. It happens that one of the trustees of the home has been instrumental in bringing about the downfall of the model, and in reparation for the harm he has caused her to encounter he takes her to his home as governess for his child. His son, on returning from the West, insists on marrying the girl whom he accidentally met on a previous trip East, and does so in the face of obstacles

"WAIFS"

Five-Reel Pathe-Astra Subject Presents Delightful Story of Light Comedy Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

GLADYS HULETTE and Creighton Hale join forces in "Waifs," a pleasing light comedy which presents a delicate little plot of a fresh, enjoyable sort. The subject was produced by Astra under direction of Albert Parker, and was adapted by Frank Leon Smith from the original by Grace Hartwell Mason.

This is a tale of two old millionaires who are scheming to bring about the marriage of the daughter of one to the other's nephew. The daughter, Marjorie, is very independent, and has a girl's natural desire to choose her own mate. At the beginning of the story the father has her locked up until she promises to marry Elmer, the nephew of his friend.

Marjorie makes her escape and comes to New York, but is quickly shadowed by a detective put on her trail by the father. She goes to a boarding house just being opened up on the advice of a cabby. The landlady is enticed away by the detective, and Elmer is sent to the house in the hopes that a romance will develop. The romance comes, but not with the hapless Elmer. Instead, Marjorie meets a young police reporter named Fitzjames Powers on trail of a thief escaped from Sing Sing.

The plot incidents of this number are presented in good comedy style. The movement rather slows up in the third reel, but the climax is full of action, and the number, as a whole, well justifies its five reels.

J. H. Gilmour appears as the girl's father, and Walter Heirs lends a comedy touch to the role of Elmer.

A CORRECTION.

The first comment published on page 589 of our issue of July 27, was through error incorrectly titled "Her Moment." This should be "The Locked Door."

HER MOMENT.—Produced by Authors Photoplay Company, this seven-reel picture features Anna Luther. It is an interesting, though not altogether pleasant story, which could be shortened with good effect. The production is well handled, the Roumanian peasant scenes being especially good. Dealing with the sex problem, the director has handled the immoral features so as not to give offense. The scene where the girl is flogged, however, is unpleasant, and could be eliminated.

Lafayette League to Push Franco-American Amity

As a result of Leonce Perret's announcement that his latest motion picture will bear for its title "Lafayette, We Come!" Pershing's impressive utterance at the tomb of Lafayette, in Picpus Cemetery, Paris, he has received many letters from historical clubs and societies thanking him for the assistance his production will give in popularizing these words which so briefly yet impressively convey the American idea.

The Lafayette League at 1402 Broadway, New York, has inaugurated a campaign to carry on this work, and has elected Mr. Perret as an honorary member. Mr. Perret has arranged to have a letter mailed to thousands of institutions and establishments throughout the country calling attention to Pershing's words as expressing the growing bond of fraternity between the United States and France and the gratitude for the debt we owe to Lafayette and France, and calling upon them to aid in perpetuating these words, by repeating them to friends; by printing on business cards, stationery, etc., "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing '17).

Mr. Perret announces that already several newspapers are co-operating with this movement by using this line on their editorial pages daily. He further adds "It will stimulate patriotism, it will cause to keep constantly before us our need for sacrifice, our realization of duty, and perhaps bring about a clearer conception of the proper spirit necessary to win the war."

Cast.

Stephanie Trent .....Mabel Normand
Jimmy Raymond .....Herbert Rawlinson
Stephen J. Trent....T. Henderson Murray

There she meets Jimmy Raymond, whose outward appearance resembles that of a mountaineer. Jimmy incurs the enmity of one of the men of the camp, and Stephanie goes to his cabin to warn him of a plot against him. He makes advances to her, and Stephanie, appalled, goes to the window and is about to throw herself out when Jimmy says that he wanted to see how a real girl would act in such a situation, for he is a newspaper writer and will use it in his next story. Stephanie, piqued beyond measure, makes known her identity to the woodsmen, and they rally to her aid. Jimmy is wounded in a fight. She pities him and nurses him back to health. Jimmy learns who she is, but is firm in his resolve to use the situation in his story. He then is sued by Stephanie for using her name. What follows forms a surprising and delightful climax to the picture.

Let the title run in large type and add in six-point at the bottom "or go there with Mabel Normand at the (house and date)." Children and grown-ups will "flash" these cards on their friends and do a surprising amount of circulation for you. During the summer you can get bills in the excursion agencies and railroad offices with "See Mabel Normand at (house and date) and then go Back to the Woods yourself. We have the tickets." If you want a throw-away start it "Settled out of court" in large type and the explanation in a ten-point solid display.

Give it exploitation in newspaper work by featuring the offer of Barbara to work for the highest bidder for five years. Put a portrait of Miss Joyce in the lobby with a sign asking "Who will buy me for five years? For particulars see 'To the Highest Bidder.'" A throw-away might be headed "Buy a Girl for Five Years," and run on to explain the offer in smaller type.

"NEWMAN" Brass Frames and Rails

DO YOU KNOW
that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS"?

WHY?
Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."
Insist on that name and save money.
You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.
We manufacture the frames in various finishes which do not require polishing.

Black Fagen, the dishonest post trader, has dealings with Horace, who goes by the name of McLoughlin, and when he is killed by an Indian in a fight with Jean over furs his assistant persuades Horace to take over the post and avenge Fagan's death. Eleanor, his wife, goes as his sister at the instance of Santel, who had knowledge of Horace's embezzlements from the company. Jean meets and falls in love with her. He does not, however, recognize his brother; but the mother, dying, does recognize him, and the discovery of her illness brought about in part by his own acts, moves Horace to plan to kill himself and leave the girl to his brother. Just as everything is about to be satisfactorily arranged between them the father of the children schemes with two crooks to kidnap the children so as to secure the money which Uncle Henry has put up for their safe return by a certain date. Then use these letters for a lobby display (with the names omitted), and add that it cost Henry Burgess $1,000 to borrow his pair of cupids, and that the story will be shown on a certain date. The one stunt will give a double display. If you can arrange for the rental of a couple of children for the days of showing display them in the lobby in care of their parents with, "We're supporting Francis X. Bushman in 'A Pair of Cupids.' Come on in and see us—right now."

It developes that Regelman is a crook, who steals the ideas of others. Jason later meets his sweetheart, Rose, who left her country home to go in search of her lover, not having heard from him. Advertising Angles: Play up the fact that this is a Saturday Evening Post story, dealing with the adventures of a small-town boy in a big city. Try some sensational advertising on the lines of "Don't let them steal your big idea. See how the swindlers work in 'The Golden Fleece.'" This will work particularly well in the smaller communities. For window work get wax dictaphone records and explain on cards that the cylinder contains an idea worth thousands of dollars and that it was stolen over the dictagraph in "The Golden Fleece." You might work up a special display with the dictaphone agency if there is one in town.

Then Dorothy to her great dismay learns that her husband is a wealthy man and that he has no intention of leaving her. She escapes from him, but is caught and taken to an island, where Don leaves her that she may come to her senses. Pierre's mother is a beggar and her other son is a good-for-nothing. The mother forces Louise to beg. Pierre and his brother quarrel over Louise and Pierre kills his brother. Meanwhile the Chevalier de Vaudray rescues Henriette from the Marquis and wants to marry her, but his parents object. His mother has had a child by a previous husband. Henriette tells the mother that Louise is not her sister, and the mother soon learns that Louise is her own daughter. The mother reaches Louise just after Pierre had killed his brother. The Chevalier's mother then gives her consent to the marriage of Henriette. Louise's sight is restored and Pierre reaps his reward.

Advertising Angles: "The Two Orphans" is too well known to need much special stress. Use plenty of paper to make its coming known and in the newspaper work dwell upon favor in which the play is held and Miss Bara's performance of the leading role. Also emphasize the fact that this issue is an improvement even upon the initial Fox production of the play.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Later Chase learns that Jarvis and a man by the name of Porter are sending munitions into Mexico. Chase informs the authorities, and two of the conspirators' henchmen are killed. Porter confesses that Jarvis engineered the scheme, and Chase plans to expose the novelist in his paper, but a change of heart overcomes the publisher when he sees a photograph of Dot riding a hobby-

If you can dig up a picture of a child on a hobby-horse use it for window work, explaining that this picture saved the child's father from a shameful exposure and won her his love.

He learns that Lee's past has been most reprehensible, and he is shunned by all. A woman with several children claims him as her husband. The scheme does not work very well at first. However, Marshall himself falls in love with Susan, as has also his friend, Delafaire, and finally Ted succumbs to her charms; but in the end Marshall wins out.

Feature Margarita Fisher as Susan Gaskell and Jack Mower as Bernard Marshall.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Simplicity of Youth and Beauty Win Happiness in Spite of Schemings of Experienced Flirt.
Gowns of Splendor and Elegance Will Interest the Fair Sex.
Beautifully Costumed and Scenically Equipped Society Drama.
Surprising Outcome of An Experiment in Love Making.
Pretty Girl Gambles for Big Stakes in Game of Love and Wins.

Advertising Angles: A portion of this story hinges upon the dressing up of Susan, so try to interest a leading clothes shop in a window display of handsome dresses, with a sign "Clothes do make the woman, if not the man. See 'Impossible Susan' at the (house and date) if you do not believe this and you'll be convinced." Work along the same lines in the papers. You may even be able to surround your space with store advertisements of suit sales, all mentioning the play, as an argument in favor of clothes. In the press work play up that feature of the story in which the elder Marshall falls in love with the girl with whom he expected to coax his son away from an adventuress.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six sheets. Banner unmounted. One, two and three column cuts and mats. Program cover cut. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet.

Returning to America they meet Hemingway's son, and Jill confesses her past life to Adams. Splendid Photo-Drama of High Moral Purpose Teaches Great Lesson.
The Story of a Rich Girl Who Succumbed to Great Temptation.

Advertising Angles: Play up the fact that this story created a sensation when it appeared in magazine form. Gouveneur Morris is so well known to the magazine-reading public that it would be well to get news stores and even stands to announce that a story by this author is filmed in your theater on a certain date. Hook up with the serials by him running in the current magazines. In your newspaper work present the problem that confronted Jill and ask what the reader thinks she should have done. Work this either on her acceptance of the situation or on the wisdom or unwisdom of her confession.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Well Bought Is Half Sold

"LET OUR DISTRIBUTOR INTRODUCE THE Simplex TWINS TO YOU"

Many a business man has said that his profits were made by buying right.

That's reasonable; for if you buy what the public doesn't want to buy of you, you're stuck, that's all.

Now, there's a man who can sell you the kind of projection the public wants.

If you don't know him, ask us, and we'll tell you who and where he is.

He will introduce the Simplex Twins to you.

He will prove to your satisfaction that they do perfect work and keep on doing so, at ridiculously low wages.

Simplex Projection is easy to buy and easy to sell: Two Points That Tell

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

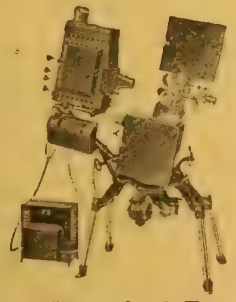
CONSERVATION

Last week we told you how U. T. E. always discriminates in the selection of apparatus and material it offers for sale, and we also told you that the general consequence which follows the careful selection of material is CONSERVATION.

We herewith call your attention to our GARDINER VELVET GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, which is the most modern and efficient surface upon which to project motion pictures or stereopticon slides. This screen has a brilliant and still soft surface; therefore, it has been named "VELVET."

Do you know, Mr. Exhibitor, that our "Velvet" Screen surface will improve the brilliancy of your picture anywhere from 25% to 100%, depending upon your present screen?



It is evident that, if you can improve the brilliancy and definition of your picture under present conditions by installing our GARDINER VELVET GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, you can produce a picture with present brilliancy and definition with LESS LIGHT.

Now, if you install one of our VELVET Gold Fibre Screens, you will put yourself in a position to meet the Government's request of CONSERVATION, because you may, by reducing the illumination required, save electric current, which will reduce your bill and, at the same time, SAVE FUEL.

It follows that, if you do put in our VELVET GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, you will save money for yourself, give a BETTER PICTURE to your audience and you will have performed a patriotic duty by CONSERVING FUEL.

We have Gardiner VELVET Gold Fibre Screens in stock and can ship immediately from any of our branches.
